MESSRS. JAY beg to invite special attention to the DEEP MOURNING Department of their Establishment, combining the most elegant and Family Mourning, either made-up and ready for wear or materials cut from the piece, at the most moderate prices.

Silks, Crapes, &c., of the very best, most serviceable, and enduring qualities.

THE LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE, 247, 248, 249, Regent-street.

By Appointment to the Queen, her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales, and the Royal Family.

MOURNING.—MESSRS. JAY would respectfully remind families that in consequence of purchasing Mourning at their establishment, the Stock of Family Mourning is always kept complete, and that the habitual wearers of any description of Mourning can rely upon the same articles of quality—as a tradesman's custom. The most reasonable prices are charged and the same attention paid to the country orders.

THE LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE, REGENT-STREET, CORNER OF JERMYN-STREET.

THE "NECKLACE" DRESS.

Printed in England, France, Germany, and Belgium.

MESSRS. JAY beg to assure their Customers and the public that this most novel and convenient Dress can be had only at their establishment, where it was first introduced. It is made in Black Grounds, with Coloured Borders. The Necklace is designed for covering neat only. It can be made of silk, or any other material.—Messrs. Jay's experience encourages many requests, and by a reversal of the bayonet, a dress is perfected for any occasion in the Necklace style.

It is incomparably superior to every other description of Cod Liver Oil.

SOLE MEDICAL OPINIONS.

From Dr. Gueneau de Mussy,

Medical Officer of Health to the City of Lisbon.

"It is I believe the purest and most active Cod Liver Oil. Dr. Jongh's light-brown Cod Liver Oil has all the therapeutic properties of pale oil. From my investigations, I have no doubt as to its being a pure and unadulterated article."

From Dr. Lionel Beale,

Physician to H.R.H. the Duke of Sussex-Gulstonian Lecturer.

"I have not generally the slightest objection to the Cod Liver Oil in preference to any other, feeling assured that I am recommending a genuine article, and one which will produce the effect for which the offering of this invaluable medicine is designed."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold only in capsuled Imperial half-pints, 2s. 6d.; pints, 4s. 9d.; quarts, 9s.; labelled with his stamp and signature, WITHOUT WHICH NONE CAN POSSIBLY BE GENUINE, by respectable Chemists and Druggists.

CHAPPELL'S FOREIGN PIANINO (the only Pianino to which the Prize Medal was awarded).—A very elegant Pianoforte, of small size, the full compass, check action, and most perfect touch, admirably adapted to Small Rooms, Yachts, Boudoirs, &c. Warranted to keep in tune and to be the best and cheapest Pianoforte, with check action and all the latest improvements.
Price, in mahogany, rosewood, or walnut, 25 and 26 guineas. A great variety may be seen at Chappell and Co.'s, 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ENGLISH MODEL COTTAGE PIANOFORTES.—To amateurs preferring the pure English tone of the Broadwood or Collard quality, the English Model will be found the most perfectly satisfactory instrument, at a moderate price. The action is of the same simple description as the above makers', and therefore especially adapted to the country, where the more complicated actions are objectionable to many of the tuners. In elegant rosewood case, with full fret, similar in every respect to other instruments at 50 guineas, price 35 guineas; in walnut, 40 guineas.
Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

BROADWOOD, COLLARD, and ERARD. The best Pianofortes of every description, including all the newest kinds by those celebrated makers, may be tried side by side (and hired with option of purchase) at the new Show-rooms of
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL'S TWENTY-GUINEA PIANOFORTE, in solid mahogany or plain walnut, the best English manufacture, with perfect check action, the full compass, and all the latest improvements. Messrs. Chappell strongly recommend this instrument as superior to any other pianoforte at or about the same price, whether new or secondhand.
50, New Bond-street.

ALEXANDRE'S DRAWING-ROOM MODEL HARMONIUM, the best that can be made, price 60 guineas; other varieties at 25 and 35 guineas. Illustrated Catalogues and Pianofortes and Harmoniums upon application to
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

SIX-GUINEA HARMONIUM, by ALEXANDRE, with five octaves, two footboards, and in oak case. These instruments are lower in price and superior to all other cheap Harmoniums. Descriptive lists on application to
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

SECONDHAND HARMONIUMS, by ALEXANDRE, nearly (if not quite) as good as new, at greatly-reduced prices, at CHAPPELL'S, 50, New Bond-street.

PIANOFORTES FOR HIRE, at BOOSEY and CO.'S, 24, Holles-street.

BOOSEY and CO.'S SIX-GUINEA HARMONIUM (The Cottage) has a soft and agreeable tone, suitable for a small room.—Boosey and Co., Holles-street.

BOOSEY and CO.'S TEN-GUINEA HARMONIUM (The School) has a rich, full tone, suitable for class-singing or a school-room.
Boosey and Co., Holles-street.

BOOSEY and CO.'S HARMONIUMS at 20, 25, 30, and 40 guineas, are voiced either with a moderated tone for the chamber, or with great power for places of worship. Catalogues of all Harmoniums upon application.
Boosey and Co., Holles-street.

BOOSEY and CO.'S MINIATURE PIANO, price 17 guineas, in a walnut case, full compass. This instrument is confidently recommended as the best cheap piano before the public. The touch and tone are alike excellent, and the workmanship is of the best description.
Boosey and Co., Holles-street.

BOOSEY and CO.'S 25-GUINEA PIANO has the Check Action, and is in a highly-finished elegant walnut case, with every modern improvement. The touch is elastic, and the tone of that rich pure quality that especially distinguishes first-class English pianos.
Boosey and Co., Holles-street.

BOOSEY and CO.'S 35-GUINEA PIANO is a model Cottage English Piano, and no better can be desired. It is in a richly ornamented case, has the registered keyboard, as well as the new grand compass of seven octaves.
Boosey and Co., Holles-street.

CASE'S ENGLISH CONCERTINAS, which still maintain their unrivalled reputation, possess a rapid speech, good quality of tone, and remain longer in tune than other Concertinas. Prices, 4 to 12 guineas.—BOOSEY and CO., Holles-st.

MUSICAL BOXES.—BOOSEY and CO. beg to announce the arrival of a large supply of MUSICAL BOXES from the celebrated Nicole, of Geneva, made expressly to their order, and containing all the newest and most popular music of the day, including selections from "Faust," "Mirella," &c. Lists upon application.—24, Holles-street, W.

PRATTEN'S SEVEN-GUINEA PERFECTED CYLINDER FLUTE, old system of fingering. This instrument, the result of many years' experiments, possesses all the advantages of the cylinder flute on Boehm's and other principles, without changing the familiar fingering of the old eight-keyed flute; in addition to which, through Mr. Pratten's ingenious improvements in its construction, the manufacturers are enabled to produce this instrument at one third of the expense of any cylinder flute hitherto sold. An illustrated Prospectus may be had on application to the manufacturers,
BOOSEY and CO., 24, Holles-street, W.

PIANOFORTES.—OETZMANN and PLUMB'S New Pianette is acknowledged the best and cheapest in Europe, about two thirds the price of the much-advertised French pianos. Can be had for twelve months on trial. One in the window marked with price; plain woods cheaper.
Patentees, 151, Regent-street. The only address.

PIANOFORTES.—OETZMANN and PLUMB let on hire for three years, after which the instrument will become the hirer's, their new Pianettes, in walnut, £2 5s. per quarter; their elegant drawing-room Pianoforte, 7 octaves, £3 3s. per quarter, registered keyboard; more expensive instruments equally moderate. These Pianofortes will be found to excel anything yet offered to the public. They can be obtained upon the same terms of all the respectable Musicsellers in the United Kingdom.—151, Regent-street.

HARMONIUMS.—OETZMANN and PLUMB have all descriptions of Alexandre's, being the best acknowledged harmonium manufacturer in the world. 5 oct., in oak case, hire at 6s. per month; and a very nice 4 oct., suitable for schools, £4 purchase. 5, 7, 9, 11, 16 stops can be had either on hire for a number of years or purchase at moderate prices.—151, Regent-street. The only address.

OETZMANN and PLUMB undertake any repairs to Pianofortes and Harmoniums, which are executed by skilful workmen. Estimates given—moderate charges.
151, Regent-street.

FLUTE-HARMONIUMS for NEW-YEAR'S GIFTS, with four beautiful stops, in rosewood cases, 6½ guineas.
OETZMANN and PLUMB, 151, Regent-street.

LARGE SALE of SECONDHAND PIANOFORTES from £12 upwards. Seldom such an opportunity occurs for purchasing a good, warranted Pianoforte at a small price.—OETZMANN and PLUMB, 151, Regent-street. The only address.

ENGLISH CONCERTINAS, by LACHENAL, Full Compass, with all the latest Improvements, warranted for hot climates, and to keep well in tune, from Two guineas, with case, lock and key, &c.
HOPWOOD and CREW, 42, New Bond-street.

THE NEW LORD MAYOR OF DUBLIN.

THE Right Honourable John Barrington, Lord Mayor of Dublin, whose Portrait we have engraved this week, is one of the respectable firm of John Barrington and Sons, extensive soap manufacturers and tallow merchants, in Dublin. He was born in 1824, and is a grandson of Mrs. Laetitia Baxter, an accomplished woman, who was the early friend and correspondent of Edmund Burke, and whose letters, with a brief memoir, were lately published in an entertaining volume. Mr. Barrington is a member of the Society of Friends, and the first of that body who has held the position of Lord Mayor. He has been two years only a member of the Dublin Corporation, but has already distinguished himself by his talents for public business, his impartiality, and suavity of manner. On Thursday week the new Lord Mayor gave a banquet to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in the King's Room at the Mansion House, where 600 gentlemen were assembled to enjoy the civic hospitality. In proposing the health of his Excellency, the Lord Mayor said he trusted there was no chance of the Government abolishing the office of Lord Lieutenant; for he believed that the existence of the Viceregal Court, around which the aristocracy and gentry of the country could assemble, was of great value, and it was also of great importance to have a man of ability and judgment directing the governmental business of the country in Dublin. He deplored the absenteeism of Irish landlords, as doing a vast amount injury to the country. In replying to these observations, the Lord Lieutenant said that there were many signs of progress and improvement in the state of Ireland, though great poverty existed in some districts. After speaking of emigration, which he regarded as a blessing rather than an evil, and simply obedience to an economical law, which operates in the agricultural districts of England as well as in Ireland, leading men to take their labour to the best market, Lord Wolchouse proceeded to refer to manufactures, the linen trade in Ulster, and the woollen trade, in the prosperity of which, he said, all Englishmen would rejoice. He then adverted to another sort of manufacture, in regard to which Dublin can certainly boast of one prosperous establishment—namely, the celebrated manufacture of Guinness's Dublin porter. He mentioned the name of Mr. Benjamin Guinness and the example of munificence shown by that gentleman in the restoration of St. Patrick's Cathedral at his own expense. In conclusion, the Lord Lieutenant referred to the international exhibition to be held in Dublin this year.

THE RIGHT HON. JOHN BARRINGTON, LORD MAYOR OF DUBLIN.

WRECK OF THE AFRICAN MAIL-STEAMER ARMENIAN.

THE Royal mail-steamer Armenian, which sailed from Liverpool with the monthly mails for the West Coast of Africa on the morning of Tuesday week, struck upon Arklow bank, on the coast of Wicklow, at midnight of the same day, and soon became a total wreck. The following account of the disaster is given by Mr. Henry J. Waring, of Plymouth, one of the passengers, who has also favoured us with the sketch we have engraved:—

"The vessel left the Bell Buoy, at Liverpool, at 10.30 on the morning of the 24th; weather thick and foggy. In the course of the afternoon the captain twice stopped her to get soundings. At midnight the ship, going under full steam and canvas, ran on the Arklow bank. About an hour afterwards she took fire in the deckhouse, which, after some time, was extinguished by the heavy seas breaking over her. About two o'clock the starboard quarterboat was lowered; the two men who were in her unhooked the davits, took her away, and refused to return to the ship. The starboard life-boat was then lowered, and the ladies, thirteen in number, with six children, were with great difficulty placed in her, in charge of the chief officer and some five or six men, and sent from the ship. The port life-boat was stove in lowering, and became completely useless. Both port quarterboats were then lowered and got away from the ship full of people and in safety. It was then about 4.30. The foremast fell with a heavy crash, carrying the maintopmast with it. In its fall a wire rope got round the neck of a naval officer, a passenger, whose name is not known, and instantly severed his head from his body. A passenger, said to be Mr. Horne, who was clinging to the main boom with a blanket round him, was washed therefrom, as also another gentleman from the break of the poop. The ship then parted in two before the funnel, and at once settled down, the sea driving the rest of the passengers to the main and mizen rigging, six to the former and twenty-five to the latter. She was by this time thoroughly immersed, nothing remaining above the water but the two masts and the funnel. Previous to this two of the stewards were washed overboard—the chief and the third steward, the people remaining in the rigging until rescued by the Montague steamer, which came to their assistance, with the life-boat and quarter-boat of the Armenian, which she had picked up with their occupants—namely, the ladies, children, and others. The sea was breaking so heavily over the wreck at this time that the boats could not approach her, but lay off some fifteen yards, keeping up a communication by lines and life-buoys, by which means these unfortunate people were taken from the rigging one by one and drawn through the surf to the life-boat. While this was going on, one of the quarter-boats of the Armenian, manned by four brave fellows from the light-ship, who had volunteered to go to the rescue of those in the rigging of the wreck, while approaching it, was drawn under the breakers and perished. The people taken on board of the Montague were most hospitably treated. Too much praise cannot be given to Captain Clarke, the commander of that steamer, who so nobly came to the rescue and landed them at Wexford at eight o'clock in the evening. It is believed that if this timely aid had not arrived the unfortunate people could not have held on to the rigging another hour, many of them being barefooted and lightly clad. Up to the time of the Montague leaving the wreck neither coastguard nor life-boat was seen to approach, and even if they did approach it must have been long after the people had been taken off. The great wonder is why the coastguard and life-boat people had not observed the wreck during the many hours of daylight that intervened prior to the Montague taking off the passengers. The land and a train running along the shore were distinctly seen by the sufferers in the rigging."

Mr. Waring adds, in his letter accompanying the sketch, that when the foremast fell it carried with it the mainmast, and bent down the mizenmast, as shown in our Illustration. In this view nothing of the hull is to be seen, the ship having settled down several feet under water, while the sea made a complete breach over all, and ran far up the masts and rigging. The passengers, amongst whom was Mr. Waring himself, were still clinging to the main and mizen rigging; and they are so represented in our Illustration.

The Armenian belonged to the African Steam-ship Company. She was built some ten years ago, being an iron screw-steamer, of 763 tons registered burden, and with engines of 300-horse power. She was under the command of Captain Thomas Leamon. Her ship's company numbered about forty. She carried twenty-eight first-class, two second-class, and eight deck passengers, the last being sailors. All the crew and steerage passengers were saved. So far as can at present be ascertained, the sufferers were Mr. Horne, passenger; a naval warrant officer, name unknown; Mr. Smith, chief steward; Mr. Watts, third steward. Four of the crew of the light-ship boat, in their exertions to render assistance to the passengers and crew of the Armenian, were also drowned, making a total of eight lives lost.

THE BRITISH-AMERICAN CONFEDERATION.

It is as nearly as possible a century since the British colonies in America were electing delegates to a convention which was to assemble in New York for the purpose of concerting a united resistance to Mr. Grenville's Stamp Act of 1765. The convention recently held at Quebec by the representatives of the remaining British colonies in America on this side of the Rocky Mountains, was actuated by a very different spirit from that of 1765. The one was pregnant with distrust and a dogged spirit of self-assertion; the other has been profuse in compliments to the Empire, its influence and its institutions.

This happy change of disposition, which augurs a lasting friendship between the British Americans and the people of the British Isles (a friendship more valuable to both than any merely political tie) has been wrought by a corresponding beneficent change in the colonial policy of the British Government and the sentiments of the British nation on which that policy was based. A century ago, the prevailing theory was that the colonies were communities called into existence for the sake of furnishing establishments for the servants of the Crown employed in the administration of the several colonies, and monopolies to our manufacturing, commercial, and shipping interests. It was in vain that Adam Smith ridiculed this system of government, and showed that it was prejudicial, not only to the colonists, but to the parent State. His cogent demonstrations broke against the purblind egotism of the nation and the rooted traditions of the Government.

One of those traditions was to hold fast to the rule of divide et impera—to look with suspicion on all combinations between the colonies for political or commercial objects; and, in accordance with this policy, the Imperial Government vetoed the plan of confederation agreed upon by the convention of the colonies which was held at Albany in 1753, although the principal motive for that proposal was not a desire to guard against the encroachments of the Crown, but against the hostility of the French.

The Imperial Government and the nation itself have had their experiences since 1753; they both see things from a higher level than of yore; the idea of equality between nations has advanced as that of the dominancy of one nation over another has declined; we have become less grasping, less arrogant towards our colonists, and we are repaid by confidence and affection where before reigned distrust and smouldering disaffection.

It is especially important to the emigrating classes of Englishmen that there should be one portion of the American continent where, in a congenial climate, they can find themselves at home. Highly favourable to Continental Europeans and to Irishmen, fair to Scotchmen and to British-Americans, American society has, by the force of opinion alone, discouraged and even repelled the English settler. The English have been "the least favoured nation" at the bar of American popular opinion, though it is but just to add that this result has been due more to the retributive jealousy of the numerous and well-organised Irish element of the population than to the old Anglo-American section, which is frequently partial and seldom bitterly opposed to the Englishman in the States.

The British-American colonies have, on the other hand, given to the Englishman all that he ought to desire—"a fair field and no favour." The influx of Englishmen into Canada West, both from England and the United States, has been large and influential. We may justly flatter ourselves that the comparatively cool and regular movement of British American political and social life is, in part at least, a consequence of the direct influence thereupon of English national characteristics.

It is precisely because we are sincerely solicitous for the abiding welfare of the projected Confederation that we cannot join some of our contemporaries in flaunting before the eyes of British Americans the dazzling, but, in our opinion, improbable, prospect of their one day becoming "the leading Power of the American continent." It is a dream flattering to British vanity, and countenanced at the present moment by some American malcontents. The British Americans will do well not to import from this island the high-flying Imperial ambition which once swayed Britons so powerfully, but which is now somewhat out of date and fashion. "The leading Power on the American continent," whoever it may be, will have the leading debt in the American continent, will be the most prone to wars of empire, to wars for a fanciful balance of power, or more probably for a real but selfish preponderance. Such distinctions as these may be accepted as the gratuitous gifts of destiny, but are not worth heavy sacrifices for their attainment.

Still more important to the Confederation than its relations to Great Britain and France (for we must not forget that Canada has a hold upon the French heart also) are its relations to its powerful and excitable neighbour. It is the instinct of danger in this direction which has so rapidly brought to a head the idea of a British-American Confederation. President Lincoln has given notice to the British Government to terminate that stipulation of the treaty of Ghent, which, in substance forbade the maintenance of a naval force on Lakes Ontario and Erie. Congress has instructed, or is on the eve of instructing, the President to give the requisite year's notice of the termination of the Reciprocity Treaty with Canada. We will fling a veil of oblivion over General Dix's passionate order, speedily cancelled as it was by the President. The repeal of the Reciprocity Treaty alone will exclude American vessels from the navigation of the Canadian waters, natural and artificial, and place the disabilities of the American fishing interest on the same footing as they were in 1852, when the American people were excited to a war point by the simple enforcement of an almost unquestioned British right. The birthday of the confederation will fall in no halcyon time of security, but at an epoch when the minds of its citizens are brooding anxiously about the future of their country and the various forms of danger to which it may be exposed.

It is to be hoped that the free-trading interests of the Great West will eventually outweigh in the political balance the Protectionist tendencies of the Atlantic States, and that the repeal of one reciprocity treaty will be only a step towards the conclusion of another and an amended one. The pungent manifesto of the Detroit Board of Trade, which has been recently republished in this country, gives us an assurance that the men of the West will not allow their greatest commercial interest, the export of grain and its free transit to the seaboard, to go to the wall. That they will find willing allies in British American statesmen the following well-conceived resolution shows:—

> The communications with the North-Western territory and the improvements required for the development of the trade of the Great West with the seaboard, are regarded by this Conference as subjects of the highest importance to the Confederation, and should be prosecuted at the earliest possible period when the state of the federal finances will permit the Legislature to do so.

The improvements referred to are, we presume, the construction of the Ottawa Canal and the deepening of the Welland and St. Lawrence canals. Such being the highly precarious state of the commercial relations between British America and the United States, it becomes doubly incumbent on the former to establish that system of entire intercolonial free trade which is one of the most prominent features of the new scheme. The sweeping away of four or five provincial tariffs will be the best means of indemnifying the British Americans for the possible loss of a reciprocity treaty with the American Union.

To carry out this general system of free trade, as well as to facilitate intercourse between the maritime provinces and Canada, it is absolutely necessary that the missing links of the intercolonial railroad, which is to connect Halifax with Quebec, be forthwith completed. These missing links are two—viz., between Truro, in Nova Scotia, and Shediac, in New Brunswick; and between Fredericton, N.B., and Rivière de Loup, the eastern terminus of the Grand Trunk line, 114 miles below Quebec. The construction of this line was recommended by Lord Durham in his celebrated "Report on the Affairs of British North America," so early as January, 1839, at a time when the present gigantic system of American and Canadian railroads was yet in embryo. We quote this curious passage:—

> The completion of any satisfactory communication between Halifax and Quebec would, in fact, produce relations between these provinces that would render a general union absolutely necessary. Several surveys have proved that it would be perfectly practicable the whole way. It appears to be a general opinion in the United States that the severe snows and frosts of that continent very slightly impede and do not prevent the travelling on railroads; and, if I am rightly informed, the Utica Railroad, in the northern part of the State of New York, is used throughout the winter. If this opinion be correct, the formation of a railroad from Halifax to Quebec would entirely alter some of the distinguishing characteristics of the Canadas. Instead of being shut out from all direct intercourse with England during half the year, they would possess a far more certain and speedy communication throughout the winter than they now possess in summer. The passage from Ireland to Quebec would be a matter of ten or twelve days, and Halifax would be the great port by which a large portion of the trade, and all the conveyance of passengers to the whole of British North America, would be carried on. . . . . . If the great natural channel of the St. Lawrence gives all the people who dwell in any part of its basin such an interest in the government of the whole as renders it wise to incorporate the two Canadas, the artificial work which would, in fact, supersede the lower part of the St. Lawrence as the outlet of a great part of the Canadian trade, and would make Halifax, in a great measure, an outport to Quebec, would surely, in the same way, render it advisable that the incorporation should be extended to provinces through which such a road would pass.

Although Sir Robert Peel's Government was favourable to this project, and offered to guarantee 4 per cent interest to the investors, it has not yet been carried out. The want of it was grievously felt by the empire in the winter of 1861-2, when the 10,000 British troops made their famous passage on sleighs between Fredericton and Quebec. The same motives of economy and speed in the conveyance of troops, military stores, and the mails which have prompted the Indian Government to guarantee a certain rate of interest upon the vast sums invested in Indian railroads, has at length impelled both the Imperial and Colonial Governments to renew their offers of a guarantee and a grant of land to any capitalists who will supply the missing links in the railroad chain between Halifax and Quebec. As the surveys have long since been made, and the estimated outlay is only £3,000,000 for a length of 350 miles, and inasmuch as its execution is a condition precedent of the proposed Confederation, we may soon expect to hear of its introduction on the Stock Exchange.

It is a little singular that the crisis which brings upon the tapis the aforesaid suggestion of Lord Durham, for a closer connection between Canada and the maritime provinces, should also be the same which puts an end to his pet scheme for the Legislative Union of the two Canadas, whose express and principal duty it was to be to Anglicise French Canada. His advice was that "Lower Canada must be governed now, as it must be hereafter, by an English population." The French language, laws, and customs were to be "obliterated." His statesmanship on all these points has been singularly traversed by events. The Legislative Union of the two Provinces, far from having been the means of "subjecting the Eastern Province to the vigorous rule of an English majority," has, on the contrary, been the instrument by which a French minority has been able to govern a British majority; and it is the revolt of the British majority against this galling régime which has brought it to a close. But the remedy proposed is not the "obliteration" of French nationality, but the concession to it of a Provincial Legislature with a solitary restrictive stipulation in favour of the payment of Protestant schools, for which an equivalent is given in the payment of Catholic schools in the British province. In the matter of language, the British element allows French as well as English to be used in the General Legislature and its proceedings, while the French Canadians concede that English as well as French may be used in the local Legislature of Lower Canada and in the federal and local courts of Lower Canada. So scrupulously is French nationality respected that, whereas provisions are inserted in the published scheme for consolidating the laws rendering uniform the legal procedure of the other confederated provinces, no allusion is made to any prospective alteration in the laws and procedure of Lower Canada. From the point of view of modern Liberalism, the spirit which pervades this scheme is an immense advance upon the harsh animus towards the conquered and isolated race which inspired the report of the Earl of Durham.

The mail from Sherman's army, by the Arago, reached the New York post-office at half-past six o'clock on Friday night, and the last of more than 200,000 letters was dispatched by the Erie line at a quarter past four the next afternoon. The stamps not having been cancelled, this labour was necessarily performed in the New York post-office, and employed fifteen men throughout the night and up to noon on Saturday. Twenty men were required to sort the letters. This is the largest mail that the New York post-office ever received.

The Registrar-General's Quarterly Return comprises the births and deaths registered by 2200 registrars in all the districts of England during the autumn quarter that ended Dec. 31, 1864; and the marriages in 12,717 churches or chapels, about 5139 registered places of worship unconnected with the Established Church, and 641 superintendent registrar's offices, in the quarter that ended on Sept. 30, 1864. The population goes on increasing. The weddings in the summer were much more numerous than they had ever been in the season. The births in the last quarter of the year were less numerous than the births of the corresponding quarter of 1863; but with that exception the number is higher than it has ever been since registration began. Death has also been unusually busy. No autumn death-rate has been observed in England higher than that of the last quarter, except in 1846, 1847, and 1858. Bread has been cheap, and employment, except in Lancashire, plentiful; but the weather has been cold, and the waters of the wells and streams have been scanty, as well as impure, through the deficiency of rainfall; of which the storage about dwelling-houses is everywhere deficient. Fever and scarlatina have ravaged several cities where the sanitary arrangements have never yet reached the great body of the population. 177,444 births were registered in the quarter ending Dec. 31, and there were 123,458 deaths during the same period, leaving a natural increase of 53,986 to the population, or 587 daily. The number of emigrants in the quarter who left ports in the United Kingdom where emigration officers are stationed was 33,495, being 12,972 less than in the previous quarter, and 9628 less than in the same quarter of 1863. 123,458 deaths (63,162 males, and 60,296 females) were registered in the last ninety-two days of the year—a number never yet reached in any corresponding season since the commencement of registration.

MEMBERS OUT OF PARLIAMENT.

The cessation of the provincial starring consequent on the early approach of the regular season in town has been signalised by a certain effort to get the stars into galaxies. In more places than one they have corruscated much after the fashion of that bunch of luminous globes which bursts out at the end of the fiery track of a rocket. In the main, the pyrotechny has been the work of the Conservatives. In the latest gatherings of their party there is still greater proof of that belief in themselves, and in their having really a party cry, to which we have recently alluded. There has been a faint touch of the mass-meeting spirit in two most remarkable assemblages which have been held under the auspices of leading Tories.

At Leicester there was absolutely a family likeness to a league; for there, the malt tax being set up as the object of a meeting and of a discussion, the proceedings were not conducted by local agency, but pronounced; and special advocates of the repeal of that tax were in presence, and took some such place as that which used to be occupied anywhere and everywhere by Mr. Cobden and Mr. Bright in the heat of the anti-corn-law agitation. For corn read malt, for Mr. Cobden read Sir F. Kelly, and for Mr. Bright imagine Mr. Ferrand, and the analogy is complete—upon the surface. It may be that Lord Curzon and Mr. Hartopp, who stood sponsors for Leicestershire on this occasion; and Mr. Bromley, who, new-fledged as he is, could yet take a flight from neighbouring Warwickshire, might have been glad to welcome the two outlying members who came to pile up the agitation; but how came Lord John Manners to cast in his lot with a group of irresponsibles? It is competent, even to Sir F. Kelly, who may or may not be a law officer in a Conservative Government again, to talk for hours in that circular fashion which is peculiar to him; and there is nothing on earth to prevent Mr. Ferrand's railing at—and we had almost written blaspheming as the most apt representative word for his style—a tax, the denunciation of which is agreeable in the one case to the electors of Suffolk, and, in the second, forms as good an excuse as any other for the pouring out of that political and social lava with which Mr. Ferrand is ever overflowing. But, if half that his friends say be true, Lord John is a proximate Minister in a Cabinet where the genius, if not the executant agent, of finance will be Mr. Disraeli, who, as we believe, has by no means pledged himself to a repeal of the malt tax. Nearly the only time in which he agreed with and supported Mr. Gladstone was last Session, in a resistance to a motion framed only to catch a pledge from the House to put that impost down amongst its earliest considerations. There have been rumours ere now, when the Derbyites were in office, that Lord John Manners was rather an obstructive to the Liberalism of that Cabinet; so, perhaps, he does not owe any special allegiance to his chief in the Lower House, and is indifferent about committing himself to a movement which has not been included by Mr. Disraeli in that simple programme of policy which he has declared, and which consists only of the two items of Church and State, and the improvement of wool in certain counties. However, such a little difference as a matter of five or six millions a year can easily be arranged between them when a Cabinet is being built up on compromises.

Of course in Berkshire, whatever may be the case elsewhere, people understand why the electors should give a dinner to Mr. Benyon, who has been one of the representatives of that county since 1860, succeeding a member whose activity was akin to nervous restlessness, who never let an evening pass without asking awkward questions of the Government, and always made a set motion or two every Session. Mr. Benyon has distinguished himself in the House by force of contrast. He is remarkable for nothing ever having been heard of him, and that is, in its way, a Parliamentary merit. Looking to the character of a gathering the other day at Reading, which professed to be in his honour, there does arise a suspicion that in this case Mr. Benyon was made a peg on which to hang a Conservative demonstration. Here, again, there was an effort to give a species of universality to a meeting which was avowedly for general party objects; as well as to present a live candidate, who is to purge Berkshire from Whiggery by procuring the rejection of Mr. Philip Bouverie at the next election. There were Mr. Gathorne Hardy (who was worth having), from Kent, and Mr. Lygon (who was not worth having), from Worcestershire; and Mr. Beach, from Hampshire, who, in a certain and particular sense, rather illustrates the Conservative party as it is understood amongst irreverent North Country Radicals. Thither came Mr. Malins, leaving the Court of Chancery on a day in the middle of Term—a sacrifice the extent of which only lawyers in great practice can appreciate, and which could only be justified by a prevision of a not too-distant solicitor-generalship; and there, in the exercise of his undoubted right as a Berkshire man and a neighbour to the town of Reading, was no less a personage than Mr. Darby Griffith, who, as his speech appears to have been the last on the list, was probably chosen to perform that task which at concerts is known as playing the audience out; and we will venture to engage that, in his well-known zeal for instructing the fewest possible of his fellow-creatures (his fate always in the House), he did not cease while one man was left in that hall, the festive lights of which were growing dim about him. In the somewhat pot-valiant speech of Mr. Mowbray—who, probably because he was the only "right honourable" at hand, was the chairman—and in the pronouncement of Colonel Loyd Lindsay, who is to re-conservatise Berks, were set forth the hopes—no fears, by-the-by—and objects of the party for which they spoke. But the most that uninspired observers can make out of it all is, that there are plenty of opinionists who are ready to dash into a political fight; but what the fight is to be about is not quite so clear. So far as can be made out, the moving cause is personal, in the shape of Mr. Gladstone, who has combined opinions on universal suffrage and cheap claret which are horribly revolutionary, and not to be endured. As a whole, however, one cannot but fancy that all the valorous doings of the Conservatives have a strong family likeness to sciomachy, which may be an exciting but is a very harmless exercise.

The compensation meetings of the last few days—that is, the gatherings on the Liberal side—have been quite different in their character. The humdrum monotone of member to electors has prevailed, whether in the dreary platitudes of Mr. Frederick Peel, at Bury, where he seemed to be weighing out ounces of discretion and offering them to the bystanders as of the value of hundredweights of free talk and passionate oratory; or in the nicely-adjusted murmurings of Mr. Milner Gibson to a quasi-Radical audience at Ashton, where he exhibited to perfection the results of that process of transformation which has been described as catching a Radical, taking him to Court, and making him a Cabinet Minister. To be sure, there has been Mr. Leatham's brilliant oration at Huddersfield, which reads as if the sentences had been constructed by Addison, and then dashed with points and witticisms by Steele, and which, no doubt, was spoken with that most artistic adoption of freedom and spontaneity which he studies so carefully, and which almost, though not quite, veils that which would otherwise be the oratorical vice of too careful preparation. If there is really to be any party strife it must now be at close quarters in the closed lists of Parliament; for the time for contending at long shots is past and gone.

The Roman Pontifical Academy of Archæology has decided that the colossal statue of Hercules in gilt bronze, discovered in the ruins of the theatre at Pompeii, shall henceforth adorn the Vatican and bear the name of the Ercole del Mastai, in memory of Pius IX.

At the suggestion and through the mediation of Austria, negotiations have been entered into at Athens on the subject of the claims of King Otho for the restitution of his private fortune which is still withheld from him. Two commissions are now occupied with this question; one to examine the legal value of the claims made and the other to fix the amount of the indemnity.

"The Eleanor Crosses."—(To the Editor.)—Permit me to point out a slight error in the reference which occurs in your last Number (in the column "Archæology of the Month") to my communication to the Athenæum. You state my third proposition, in support of the popular conviction that these crosses are due to the conjugal devotion of King Edward I., to be "the authority of the common law," whereas I used the word "tradition," suggesting that in Westminster Hall the common law itself is only a bundle of such traditions, but which, nevertheless, from the earliest periods known to the administration of justice in this country, are held to be conclusive as to what the law is in those Courts which are governed by it, upon any disputed point, whereon no other authority is known to exist.—John Abel, Temple, Jan. 28, 1865.

BETTER DAYS FOR WORKING MEN.

THE principle of Co-operation—illustrating the fable of the bundle of sticks—is producing a wonderful revolution in the towns of the north. In very many of them there are now central stores, with their branches and ramifications, all in vigorous operation. Confined, as they are, to the sale of food and clothing, with a public of their own, buying with ready money and selling for cash, they cannot fail to succeed and to beat the small and even the large shopkeepers out of the field. At Manchester and elsewhere I have been told by shopkeepers that, whereas they were accustomed to take £30 or £60 a week, they now take £5 or £10. The following facts will explain this:—In Rochdale, with 40,000 inhabitants, there are 4900 co-operative members. In Halifax, with about the same population, there are 5000 members. If these members represent heads of families, and the families average four persons, we get half the population in each case as purchasers at their own shops. In Rochdale these 4900 have invested very nearly £300,000 in various co-operative schemes. The stores employ £62,000; the corn-mill, £71,000; the cottage or house building society, £8000; and the cotton-mills, £160,000.

This prodigious sum is subscribed in shares of £1 or £5, paid up in full, or by weekly instalments. The energy and determination thus evidenced by the workpeople to preside over the fructification of their own earnings is mainly due, in Rochdale, to the defalcation of the secretary of the savings bank and the loss to the operatives alone of some £70,000. The bitter lesson has been well learned.

Finding that they had more money than could be employed in stores, these thrifty trading workmen determined to try the virtues of co-operation in the higher sphere of manufacturing; so they built a flour-mill, supplied their own stores, and, driving a ready-money trade, have done well. About fifty co-operative societies depend upon it for unadulterated flour and meal. The capital employed in 1863 was £41,714; the business done, £152,492; the profit, £10,138.

In 1860 a cotton-mill was opened, and another is now rising, close to it, at Mitchell Hey. These are considered the finest mills in Rochdale. They who contribute to the realisation of wealth should participate in its distribution. Such was the conviction of those who originated the enterprise which now involves a capital of £160,000, £90,000 being fully paid up. It was contended that the workpeople, being mostly shareholders, would work to the best advantage; that time and material would be fully economised; that the expensive system of middlemen and agencies, together with the risks of credit, would be dispensed with. There would be no debts, and, after interest, rent, wages, and repairs were provided for, the remainder would be divided—in part in proportion to amount of shares, in part in proportion to wages—the workpeople being paid according to the wage rate of the district. Such was the idea; but this society has objected to the last provision, which throws open, and most wisely, I think, the advantages of co-operation to non-members. My card gained me ready access to this mill a few weeks since, and polite attention. Those who are exalted to the management of these large affairs seem by no means disposed to desert their class, or to dress better than their fellow-members, and I therefore did not look out for an "extensively" got-up man, with gold watch-chain and diamond finger-ring, when inquiring for the secretary or manager. I found nothing beyond fustian. The chairman of the educational committee was introduced to me, and gave me a nod from the huge beam of one of the 50-horse power engines, which was stopped for dinner and required oil. The arrangements of the mill were admirable; the machinery beautiful; cleanliness pervaded every floor; order reigned throughout; and I thought the looks and actions of the 3000 operatives spoke thus:—"There, don't trouble to look after us, we are working for ourselves, and are therefore sure to do our best." And this is, undoubtedly, the feeling which pervades the busy community, notwithstanding the recreance of the society to the true co-operative principle, for most of them are shareholders. As a speculation, the cotton-mill has not proved a success; but it has certainly done better than most private mills. The last dividend, 1s. 10d. in the pound, was paid on the half-year ending December, 1863. It is something, however, to be able to say that the mill has kept running and given work to its people throughout the distress period. Since January, 1860, to January, 1863, they paid £25,000 in wages, removing in this manner a tremendous weight from the rates and relief fund, and doing incalculable service by preserving the morale of the people. The gross profits during the same time were £25,000. What they would be in times of prosperity may be surmised from the actual dividends that have been paid by companies that have been longer in operation. The Bacup and Wardle mills have paid dividends varying from 20 to 34 per cent. On consulting the share list, for there is a local market for all these shares, I perceive that the Bacup and Wardle £12 10s. shares are worth £15 10s., Littleborough £10 shares are worth £7 10s., Calliards (woollen mill) £5 shares worth £5, Ripponden £10 shares worth £6 10s., Small Briggs £5 shares worth £1 10s., Rochdale Michell Hey £5 shares worth £4 12s. 6d., Middleton £10 shares worth £7 15s., Greeve £25 worth £20. These shares would not have been at a discount had trade continued good; for, as a whole, the concerns they represent have been unexceptionably managed; and manufacturers around are looking confidently, though alarmedly, to a large extension of a system which seems to possess so many advantages to favour it. So far as the purchase of cotton and its manufacture are concerned, there is a simplicity about the operation eminently adapted to show off co-operation to its best; the question of finance is another matter. Nearly all these manufacturing companies have been working for stock; the accumulations are consequently large, and the state of the share market indicates a doubt in the public mind as to whether an immense loss will not be sustained by a drop in the market before this stock can be sold.

In the case of food stores and corn-mills these companies are safe to succeed, because they can command their own public and enforce their own ready-money system; but, in the matter of cotton, the Mitchell Hey mills, for instance, would more than supply the wants of the whole of the co-operative members throughout the land, and it is clear that these societies must compete with private traders for custom in the open market, where they cannot enforce that ready-money system which is their safeguard. Where their powers of production are beyond the capacities of their shareholders they must resort to the same means as other manufacturers to secure custom; an organisation of agencies and middlemen must be established, advertising and other expensive expedients must be resorted to, and the credit system, with its bad debts and loans, will follow. Will the present order of inexperienced men be able to cope with such difficulties? That is the question. Will the shareholders be patient under loss and disappointment? Will they have sufficient wisdom to forego an immediate for an ultimate advantage? So long as they maintain the system of cash payments there is nothing to fear; but in departing from this they will afford opportunities to multitudes of capitalists who regard with ill-favour this new movement to crush it. It is clear that mere joint-stock companies which trade on credit have no right to expect the advantages of pure co-operation.

In the limited space allotted to this paper I can but glance at other forms of co-operation. Land and building companies have been established. That at Rochdale has power to build, buy, and sell, houses, workshops, mills, factories, or any other kind of property; to purchase, lease, or rent land, &c. Some thirty-six houses have been built for £130 each, renting for 3s. 6d. a week. A society called the Wholesale Agency has been formed for purchasing commodities in quantities large enough to supply the whole range of co-operative stores. Already the members of these stores get the best of everything; but this new agency is to economise the purchases to the utmost, by wholesale buying on a very large scale, with its liberal allowance for cash.

The last instance of co-operation I can give is obtained from the rural districts. In the year 1832 Mr. Gurdon, of Assington Hall, Suffolk, offered a small farm to twenty labourers. He lent the capital without interest, and retained the control as regards tillage. The capital being repaid in ten years, Mr. Gurdon was encouraged to enlarge the area to 150 acres, and to add thirty men to the original company, on the same terms. In 1862 the capital advanced this second time was repaid, and the experiment is giving the utmost satisfaction to the benevolent and wise projector. These fifty men and their families are thriving in a neighbourhood where wages are scanty and labourers ill-fed. Here is an example that might be tried with advantage by those who advocate close parishes and cottage demolition, and whose lives are rendered a burden to them by reason of the claims of distress. They are surrounded by those who will help themselves, if they can but get the chance to do so.

The principle has also spread into the mining districts.

Those who have taken the pains to follow me cannot, I think, fail to perceive in this movement the germs of a new state of things for working men. The fact that there are now 200,000 working men uniting in themselves the functions of capitalists and workers must produce a profound impression on the class views and habits of every industrial body in the kingdom. Personal experience in these undertakings will teach these people how little the rate of wages depends on any man's will, and the views thus engendered will spread slowly and surely. I cannot but regard co-operation as a cure for those lamentable conflicts between capital and labour in which both are always losers, and the country with them. If it will not prove a sure panacea for pauperism, it will, at any rate, remove so many from that vortex as may be counted upon its own rolls.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

A GROWING fancy that Zambesi may be the Merry horse, after all, has brought the black, or "Mat's black," to 9 to 1 for the Two Thousand; but Chattanooga, one of the most bloodlike yearlings that was ever sold at the Royal paddocks, is sadly out of favour for both events. Some say that his action won't do; and others, that he is an incipient roarer. Admirers of Pepper's Ghost, "a name which will never win a Derby," can be accommodated at 1000 to 7½, if they wish to speculate on this "viewless form of air;" and among the "sensation" turf news of the day we find the names of the three banks through which Mr. Chaplin's £11,000 cheque for Breadalbane and Broomielaw passed to Mr. I'Anson. Our forefathers used to speak with rapture of "the stain of old Prunella," but it seems as nothing now to the stains of Pocahontas and Queen Mary combined.

The first foal to King of the Forest was dropped at Mamhead last week. Buccaneer's subscription is full; and Thormanby's, Dundee's, and Chevalier d'Industrie's nearly so. It is said that Blair Athol's fee may be raised to 100 guineas next year, and that Mr. Jackson has only kept one subscription out of the thirty of this season for himself. Lady Clifden has been passed over in consequence of being, like him, from a Melbourne dam, and the choice falls on Tunstall Maid. Those who have seen the crack in his box declare that he still retains that inveterate trick of gaping in which he stood and indulged for minutes at the Derby post till the other horses were done with false starts and "Snowdon called upon him for something more tangible." Myrtilus, Stockman, Cistercian, Lord in Waiting, Bayonet, Jack Frost, Operator, and Fanfaron are among the lot of sires which Mr. Phillips is collecting for India. Surplice has reached Hasketon; and it can be said of few horses, as of him, that, out of 150 foals, about sixty-six are winners, with stayers like Wild Rose and flyers like Lady Clifden among them. He had only four foals in 1862, of which one died and another has not been out; but the other two have won, and one of them—The Missionary—rather decisively. We may well be a little jealous of the stud fame of a horse who was the first, after forty-eight years, to break the "double-event" spell. Muscovite and the late Mr. Greville's mares will be sold, we hear, in the summer, at Hampton Court. It is rumoured that Caller Ou is to leave the turf; and, if so, in the words of Mr. Pecksniff, "To Owners and Trainers, an eligible opportunity offers itself to anyone" who has a horse good enough for Queen's Plates, of which she has won twenty-nine—being three more than Fisherman and eight more than Rataplan.

The Grand National Hunt Steeplechase, which came off with such éclat at Melton last year, has had its venue changed to Wetherby, on March 29. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales and twenty-five noblemen are among the seventy subscribers, and £250 will be added. The meeting will most probably occupy two days, and the town announces that it "can accommodate any number of horses."

The weights for several of the great handicaps have been published. Dollar (9 st. 7 lb. and 9 st.) heads four of them; and Admiral Rous considers him capable of giving 7 lb. for his year to Ely. With respect to Oldminster's and Dr. Syntax's forms, as compared with Dollar's the Admiral and Mr. Topham differ by 7 lb. and 8 lb. Mail Train' (7 st. 10 lb.) and The Clown (7 st. 6 lb.) are the imposts of the pair, which were fancied by anticipation for the Chester Cup, in which Ackworth gets 7 st. 12 lb., and very lucky to get it. Lord Zetland (4 yrs. 6 st. 10 lb.) is considered wonderfully well in at Chester, and he is on 13 lb. worse terms with Dollar in the Metropolitan.

Nearly everywhere north of London there has been a heavy fall of snow, and in Aberdeenshire, where Mr. Archer Fortescue recently brought a fox to book in the open after two hours and a half hard running with three and a half brace of his Orkney harriers, they have been completely blocked in. The Brocklesby have had 4 in. or 5 in. of snow and frost underneath, and only hunted six days all last month. There are a great many foxes in the country, and they lie out, so much so that on the 18th, when Nimrod Long had been running his fox over a good country for an hour, he found that they had three lines before them, and, after carrying a good head for ten minutes more, they got beat. Mr. Villebois, who has not had such good sport as Lord Hastings, gives up his Norfolk country this season, and the hounds are to be sold at the end of April, by Messrs. Tattersall, at Messrs. J. and N. Mason's farm, near Hendon. The Hon. Robert Grimston's four hunters, The Cat, King Alfred, Shawn Buidhe, and Malt Tax, will be sold at The Corner on the 20th, in consequence of their hard-riding owner having met with an accident in the field. Malt Tax is the horse which "Bob" Ward, Lord Dacre's huntsman, rode last December, when he beat off Mr. Lowndes's field over the grass, a feat which we alluded to at the time.

The frost has rather spoilt the coursers' fun, and the Scarborough Open is postponed till Feb. 22. Mr. Campbell has decisively denied the rumour that he had a better dog left in his kennel than Calabaroono, who was, we hear, at least 7 lb. too big when he won the Sundorne cup. Clasper is said to have got hurt, and Rebe to have been tried to be in that grand form which has twice brought her up second for this cup; but the Waterloo "stock-exchange reports" are beginning, and Calabaroono has been "severely injured"—on paper.

The Calcutta correspondent of the Times says that 60,000 persons were drowned or otherwise killed by the fearful cyclone which recently swept over a portion of Bengal.

A ball was given by the merchants of Gibraltar to Governor and Lady Codrington, on the 17th ult. It was numerously attended.

Petroleum has been discovered in Guadaloupe, distant a league from the city of Mexico, in Otapan, and in San Christobel, near the brook of Amnesquite, in the municipality of Minatitlan.

The last overland mail brings intelligence of the lighting-up of the city of Hong-Kong with gas. This is the first town in China that has been so lighted.

It is asserted that a photographer, who has been employed by the Dutch Government to take views of the most beautiful points on the island of Java, has discovered a city buried beneath the lava of a volcano close by, which has been extinct for several centuries.

The fine teak-built ship Assaye, originally launched as a man-of-war, was lost on Monday morning, going ashore on the rocks near the Old Head of Kinsale. It is stated that her commander was drowned in an attempt to reach the shore. The Assaye had a cargo on board from Bombay, valued, it is said, at £300,000, and it is feared that little will be recovered. The ship was valued at £40,000. Both ship and cargo are heavily insured.

The Rev. Mr. Greene's congregation in Hatfield, Massachusetts, made their pastor "surprise visits" on Christmas evening and on New-Year's Eve, and left him 508 dols. in money, a barrel of sugar, a barrel of flour, 50 lb. of butter, and wood enough to supply him for a year, besides many other articles for family use. This was in addition to many other valuable presents in money and family supplies during the year. These "surprise visits" would not be taken amiss by many clergymen in this country.

The Italie of Turin says the following scene occurred a few days ago at a railway-station:—On a bitter cold day a millionaire applied at the ticket-office for a third-class ticket. "What!" exclaimed the official, who knew him, "you, Sir, take a third class on such a day as this?" "Why, I must," was the cool reply, "since there is no fourth class." "I beg your pardon," answered the official, handing him a ticket, "but there is; here is one." The man of wealth hastily paid for it, and rushed forward to take his place. On the doorkeeper asking to see his ticket the traveller produced it, but was rather taken aback on being told that the ticket would not do for him. "And why not?" he exclaimed. "Because it is a dog-ticket!"

SHOOTING.

THERE are few periods of the year looked forward to with more pleasure than the commencement of the shooting season, and when on the 1st of February the last barrel is fired, the sportsman feels with regret that six months must elapse before he can renew his favourite pursuit. Delightful as is the spring, with its birds and flowers, he sighs for that golden day in September when, with health and strength, a cloudless sky, bright verdure, shady hedgerows, an agreeable companion, a gun, a brace of pointers, he can with freshness and elasticity of spirits enjoy a morning walk through an extensive range of stubble and turnips, with every prospect of bringing home a well-filled bag. Nothing has undergone a greater change than the entire system of shooting, and the modern battue is as unlike the old sport as one of Landseer's dogs is to the sign of a greyhound at a wayside public-house. The hours, too, have been greatly altered; and, instead of taking the field at sunrise, the modern lover of the trigger seldom begins operations before ten or eleven o'clock, thus carrying on the sport after dusk.

The question as to which is the best gun—the breech or muzzle loader—has, we think, been decided in favour of the former; and there can be but little doubt that for quickness in charging, especially on a cold, frosty morning, the breech-loader possesses a great advantage over the other. The only drawback to the modern invention is, perhaps, the large quantity of cartridges with which the sportsman must provide himself, and which cannot be procured except in large towns; whereas powder and shot may be purchased at any small village or from the gamekeeper on the spot. Nevertheless, the advantages preponderate over the disadvantages; and ere long we believe that breech-loaders will be universally adopted.

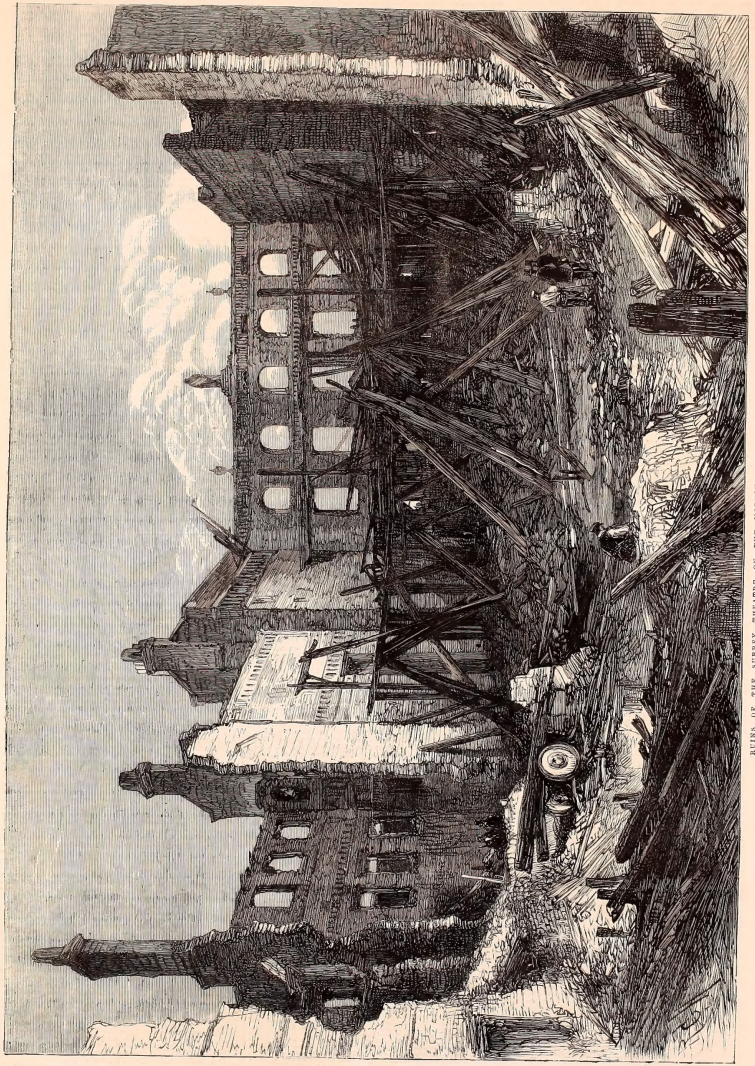
As we write for the million; for old, middle-aged, and young; for the experienced sportsman, who, during a long life, has bagged his thousands of grouse, pheasants, partridges, hares, woodcocks, wild-fowl, snipes, and rabbits; and for the tyro, who, during his winter holidays, has brought down a few blackbirds and sparrows, we will venture to offer a few remarks upon a subject which has lately attracted much attention—namely, accidents out shooting. Want of due caution and thorough carelessness in the management of firearms have been the means of so many fatal results, that we cannot too forcibly impress upon the minds of our readers the necessity of following the annexed golden rules, which ought to be printed and hung up in every sportsman's hall throughout the United Kingdom:—

1st. "Any person loading a gun, carrying, or leaving it loaded in the house, will be subject to a penalty of five pounds, to be distributed among the poor of the parish!" How often has some unsuspecting urchin or inquisitive housemaid maimed or caused the death of a fellow-creature by handling loaded guns in an incautious manner!

2nd. "Never allow the lock of a detonator to be down upon the nipple when capped." A man might almost as well sit on a barrel of gunpowder, with a lighted cigar or short clay pipe in his mouth, as walk with a comrade who carries his gun in the above manner, as the least jerk, the slightest strain, an accidental stumble, a sudden movement, will cause the piece to go off, and woe to the wretched victim who happens to be within the line of fire. We recollect, many winters ago, crossing the entrance-hall at Goodwood with a brother of the late Marquis of Anglesey—now no more—who was carrying his double-barrelled manton in the way we have referred to. Scarcely had he proceeded three yards when an explosion was heard, closely followed by another, the charges of shot rattling over the marble pavement in every direction. Never shall we forget the effect produced upon our mind by this double fire. Happily, no damage was done, as the gun was pointed downwards. Had the young covey of beautiful children, now grown into womanhood and manhood, run out to welcome us back from shooting, as they were wont to do, the result might have been most calamitous.

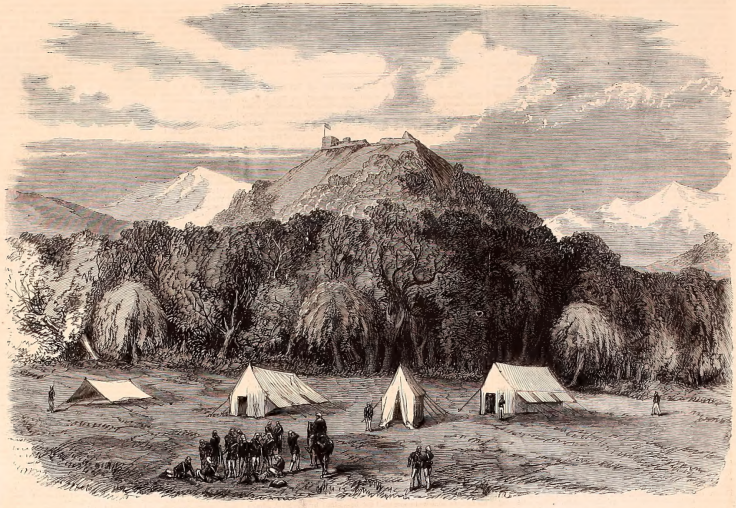
In covert, the very greatest care ought to be taken, or a friend or keeper may be bagged instead of your game, a consummation not "devoutly to be wished." The owner should give especial orders, and see that they are obeyed, for the line of guns and beaters to advance in strict military order, dressing on the centre; for a man in advance or a straggler in the rear runs a fair chance of being shot. In halting to load, the word "halt" should be given in a loud, distinct tone, and it ought to be repeated by the keepers. "Forward" is the order for renewing the attack. Special injunctions should be issued to the whole force never to run forward or backward for a dead or wounded hare, rabbit, or pheasant; for in attempting to recover your game the life of the seeker may be sacrificed. I never shall forget, some years ago, when shooting with the late Sir East Clayton East, at Hall Place, Berkshire, how nearly I shot a lad who, upon my knocking over a hare, ran to secure it. My gun was raised to fire at a rabbit, right in the direction of the boy, when fortunately, I had time to avert the calamity.

Lastly, "Never, under any circumstances, whether your gun be cocked or uncocked, in cover or out of it, in getting through a fence or crossing a brook, let the muzzle be so pointed that, in the event of its going off unexpectedly, any mischief would accrue."



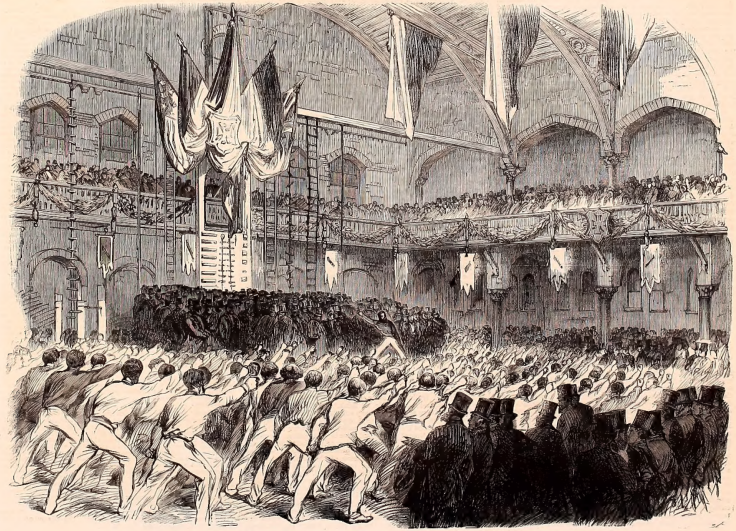
To the above important points of advice, we would add two of a minor nature, which may be of great avail to the beginner—viz., first, to take ample time and aim at the head, allowing a moderate advance for the bird's flight, which is at first very rapid; secondly, never to draw the trigger until the bird is full thirty yards' distance from you, as, in the event of your killing, or rather "blowing him up," you will assuredly spoil him for "dressing," and will most likely get a good "dressing" and "blowing up" for your unsportsman-like conduct.

In conclusion, we shall briefly notice the sportsman's costume, which, like other fashions, has undergone considerable change since the days of our grandfathers. We no longer have our legs encased in stiff leather gaiters, or our feet and ankles cramped with half-boots, the buttoning, buckling, and lacing of which occupied no small portion of the morning toilet; our shooting-jackets no longer contain the oilskin-lined hare-pocket, which was as capacious as that of the clown in the Christmas pantomimes, and the scent of which in the breakfast-room was strong enough to hunt a pack of beagles with. Powder no longer streams down upon our dark velveteen jacket, as was the case in the time of our ancestors. Ease and comfort in dress are the characteristics of the present day, and ought to be the primary object of the shooter, whom we strenuously recommend to employ a first-rate tailor, trousers-cutter, and bootmaker; and, above all, to avoid the ready-made articles commonly called "reach-me-downs," which are to be seen in the windows of the advertising crew. Look at the discomfort of ill-shapen, badly-made gear. A man may as well be in the stocks as have his body confined, his chest contracted, his arms pinioned down straight-waistcoat fashion; and such will be the inevitable result to those who purchase cheap "goods"—if such a term can be applied to the worst of articles. We therefore fearlessly assert that, in the long run, both for comfort and economy, the plan we have suggested will succeed.



For August shooting we recommend jacket, waistcoat, and trousers of heather-colour tweed, a broad-brimmed straw hat or drab "wide-awake," and a pair of strong, easy, short wellington boots, doubly leathered over the toes. For September, when

> The flutt'ring coveys from the stubble rise
> And on swift wing divide the sounding skies;
> The scatt'ring lead pursues the certain sight,
> And death in thunder overtakes the flight,



a jacket of jean, nankeen, or merino; waistcoat to match; tweed trousers, strapped to the knee with thin leather, to turn the thorns in scrambling through a hedge, will form the best attire. For October and winter shooting nothing can exceed a velveteen jacket lined with fine flannel, a dark kerseymere waistcoat, cord trousers, strapped with leather as above mentioned, plain or waterproof beaver hat, according to the season. With respect to pockets, we advise every sportsman to follow his own fancy, and the best way of getting them in the right place is, when trying on his gear, to bring the hand naturally up to the most convenient spot, which the "man of measures" can mark with a piece of chalk. Any good bootmaker will turn out every requisite article, from the light balmoral shoe for September shooting, to the thick double-soled boot for winter wear. In giving the order, let the advice of the late Theodore Hook be borne in mind, and especial care be taken to "have your last made an inch longer than your foot, that there may be plenty of room left for supplementary tow (toe);" without which precaution a man may be crippled, after one day's work, for the whole season.

THE BURNING OF THE SURREY THEATRE.

THE Surrey Theatre, in the Blackfriars-road, was destroyed by fire a little before midnight on Monday last. The "gorgeous pantomime of Hasheesh: King Pippin" was being played, as usual; it was drawing to a conclusion, about twenty minutes before twelve o'clock, and the stage carpenters were just setting the last scene, entitled "The Investigation Retreat in the Forest of Fancy." At this juncture, the Clown, announced in the playbills as "the great little Rowella," was performing in a comic scene, "The Slave of Darkness in the Region of Despair," where one of his acts of drollery was to pile up the furniture. He was just beginning his solo on this musical instrument, when he cast his eyes upward and saw that the flames and smoke were bursting from back-canvas drawn above the chandelier. Taking his bucket of water with him, and leaving inviting bits of stage property behind him (Mr. Evans), to follow, Mr. Rowella hurried from the stage and up a small staircase or ladder leading to the "flies." From the stage manager, at this moment cause upon the stage, and, hearing above all things, the cry of "Fire!" he paused and a moment to the scene, begged the spectators to "keep their seats," adding the assurance that he and his assistants would do all they could to avert danger. The audience, however, misunderstood the humorous, soon dispersed, and nobody was hurt. Meantime, the Clown made his way, on hands and knees, up to the top of the house, where, directly above the pit of the theatre. He found this floor on fire in many places with the heaps of dry stuff and scenery which had accumulated between the planks of the flooring and the ceiling beneath it, which consisted of lath and timber and canvas. As it was useless to think of extinguishing the fire here, Mr. Rowella descended, and at the same time Mr. Hudson, the fire-engineer, turned off the gas at the main, to prevent an explosion. This measure left all behind the scenes in total darkness, and the fire became one mass of blazing flame. So rapid was the spread of the fire that out a single play was saved in the way of dresses or any article of dress belonging to the company; nothing but the money in the treasurer's office. But for the exertions of the police on duty and spoken of, the loss of life behind the scenes would almost certainly have been frightful. Even as it was they had narrow escapes for their themselves, and they got out at last grimed with smoke and dirt in the dresses in which they had been performing, and without opportunity to get even a coat or cloak for themselves. The theatre was soon all ablaze from top to bottom, and the fierce glare lit up the sky all round the neighbourhood. There were plenty of engines and plenty of police early on the spot; but all the efforts of firemen and engineers were fruitless, as the building was, indeed, could only check the spread of the flames to other houses. From the first case of the theatre was doomed. In less than an hour after the first alarm it had ceased to exist.

The first Surrey Theatre, originally called the St. George's Field's Circus, was built, in 1782, by Charles Dibdin, the poet. It was afterwards called the Royal Circus, and Astley's Amphitheatre, and finally the Surrey. In 1810 it was burnt, like its successor of last night, in the course of little more than an hour. The Surrey Theatre was then built in 1865, and opened, its lessees were Elliston and Thomas Dibdin, and on the boards of this theatre Richmond made his first bow to an audience. The celebrated John Palmer was acting manager in 1790, when he was living within the rules of the Queen's Bench, and the theatre was then in the aboriginal by Lord Chief Justice Kenyon of the debtors' privileges in forcing the bailiffs to keep their prisoners within the boundaries of from the rules. The lessees of the late theatre, Messrs. Shepherd and Anderson, are, of course, great sufferers by the fire. The property of the value of the theatre and its contents at about £12,000, and the insurance effected upon it, owing to the heavy rate of premium, the heavy direct loss on the lessees. The loss will be much heavier when the number of persons thrown out of employment by the fire is taken account. Mr. Shepherd, however, a man of energy, and, undaunted by his misfortune, is already talking of rebuilding the house on a new and splendid theatre upon the site of the late building. Much sympathy is felt for the numerous actors, supernumeraries, musicians, and workpeople, who are thrown out of employment; and it is intended to give a night of performances at the theatre, the profits for the benefit of these unfortunate people.

With regard to the cause of the fire, the most experienced firemen, having carefully examined the ruins, believe that it originated from the accidental overheating of the chandelier, and that the heat, being drawn up by the strong current of air which was then blowing down which the chandelier was suspended, caused the ignition of the ceiling, which in its turn communicated the flame to the highly combustible materials in the painters' and carpenters' workshops, filled at the time with a large quantity of scenery. Our Illustration of the ruins on Tuesday morning is drawn in our Illustration. Outside the building could be seen the front wall, the only portion left standing, with the windows all blank and empty; and there were the foot of the boxes, and the entrance to the pit, and the front of the first circle, and the gallery, but within there was not a rod of iron that was not bent, and a beam that was not reduced to a mere stick of charcoal. Above the roof had been the scenery, all was empty and gallery, and had stretched across the theatre, now hung on each side like broken wings. Somewhere also there had been the dressing-rooms to bear a man's weight. For a little way past the entrances a charred labyrinth of cross-beams, some yet in their places, some dropped down, and heaped over one another, dripped with the tons of water that had been poured over them, and which had not extinguished the fire. Over and these beams, however, as far as the back wall, with its high arched doorway, continued the stage, and there, too, fronted the stage, and there, too, was nothing under foot but a dismal heap of black ashes, mingled with relics of half-burned books and papers. The remaining walls of the building have since been taken down, to prevent further accidents.

OPENING OF THE GERMAN GYMNASTIC INSTITUTION, OLD ST. PANCRAS-ROAD.

THE German Gymnastic Society of London was formed in 1861. It started with 150 members, and has gone on increasing till at the present time it counts over 500. In consequence of this great increase, it was deemed expedient to erect a building more suitable for the original one. A foundation fund was formed, and, being liberally subscribed to, the council, at the commencement of the year, found themselves in a position to decide upon building a new gymnasium. A site in Stanhope-street, Old St. Pancras-road, was secured on a lease of ninety-four years granted, at the annual rental of £42. The building was designed by Mr. Ernest Turner, and, on Monday last, the first stone was formally laid, in the presence of a large number of friends. The building is situated in the rear of No. 1, and will be entered through it. It comprises a large central hall, 100 ft. long by 50 ft. wide, and 60 ft. in height, fitted with all the necessary apparatus, including a structure for escalading exercises, and is surrounded by a capacious gallery; a club-room, 60 ft. by 35 ft.; a fine reading-room, and a library containing some seven ninety works on bodily exercises and 300 miscellaneous books. Messrs. Trübner, of Paternoster-row, have presented the society with upwards of fifty volumes of valuable works. The building will cost £6000; but, when completed with fittings and apparatus, it is estimated that the entire outlay will be about £8500, including £1600 for paying off an improved ground-rent. The opening of the new building took place on Saturday week, when above two thousand persons were present. The proceedings began with an appropriate address by Mr. A. Heintzeman, the president of the society. This was followed by a cantata written by Mr. G. Watt, composed by Mr. Julius Syrax, and executed in admirable style by members of the German singing societies. A series of gymnastic exercises was subsequently gone through by some of the principal members of the society, and a short concert brought the public entertainments of the evening to a close.

Some 300 members, presided over by Mr. Ravenstein, the honorary secretary, afterwards partook of a repast, at the close of which an illustration representative of the gymnastic exercises performed by all the members together, including the movements of the fugleman on the platform.

THE FORTRESS OF DALIMKOTE, IN BHOOTAN.

THE fortress of Dalimkote, which was captured, on Dec. 6, by a detachment of the Bengal Sappers and Miners, under Captain Tytler, is situated on the top of a steep and lofty rock, almost surrounded by the forest which clothes the hills. Our artist's sketch was made from a position on the opposite side of the valley to that from which the assault was delivered. The first performance of the season, on Thursday last, was received with the warmest applause; and the house, which has been frequently full of late, was crowded to the roof. The drama is in some degree founded on Lord Byron's two poems, "The Corsair," and "Lara." The hero, "Lara," is represented as the hero of this musical piece, the heroine, too, being Byron's Gulnare, Lara, beyond this, there is little in common between the poem and the new opera. Except the above two, all the characters are creations of the dramatists' fancy, and the whole piece is a mere vehicle for the introduction of a number of new obscurities of construction, which render the story somewhat difficult to follow, the drama is interesting, and a good vehicle for the display of Mr. Harrison's powers as a vocalist. But Spanish nobleman, has been wild in his youth, left his paternal home, and disappeared. Returned, after the lapse of many years, to plot for the conduct of his son, and his ancestral halls are shut up and deserted. Gulnare, a Moorish girl, who has been left by Lara's father, arrives to take possession of the estate and to choose a husband whom she may wish, but, apparently has no love for any of the suitors. At the same time the long-lost heir suddenly makes his appearance, and is joyfully welcomed by the aged domestic left in charge of the old family seat by the father. Gulnare, who has also left with her his cousin Camilla has formerly been betrothed lovers; now that they meet again their old love is revived and they resolve to elope together. But Lara is attended by a Moorish boy—Gulnare in disguise—who, witnessing the parting interview of the betrothed pair, becomes a prey to the pangs of vindictive jealousy. Camilla has another lover, Ezzelin, who hates Lara, and who, in the hope of gaining Camilla, betrays Lara's secret—his lawless career as a corsair. The Countess has declared herself a widow, and is to be married again. In the midst of the joyous festivities of such an occasion, Ezzelin publicly denounces Lara as an impostor. Lara, when called upon to defend himself, declares that his accuser shall not be stained by falsehood, admits that he is Conrad the Corsair, and leaves it to be inferred that he is the son of the late Count. Ezzelin, who has sworn to kill Lara at hand for ever, and departs, accompanied by Gulnare and his old and faithful servant. The denouement is singularly flat and unsatisfactory, and the story is left in a most unfinished state. Lara's previous career life is a clumsy device. He dreams a dream of one of his former victims, and this is the only explanation of his wild career. The dialogue is mostly commonplace, and reminds us very agreeably of Auber. The concerted pieces are, however, admirably suited for action and animation. The airs are melodious and expressive, and the instrumentation throughout is highly accomplished and effective. The character of Camilla was sustained by Miss Romer, who made a most interesting début. Her voice, which is excellent in a fine person and pleasing manner, has a pure soprano voice, of admirable quality, and she sings like an accomplished artist. She often reminded us of the celebrated relative, who was long the prima donna of the English musical stage. The part of Gulnare was taken by Miss Poole, who, by Mr. Renwick, Mr. Terrott, Miss Cotterell and Mr. Mme. Burrington, all of whom contributed to the success of the piece.

The Monday Popular Concert of this week derived a peculiar attraction from the first appearance this season of Mdme. Arabella Goddard. She received a most hearty welcome, and her performances were applauded with the usual enthusiasm. Beethoven's Sonata, in F, No. 2, and one of the lovely compositions of that great old master, whose works, by-the-way, our fair pianist has been mainly instrumental in introducing to the notice of the public. The Sonata forte part of Mendelssohn's trio in D minor, the other parts being played by Mr. Henry Blagrove and Mr. Pezze. The instrumental pieces were Spohr's quintet in G major, and Haydn's quartet in C, op. 33. Mdme. Sainton's inimitable "Adelaide" was beautifully sung by Mr. Cummings.

THE THEATRES.

Legitimate tendencies have manifested themselves during the week, but the drama is, we think, likely to rise to a higher level than has been possible for many seasons past. Drury Lane has not yet come out on Monday, but Sadler's Wells reopened and was loudly welcomed by a crowded house. He supported the character of Cardinal Wolsey with a degree of power and force of declamation. We regret, however, to see that the practice continues of mutilating this solemn historical play, which, on the present occasion, terminated with the third act, thus depriving the audience of the sorrows of Queen Katherine and the pageant of the birth and baptism of the infant Elizabeth, the future Protestant Queen of England. The tragedy should be performed in its entirety or not at all. Another step in the right direction was on the same evening made at the Adelphi. Miss Bateman appeared as Julia, in "The Hunchback." Considerable curiosity was excited in regard to the young lady's assumption of this character; and, in some minds, even doubts whether the mechanism of her style, as it has been shown in Leah, would not militate against her success in such a rôle as Julia. The first scene, however, served to dispel these doubts. Miss Bateman invested the character with a girlish simplicity which made it interesting, though not entirely according to the ideal idea of the author. Julia should be recollected, has been peculiarly educated, and has a knowledge of life not usual with girls of her age. Her intellectual precocity is apparent in every speech she utters, and scarcely comports with the air of puzzled apprehension which the actress assumes when she thought fit to assume it. The same remark is carried on in the second act, and lends the supposition of inexperiences as an excuse for the coldness of Julia's attitude to Clifford. The remainder of the part was performed in that level manner which distinguishes so many of the performances that fill a long engagement, accepted as a natural characteristic. For the most part, it avoids the points needful to produce effect in Julia's speeches, and makes whatever portions of dialogue, but nowhere rising into those manifestations of power that shall at once rivet the attention, and, altogether, receives so much of novel illustration from the new cast to which it has been subjected, that, if only on that account, the revival should secure public attention for a considerable period. Though the merits of the performance of Julia are chiefly negative, yet it is only fair to merely played, and the mere attempt at introducing this class of play to these boards is deserving of encouragement.

Among the plays at the Royal Strand that are great favourites with the playgoers there is "The Waits; or, a Christmas-Eve "—a domestic comedy, in four acts, by Tom Taylor; it is perfect in its way, possesses especially attractive. This interesting drama was revived, with new scenery, on Saturday last, and was played by Mr. Rosner as Thomas, Little Joe, was impersonated by Miss Marian Lacy with her usual cleverness. The performance was much applauded throughout.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

Professor Tyndall began his fourth lecture on "Electricity," on Thursday, with some remarks upon the electrical machine employed for the day's experiments, its peculiarity consisting in the introduction of a number of metallic points, which, by discharging the electricity with more readiness than the conductor, prevented its accumulation. After explaining the principles of the electric condenser and discharger, based upon induction and conduction, he proceeded to illustrate the latter principle by means of the Leyden jar, the phenomena of which were observed accidentally by Kleist when endeavoring to electrify water contained in a glass jar held in the cold hand, and was accurately described and explained by Cuneus and Muschenbroek, of Leyden, about the middle of the seventeenth century. In the form of the apparatus now shown to consist of a glass jar with a wide mouth, about four fifths of the outside and inside coated with tinfoil, and the glass stopper with a screw with shellac. A metallic rod, terminating in a ball, descended into the jar and touched the inside coating, while the outside coating communicated with the earth by means of a conductor. When the machine was worked the electricity accumulated in the jar, and the outside coating was charged with positive electricity, while the inside coating, with negative. By means of the connection with the machine was broken, the charges remained; and when momentarily connected by means of a wire bent in the form of a U, the electricities combined with a luminous spark. It was stated that so much electricity could be accumulated in the jar as to be rendered fatal by the violence of the induction. Among other experiments, Dr. Tyndall so placed himself and his assistant on insulating stools that each received the charge of the other coating of the jar. When they joined hands the spark produced produced an explosion. The lecturer then, by a series of the jar series, exhibited Franklin's cascade battery, and also explained and put in action the electric eyelet-hole puncher. The latter apparatus, he said, was not of any use, but was merely a toy. The next experiment illustrated the rapidity of the electric discharge by sending it through a wire which was nearly eleven miles long. The operation took place only when the discharge was retarded. The lecture was concluded with the illustration of the electric light, produced by the passage of sparks between the coloure summed by it when sent through vacuum tubes containing minute quantities of rarefied air or gas. The beautiful colours of the aurora borealis were attributed to a similar cause.

General Sir Charles Pasley gave the Friday evening discourse on the 27th ult., his subject being "The Results of Connellan Disappointment in Submarine Blasting." In stating that no time was to need to defend the students of concellcan inscriptions from the charge of being either visionaries or enthusiasts, he reminded their professors had been conferred upon him by authorities in Britain and on the Continent. He then referred to the recent submarine explosions, which established the correctness of the exercitaens of the method adopted in interpreting the characters; and stated that Mr. Taylor, the assistant secretary to the Admiralty, had presented to the Chief Engineer's office figures and tablets of the time of Tiglath-Pileser, about 1110 and 1100 years before the birth of Christ. Sir Charles Pasley, he admitted, however, that there was a considerable danger in the estimates based upon the Assyrian conjectures, giving, as an instance, the erroneous supposition that Sir Henry Rawlinson, in his work on Cuneiform Inscriptions, had ascribed to the Assyrians the knowledge of the use of gunpowder, and of slaves, house, lands, and cattle, &c., grammatical lists, vocabularies of words, and tables of the proportions of weights and measures, the division of the year into months, the appointment of the governors of provinces, and actions, agricultural treasuries, and reports of the proceedings to incite attention to these objects, were a system of writing, and proceeding to incite attention to these objects, would treasuries, or Babylon, which may justly claim to be the progenitors of Sir Charles Pasley then read Mr. Fox Talbot, Esq., F.R.S., translation, and in the chair.

Professor Marshall's second lecture "On the Nervous System," given on Saturday last, was devoted to the consideration of the structure, composition, and properties of the nerve cells, and to explanations of the various experiments and preparations. The microscope (he said) above nerve cells to be of a globular form, and that the nerve fibres had formed processes issuing from them; the structural arrangements resembling a candelabrum with its branches and stem, which represented the primitive fibres. In medullary substance, and the essential central axis, corresponding to the conducting tube of the electric telegraph. Experiments have proved the existence in living nerve substance of static currents, and of ana and cata currents (the methods of which the lecturer said) were applied to the human body, and to the nerves of animals. A peculiar property of nerve fibres, flexibility, slight great inherent elasticity, and extensibility, including the deflection of a forming a number of latitude experiments, including the deflection of a magnetic needle, were shown, &c. Dr. Tyndall also showed how the primary electric current in a wire can excite a secondary current in an adjacent wire, which also can excite a tertiary, by which also a fourth may be produced. In illustration of this, wire was fixed by a secondary, and gun-cotton burnt by a tertiary, current. The rapidity of the passage of the electric discharge was illustrated, and stated to be swifter than light, being above 200,000 miles per second. Examples of the disruptive power of the electric discharge were exhibited in the cases of trees struck.

On Friday evening next, the 10th inst., the discourse will be given by W. G. Palgrave, Esq., "On Arabia."

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

FRANCES ANNE MARCHIONESS OF LONDONDERRY.

Frances Anne Marchioness of Londonderry, the great beloved of the Vanes and the Tempests, died at Seaham Hall, near Sunderland, on the 6th ult. Her Ladyship was at the period of her decease just sixty-five years of age, having been born on the 18th of January, 1800. She was only child and heiress of Sir Henry Vane, second Baronet of Hutton, Yorkshire, and of Anne Louisa Catherine, daughter of Lord Newton, in the county of Durham, who assumed, by Act of Parliament, in 1823, additional surname and arms of Vane, through his mother, Frances Anne Vane, the Tempest of Wynyard, and who died in 1854, having had issue by her husband, besides the subject of this memoir, a son, Sir Henry Vane-Tempest, Bart., who married, in 1826, Lady Adelaide Emelina Charlotte, born Jan. 31, 1830, and married to the Rev. Francis Henry Law, Vicar of Lullington, Derbyshire. The late Marchioness of Londonderry, during the lifetime of her husband occupied a prominent position in fashionable society. This privilege was facilitated by the possession, during the London season, and the autumnal festivities at Wynyard Park, Durham, were unsurpassed in liberality by any other family of distinction in the kingdom. Her Ladyship was also many years one of the influential patronesses of the ball at Almack's. Since the death of her husband, in March, 1854, the Marchioness of Londonderry devoted the chief portion of her attention to the improvement of her extensive estates in the county of Durham, in Ireland, and to promoting the comforts of those resident on her property, as well as the cultivation of their families.

VISCOUNTESS HAWARDEN.

Clementina Elphinstone, wife of Cornwallis, present Viscount Hawarden, died at the family residence in Prince's-gardens, on the 16th ult., after a short illness. The deceased lady was the eldest daughter and coheiress of the late Admiral the Hon. Charles Elphinstone-Fleming, M.P.; and, through her great-grandmother, Lady Clementina Fleming, wife of Charles, the last Earl Elphinstone, was senior representative and heiress general of the great house of Fleming. She was born in 1824, married in 1847, and survived, Earl of Perth. She married, March 22, 1848, the present Viscount Hawarden (then the Hon. Cornwallis Maude), by whom she leaves seven a numerous and youthful family. The deceased Viscountess was in her forty-third year.

SIR FRANCIS BOOTT LEGARD, BART.

This Baronet died, at Muskets, at the early age of thirty-one, on the 6th ult.

He was the eldest son of the late Sir Thomas Digby Legard, eighth Baronet, of Garton, in the county of York, by the Hon. Frances Boscawen, his wife, daughter of Charles, Lord Feversham, and succeeded, at the date of his father, December, 1860, to a baronetcy which dates from the coronation of King James I., and is in the representation of a Yorkshire family, which was of ancient Norman descent. The Legards, Knights of Digby, as constantly borne by the Legards, was derived from the marriage of Sir Simon, the fourth Baronet, with Frances, daughter and heiress of Sir Robert Digby, Knt. The late Baronet, who was a lieutenant of the 2nd Dragoon Guards, and is succeeded by his next brother, now Sir D'Arcy Wedderburn Legard, fourth Baronet, of Garton.

J. B. NEILSON, C.E., T.B.S.

Mr. Neilson, of Queenhill, who died recently, was a distinguished man, having played a very important part in the industrial progress of Scotland, as well as of other nations, during the last half century. He was the inventor of the hot blast, a discovery of great value, which revolutionised the iron trade and added largely to the sources of wealth and happiness throughout the world. The inventor himself had especially reaped the benefit of his genius, for the invention has given to the development of its mineral treasures during the last twenty years. Mr. Neilson's hot blast was immediately adopted in the ironworks of Wales, and was soon introduced into the United States of America, and was even practised in India. Mr. Neilson was a native of Shettleston, near Glasgow. His career was interrupted by ill-health, owing to the vicissitudes of men. He was born in 1792, and was brought up as a working mechanic. Mr. Neilson had been a widower for many years, and his wife predeceased him. He has left a numerous family to lament his loss.

M. KERSTEN.

M. Pierre Kersten, the oldest and most esteemed member of the Belgian press, died on the 1st ult., at Liège. M. Kersten began his career as a journalist with the late Count de Jouvet, in 1815, and his connection with him lasted throughout the rest of his life. In the offices of his Courrier de la Meuse he was constantly seen between the years 1815 and 1830, a literary witness to the fall of the Dutch Government. M. Kersten has ever since maintained the same patriotic attitude.

The Dowager Countess of Dundonald died at Boulogne on Wednesday week. Mr. W. Lee, a member of the Institute of Actuaries, died at Hampstead on the 22nd ult., aged fifty-five.

Mr. Edmund Saxby, secretary to the Royal College of Surgeons of England for more than half a century, died on Monday morning, aged seventy-five.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will of the Right Hon. John Thomas Manners Sutton, Baron Sutton, of Buntingsdale, was proved in her Majesty's Court of Probate, on the 27th ult. The executors are the testator's brother, the executors and trustees appointed being his Lordship's cousin, John Henry Manners Sutton, Esq., of Kelham Hall; Charles Augustus Tollemache, Esq., of Hiverton; and James Edward Dashwood, Esq., of the Foreign Office, Downing-street. The will is dated July 29, 1863, and is entirely in the testator's own handwriting. His Lordship died on Nov. 14, at Hastings, at the age of forty-six. He succeeded to the title in 1842. His Lordship was the only son of the first Baron, who was grandson of the third Duke of Rutland, and was for many years Lord Chancellor of Ireland. The testator bequeaths his property, which is not less than the two pieces of plate which were presented to his late father, Thomas Lord Manners, by the Grand Juries of the City and County of Dublin, and the officers of the Royal Regiment of Dragoons in Ireland. The testator and his children he has left the sum of £10,000. To Lady Manners, who is provided for under settlement, he bequeaths the remainder of his property, to be held together with his carriages, horses, the house in Portman-square, with the furniture, pictures, plate, &c., and such plate as she may select from Kelham.

The will of Major-General William Nepean, in her Majesty's service, formerly of Bengal, who died at Bath, on the 3rd ult., was proved on the 20th inst., at the Principal Registry, under £4,000. The testator bequeaths his property to his brother-in-law, Sir Charles Yorke, G.C.B.; his son, the Rev. Evan Nepean; and his daughter, Miss Anne Maria Nepean. The personalty was sworn under £4,000. This gallant military officer was in the 76th Regiment in 1799, and in 1800 became a brevet-major. He was appointed major of the 76th in 1803, and became lieutenant-colonel of the same regiment in 1804. He was made a brevet-colonel in 1813, and became major-general in 1825. He was appointed colonel of the 76th Regiment in 1837, and died on the 8th of December last. To his son he leaves all his plate, and to his only daughter and her husband all his wines and drinking-cup; all the rest of his plate, together with a silver vessel for holding fruit-water, he leaves to his executors, to be also borne to the use of the limes. The rest of his property he directs to be divided equally between his son and daughter, whom he appoints executors and trustees. The will was attested by J. C. Hughes and E. Noble.

The will of John Arnold, Esq., of Great Barford, Bedfordshire, and of Abergavenny-street, Cavendish, was proved in the London Court by his only daughter, Miss Anne Fanny Arnold, the sole executrix. The personalty was sworn under £60,000. The will bears date February, 1862, and he has left £1,000 to Miss Arnold. The testator gives an annuity to Elizabeth Arnold, and his cousin, Charles Edward Ogilvie. The testator has left many legacies, in which he has remembered his cousins, his nephews, his nieces, his cousins, and other relatives and friends; also his clerk, warehouseman, and servants. All legacies to be paid free of legacy duty. His freehold estate at Peterborough he devises to his nephew, Edward Arnold; all the rest of his freeholds, together with his personal property, he leaves to his said daughter, whom he has appointed residuary legatee. There are the following charitable bequests:—To the Domestic Mission, £1000; the Ragged School Society, Spitalfields, £100; Bedford Infirmary, £100; the Royal Benevolent Institution of Great Barford, £1000, the interest to be expended annually in coals and clothing for the poor of that parish.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

W. Finkelhuijsen.—Yes. There appears to have been a second misprint. Another letter has been dispatched this week, which, it is hoped, will be more fortunate.

W. Pugh (Sheffield).—They shall be examined forthwith. The other poems received will be very carefully considered.

C. M. E.—No problem in early pending. At first view, Black seems to have an advantage; but we doubt if he can win without the assistance of a Pawn.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1691 received from Rev. G. Nicholson, Barnard Castle; Rev. Wolfe Barry, Woodbridge; and Rhodesia, which appeared in our last Number. It appears to us more than the advance of the B by Black to his fourth square that the benefit of inserting this last plan in the Evans's is really due; but we are very much obliged to him for this additional proof of the unsatisfactory nature of our 'authorised' opinion.

PETER, A. M.—Very creditable as a first attempt.

ALPHA and OMEGA.—Your solution of No. 1691 was received because it exhibited of a variation in the Evans's which had escaped the notice of the many correspondents who sent us the original. No. 1691 is, of course, unsound.

CUTHBERT.—We cannot undertake to answer problems; they should be forwarded to the offices of the publication mentioned. It is not certainly to be relied on the stipulated conditions.

SCIENTIFIC NEWS.

Mr. Alexander Herschel, with the help of Mr. Browning, the maker of the Kew instrument, has produced a new spectroscope, possessing great power and excellent definition for direct vision, being composed of only two prisms of dense flint glass. We are informed that this instrument, although not yet fitted for stellar analyses, may be made quite equal to Steinheil's. With a magnifying power of five only, the dark lines of the spectrum are seen with great distinctness and in extraordinary number.

A portion of Dr. Wm. Rutherford's thesis on the cephalopus (or cuttle) of commercial value, for which he received a gold medal from the University of Edinburgh, appears in the new number of the Journal of the Linnean Society, illustrated by a plate and woodcuts. The peculiar construction of this organ is described to consisting of two layers of fibres running in an oblique direction, crossing each other like the threads in the meshes of a muslin and beautiful arrangements for the rapid transmission of food to the stomach, and giving greater efficiency than is required by muscles.

Dr. A. Carte, in a contribution to the Dublin Geological Society, has endeavoured to explain the extraordinary existence of Tufa lakes in Ireland. He described some bones discovered at Leugh Gur, in Limerick, and the characteristic existence of the Irish elk, although it belonged to the Pelar bear (Ursus maritimus), and therefore proposes to add to their name the term "subfossil." Mr. Wynne Edwards, C.E., referred, in the way of comparison, were lent to him by the Earl of Enniskillen, who personally obtained them from the celebrated cave of Castleconnell and Guilcaunella, in Limerick.

At a recent meeting of the Chemical Society Mr. G. B. Buckton exhibited a specimen of the uranium sesquioxide from one of the neighbourhood of the Saffront of Tuscany, and of which 10 per cent consists of sulphate of uranium. He reported that this substance had been formed artificially by passing a mixture of sulphuretted hydrogen, air and steam, through a heated mixture of the oxide of uranium and charcoal. In the crude mass, the sulphur was oxydised, and the nascent hydrogen combined with nitrogen, forming ammonia.

Mr. R. H. Allnatt, to whose methods of testing for ozone we drew attention some time since, has written to the Times as a reference to the relation between ozone and ozonometer. He refers to the existence of ozone in a state of dilution far removed from the presence of ordinary oxygen in one direction as ozone is in the other, and therefore to be pointed to it as the only true test of ozonometric indications—the latter reference to the action of ozonide and nitrosonide combinations—the latter being the only ozonometer which has been found to be reliable. Experiments on Jan. 1, 2, and 3, 1865, are recorded, and manifested, each in its turn, previously discovered were reduced to nearly their original white. After referring to similar phenomena noted by Dr. Schönbein, he asks, "Are ozonide addition and three direct manifestations? Does there exist positive atmospheric ozonides, and have we found one of them?"

The Actiscope, an apparatus recently exhibited at the Royal Institution by Professor Tyndall, and by Mr. Ladd at the Polytechnic, to illustrate the phenomenon called esoteric seen in some specimens of urine and other secretions, consists of a cylinder of glass on which there are ruled with a diamond point 1·20th of an inch apart. These are set in brass mouldings, so that the liver may be placed in the centre. The image of a point of light through this a rhythic appearance was seen, the number of rays being always double that of the divisions in which the lines were ruled. It is in consequence of the lines being at perfectly regular distances, each ray was beautifully illustrated by the phenomenon. The apparatus is not, however, not only the phenomenon of interference, but also showed very beautifully the production of colour by interference. By using one set of lines it becomes apparent that the rhythic appearance is produced by a number of rays, which are themselves produced by the bending of the light at the edges of the lines (the diffraction fringes).

Dr. Marcet's remarks on the brine of salt meat and on the distribution of albumen through muscular tissue appear in the new number of the Journal of the Chemical Society. Dr. Marcet, in November, 1862, he began the use of Professor Graham's process of dialysis as a method of separating albumen from the salts with which it is usually associated, and after putting the process in practice for thirty-six hours, he found a strong taste of soup, and hardly distinguishable from soup made in the ordinary way. As the albumen was separated from the salts existing in food in Lancashire, but it proved to be deficient in the crystalline constituents as well as in the salts—the phosphates, lactates, and kreatine which are present in the flesh, and which pass into the brine, being not while the latter are retained. Dr. Marcet's experiments show that sanguine hopes held out in regard to the utilisation of brine some time ago as popular writers, by the restoration of albumen containing brine with a concentrated solution of chloride of zinc, and thereby obtaining lactate of zinc and the double chloride of zinc and albumen, which, when dried, is not acted on by the large proportion of albumen contained in brine. His paper contains also a notice of the fact that albumen is distributed through the muscular fibre of sheep and ox in different proportions, having how much is diffused and thereby. His also describes a method of mixing meat by including it on phosphates, &c., which are lost in the common process. The meat so prepared was found to have a more delicious wholesome and richer flavour, and was suited by direct immersion in brine.

Interesting details of the annular eclipse of the sun, on the 30th of October last, witnessed and described by M. E. Mouchez, near Ice St. Domingo, are published in the Comptes Rendus of the Academy of Sciences, and printed in the Comptes Rendus, tom. 60, No. 3. We select a few interesting facts. The sky was very favourable, and the observations were made with precision. At the first contact (at 10h. 5m.), M. Mouchez perceived the penumbra of the moon on the circumference of the moon, then being distinctly marked on the notched edges of the sun's disc. At the second contact (at 0h. 43m.), when the moon was entirely on the sun's disc, there appeared two luminous traits, and the little bright point, separated by three black lines from the luminous circumference of the sun, from which luminous traits and the complete formation of the ring. The third contact (at 3h. 24m.) presented the same luminous trait, divided by two lines of shade, corresponding to the circumference remained at the moment of immersion. In four seconds the penis disappeared, and the complete rupture of the ring was effected. The fourth contact was very well observed, in consequence of the partial obscuration of the sky. The temperature fell rapidly during the progress of the eclipse, and the barometer, indicating the atmospheric pressure that M. Mouchez attributed the rising of the fog into the upper regions of the air, which appeared to the observer to become world be completely dissolved over. The appearance of the moon projected on the disc of the sun presented a singular and interesting spectacle. The moon's disc was perfectly well defined, the centre of the moon appeared very obscure; but soon afterwards the disc appeared to be surrounded by a luminous ring, which was very bright. The period when the ring was beginning to be of the same intensity throughout the entire circumference formed the subject of the last observation. M. Mouchez carried out millimetres.

By a letter from Shetland, in the Aberdeen Free Press, we learn that since the commencement of the herring fishery in the sea (round Shetland) have swarmed with the small fish known as "sillocks" to a degree unequalled for many years. Vessels from all parts have been engaged in the localised and trolling them up on the beach in heaps, literally like peat-stacks in size, prepared for the manure market. Many of the fish are of large size, and the people have been making as much as £1 a day.

A curious present has been exchanged to a chief of the Huns has recently been found in a tumulus at Khatoussoulow, in Russia. Among the different articles found in the tumulus was a gold cup, in the shape of a satchel of ancient Roman workmanship; a large collar, bracelets, and drinking-cups, ornamented with figures of animals, the whole of which are of gold of remarkable workmanship.

The Royal Horticultural Society are given by a Florence journal of the Hall of Five Hundred, where ulterations are in progress for the reception of the Italian Parliament. The semicircular shape of the assembly and the members' seats are to stand are already finished. The hemicycle slopes off in a point by means of benches rising one above the other, and is divided from the hustle end, that being considered the best form for the royal distribution of sound. The President's chair is placed against the wall in front of the tribune, with the exception of those of Michael Angelo and Gian Bologna, which now occupy the niches on each side of the tribune, and which will be left as they are. Until are also being made for the Senate's hall to prepare the old hall of the Court of Appeal for the reception of the Senate.

The Moniteur publishes a letter from Marietto-Bey, a savant in the service of the Viceroy of Egypt, announcing the discovery of the tomb of Mentu-hot-ef. At Asphis I have discovered a magnificent sarcophagus of the tablet of Mentu-hot-ef, the son of Queen Ameneritis, the sister of Shabaka, the Ethiopian king who reigned over Egypt. The sarcophagus is of alabaster, and is 2m. 50c. long. The first thing of the first dynasty on Manetho's list is at once found. From Mentu-hot-ef to Psammetichus I. fifty-three kings are found in all the dynasties. The first six are represented therein. We are next introduced to Psammetichus I., whose reign is known to be the shortest period of the whole history from the end of the sixth dynasty to the beginning of the eleventh. From the eleventh to the twenty-sixth dynasty the new name Shabaka does not yet figure during the reign of Thoutmes, Amenophis, and the first Rhamses. It is only in the time of Sethos that everything is known; new, at least find in it a valuable confirmation of Manetho's list, and in the Ethiopian dynasty, which reigned over Egypt from 715 to 666 before Christ. Marietto gives all credit to his own efforts, even to whatever criticism it weakens the results we obtain. The new tablet of Asphis is, moreover, the completest and best-preserved monument we possess in this respect. Its style is splendid, and there is not a single cartouche or escutcheon wanting. It has been found engraved on one of the walls of a small chamber in the large temple of Asphis, which we are still engaged in extricating from the rubbish which covers it. Opposite the same field is perceived on another tablet, making an offering to 130 other personages, who, this time, personify the names or countries of the conquered provinces and subdued races of Egypt. On one side of the valuable chamber we have just discovered we do not the representation of the history, on the other of the geography, of Egypt.

CRAMER'S ENGLISH PIANETTE. 22 guineas. Cramer and Co. manufacture this capital small instrument. It has all the requisites of the best Pianoforte—check action, solid touch, agreeable tone. The case is of polished ash or pine. In practising on this Pianoforte the fingers of the player will be strengthened much more rapidly than on an old instrument loose in the key and worn in the hammer. In rosewood or walnut, 26 and 28 guineas.
Purchasers are particularly requested to observe that this instrument has not the common or single action, but the double or check action ; and that Cramer and Co. were the original manufacturers.

BROADWOOD'S NEW DRAWING-ROOM GRAND, price 135 guineas in Rosewood, and 165 guineas in Walnut.—CRAMER and CO. (Limited) beg to direct attention to these extremely elegant and greatly admired new Pianofortes. Cramer and Co. have selected the very finest specimens, and they will be found to fulfil all the requirements of the most fastidious performer. The prices the same as those charged by the manufacturers themselves—the public having the advantage of the very choicest instruments. These Pianofortes may be had on Cramer and Co.'s system of hire, which after three years gives the instrument to the hirer without further payment.—Pianoforte Gallery (the largest in Europe), 207 and 209, Regent-street.

ERARD'S NEW BOUDOIR GRANDS, in Rosewood, 135 guineas ; in Walnut, 155 guineas.—CRAMER and CO. have selected from the manufactories of these celebrated makers the most perfect instruments, both as regards tone and touch, that have yet been produced. They are very greatly in advance of the older class of instruments, and come very near the power and fulness of the largest grand. These Pianofortes may be had on Cramer and Co.'s system of hire, which after three years gives the instrument to the hirer without further payment.—Pianoforte Gallery (the largest in Europe), 207 and 209, Regent-street.

CRAMER and CO. LET on HIRE new COTTAGE PIANOFORTES, by Broadwood, Collard, and Erard, at from 20 to 25 guineas per annum, and at the end of three years the instrument becomes the property of the hirer without further payment. Hire paid quarterly.—Pianoforte Gallery (the largest in Europe), 207 and 209, Regent-street.

CRAMER and CO. (in answer to numerous inquiries) beg to intimate that they extend their system of three year's hire to all parts of the United Kingdom, satisfactory references and a quarter's hire in advance being the only indispensable preliminaries.—Pianoforte Gallery (the largest in Europe), 207 and 209, Regent-street.

INDIAN PIANOFORTES.—CRAMER and CO. (Limited) manufacture for India a superior COTTAGE PIANOFORTE, in solid mahogany, with metallic bracings, and all other appliances necessary to resist the effect of extreme climates. Unusual skill and attention are bestowed upon the manufacture of these instruments, which, for their excellent quality of tone and durability, have obtained the highest commendation. Cramer and Co. deliver these instruments, f. o. b., packed in cases lined with zinc, at any home port, for 50 guineas. Size :—Height, 3 ft. 11½ in. width, 4 ft. 4¼ in. ; depth, 2 ft. 1½ in.

OSWEGO
Puddings, Custards, Blancmanges, &c.,
Manufactured and Perfected by
T. KINGSFORD and SON,
of Oswego, State of New York.
It is the original preparation from the farina of maize, established 1848, commands the highest price from the trade, and offers the best value to the consumer.
It is stronger than any of the imitations, has a finer grain, and is more delicate.
The Oswego has the natural golden tinge, and not the chalk white produced by artificial process.
KEEN, ROBINSON, BELLVILLE, and CO., London.

LETTERS PATENT, 1823. PRIZE MEDAL, 1862.
ROBINSON'S PATENT GROATS is the most valuable preparation for making pure and delicate gruel. Modern chemistry has shown that this food is easy of digestion and rich in nutriment.
ROBINSON'S PATENT BARLEY makes a delicious custard-pudding, directions for which have been given by Mons. C. E. Francatelli. It is appreciated as a non-inflammatory drink, is excellent for mothers nursing, and has long been used with great success for rearing children by hand.
KEEN, ROBINSON, BELLVILLE, and CO., London.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 1301.—VOL. XLVI. SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1865. WITH A SUPPLEMENT, FIVEPENCE

THE OPENING OF PARLIAMENT.

THE Imperial Parliament commenced its seventh and last Session on Tuesday last. The feeling with which the event was anticipated and witnessed by the public contrasts very strikingly with that elicited by the parallel event of last year. Then, the nation looked forward with intense excitement to the occasion. The momentous question of peace or war with Germany was in suspense, and none could foretell with certainty—perhaps not even her Majesty's Government—which way the balance would turn. Ominous rumours had, during the preceding six weeks, been filtering through the various channels of political gossip into the public mind. The invasion of Schleswig by the allied troops of Austria and Prussia had just occurred. Altogether, the aspect was gloomy, and the signs of the day pointed in the direction of a war, the objects of which could not interest the country; the cost of which, both in life and treasure, and in commercial, social, and moral derangement, would be incalculable; and the possible results of which not even the boldest seer could venture to foreshadow. The meeting of Parliament was anticipated with a throbbing heart; and never before, perhaps, was the Royal Speech listened to with more eager or anxious interest. When it was ascertained that neither of the great parties in the State recognised any necessity for armed interference by England in the Dano-German struggle, a great gasp of relief attested the volume of anxious feeling which had been pent up in the national bosom; and although there was thereafter much to excite curiosity and to keep sympathy alive, apprehension of a dire and immeasurable calamity had passed away.

This year Parliament was opened under exactly opposite conditions. There is nothing upon the continent of Europe to give immediate uneasiness to the public mind—even the ground-swell following upon a storm being unusually trifling—and the slight ruffling of the surface caused by recent airs from the West showing abatement rather than increase. Not a soul counted upon having fears in regard to the possible relations of this country with foreign Powers either confirmed or dispelled by Ministerial explanations, for the very sufficient reason that no one harboured any fears. Men do not expect thunderbolts to fall from a clear blue sky, and therefore do not gaze wistfully up into it as if they did. Neither was the Session inaugurated by any great popular excitement on domestic questions. There has been no change in the Government during the recess—there does not promise to be. Political parties, it is true, approximate to an equality; and there will no doubt be smart scuffles between the ins and the outs; but the great outside public, judging that no national interest of appreciable magnitude is involved, looks forward to the fray without excitement. There are weighty questions to be discussed and settled; but, happily, the most important of them will neither invite nor tolerate party conflicts. As to reform of the representation, it has been generally taken for granted that it will be talked about, not so much with a view to settlement as to the general election, and that the House of Commons being moribund there will be a far greater proportion than usual of "buncombe." This state of affairs took from the reassembling of Parliament even its ordinary gloss and sparkle. The event was awaited by such as did not wholly forget that it was at hand without impatience, because without expectation—a fact which may bear a favourable or unfavourable interpretation in regard to the future of the country according to the point of view from which it is contemplated.

Of the state ceremonial there is little to be said. When the three Estates meet under the same roof, the pageant, although extremely simple, is brilliant, and is elevated to grandeur by the historical atmosphere which surrounds it. When, as on Tuesday last, only two of them are present—the first being represented by a Commission—the meeting requires a high degree of popular excitement to invest it with interest. The absence of her Majesty, the singular stagnation of political feeling, and the dreary, drizzling, spirit-depressing state of the weather united to give an aspect of desolation to what has usually been the most imposing of our national solemnities. The scene was typical. This Parliament was entering upon "the last scene of all," and the appointed term beyond which it cannot live was within its view. It cannot evade its rapidly-approaching dissolution. It will soon have to render up its account. The business before it is mainly to shape its affairs for the melancholy event which must shortly ensue. It has neither time nor remaining vigour to redeem lost opportunities, nor to repair past errors. Its character, such as it is, is fixed and irreversible. It seems appropriate that it should enter upon its last stage of being with as little external pomp as may be, and that the character of its last inaugural rites should incline rather to the funereal than the gay. Such, in fact, was the case.

The Royal Message did nothing to break the quiet of the occasion. It announced nothing which was not already so well known as to have been dismissed to the cells of memory. It struck no great chord of national feeling. It excited no emotion. It elicited no heart-heaving response. As a literary composition, it was what literary compositions usually are when concocted by several hands, and when the chief object is to use as many words as may be decorous for the occasion without conveying more meaning than is likely to pass unquestioned. Its purport was what Lord Derby aptly described as "innocuous." So far as foreign policy is concerned, it commended itself to "placid" reception in three respects. It expressed confidence in the continuance of peace in Europe. It renewed a pledge of "steadfast neutrality" towards the contending sections of the American people. It sanctioned the project of uniting in a single confederacy the various British provinces of North America. So far, therefore, lack of stirring incident in the Message is really matter for congratulation. The domestic policy shadowed forth was not a whit more exciting, while it was immeasurably less important. A concentration of law courts into one building, a revision of statute law, an alteration of the law of patents, the giving equitable jurisdiction to county courts in small cases, certain amendments of the law regulating the relief of the poor, and a measure for improving public schools may be useful and even necessary, but they certainly do not make up an ambitious programme. The Message was one which the Lord Chancellor might read without derogating from its claim to the attention of Parliament. Of very secondary importance, it was not spoiled by flowing from a secondary source.

The debates on the Address in answer to the Message were in perfect keeping with the proceedings which they followed. That in the House of Lords was enlivened by good humour—a sort of dead level of platitude with a play of genial wit upon it. Lord Derby, happily recovered from serious indisposition, was jocose. Lord Granville, catching the infection, threw around the little he had to say an air of jesting pleasantry. Lord Russell, conscious of a heavier responsibility, was cautious and conciliatory. The discussion, if discussion it can be called, consisted of a little gamesome sparring with the gloves on; merely by way, it may be supposed, of keeping the hand in. In the House of Commons the evening was about as dreary as a tea-party at which no amusements are permitted and no topic of conversation about which anybody cares a groat is forthcoming. The introductory formalities—the moving and seconding of the Address—being over, there followed that sort of awkward pause which commonly reveals the fact that nobody has got anything particular to say. The leader of the Opposition was silent—unprepared, we may conjecture, to waste his sarcasms upon the small game within range. If Mr. Scully had not risen and got up a little rehearsal of an Irish shindy, it seems likely that the debate would have been nothing more than a flash in the pan. Fortunately, the Queen's Message contained a few words relative to the condition of the sister isle, and, nothing better offering, the hon. member for Cork struck a key-note which he well knew would unlock many voices. Nevertheless, the slight scuffle that ensued was extremely languid, and looked more like a pastime than a real fight. It was interrupted once or twice by a laudable attempt to draw attention to other matters of more general interest. But nothing succeeded in waking up the House, nor in stirring the Premier. The Address was voted in time for dinner.

Not within our memory has there been so spiritless an opening of Parliament. Whether it foreshadows what the Session is to be, is a question upon which we would rather not commit ourselves by giving an opinion. At present there are no elements of serious political contention within view; and a moribund representative body commonly cares more about doing the agreeable to constituents than about the legislative work set before it. Last days, however, are not always peaceful days. Time alone can show whether they will be so in the present instance.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

A dinner was given at the Tuileries last week to the municipal Councillors and Mayors of the twenty arrondissements of Paris.

On Tuesday week a ball was given at the English Embassy. The diplomatic world and the great functionaries of State were represented by persons of the highest station.

The invitations for the ball to be given by Prince Napoleon and Princess Clotilde have been issued. The fête is to take place to-day (Saturday), and about 1500 invitations have been sent out.

La France announces that, after a sitting of the Privy Council, presided over by the Emperor, in which Prince Napoleon and the Minister of Public Instruction warmly supported the principle of an entirely gratuitous elementary education, the Emperor appointed a commission, with the Prince at its head, to work out the financial details of the project.

The same journal states that the draught of an important law has been submitted to the Council of State. Its object is to fix the term of office of the municipal councillors at nine years, and a third of that body are to be elected every three years.

Wednesday's Moniteur publishes an article explaining the nature of banking and discount in a popular manner.

Thursday's Moniteur says:—"The Minister for Foreign Affairs, in compliance with instructions from the Emperor, has requested M. de Sartiges to complain of the two letters addressed by the Papal Nuncio to the Bishop of Orleans and the Bishop of Poictiers. These letters appeared in the newspapers, and constitute an infraction both of international law and of the public law of France. The same paper publishes the decree citing the Bishops of Moulins and of Besançon before the Council of State for having committed an abuse of their ecclesiastical authority. It also publishes the report of M. L'Anglais upon this decree.

The annual public meeting of the Academy of Sciences for the distribution of prizes will take place, on Monday next—General Morin presiding.

The Civil Tribunal of the Seine gave its judgment, yesterday week, relative to the suit of the Montmorency family against Count de Talleyrand-Périgord, by declaring itself incompetent to try the case on its merits, seeing that the assumption of the title in question has been made in virtue of an Imperial decree, the legality or bearing of which the tribunal had no jurisdiction to determine. It therefore left the parties to seek their remedy before another Court and condemned the plaintiffs to pay all costs.

Butter is selling in Paris at four francs a pound, and provisions generally are enormously dear.

The population of Paris is 1,667,841, which, with the garrison of 28,300, makes 1,696,141.

The mother of Jules Gérard has written and published a very affecting letter, in which she describes herself, at the age of eighty years, entirely without resources, and intrusted with the charge of the four young and fatherless children of the celebrated lion-hunter. Their mother, equally unable to support them, has been compelled to accept a situation. Subscriptions for their relief are open at the French gun-maker's, Devisme, Boulevard des Italiens.

M. F. de St. Jean, a retired merchant of Havre, who died there a few days ago at the age of seventy-six, has left a will by which he makes that town his universal legatee on two conditions—the first, that 300,000f. of the property shall be devoted to the founding of an asylum for necessitous Protestants at Havre; and the second, that a similar sum shall be given from it for the same purpose to a town in the north of France.

The Moniteur explicitly contradicts the reports which have lately been in circulation regarding the cession of Mexican provinces to France.

SPAIN.

The Ministry having obtained a large majority in the election of the members of the committee appointed by the Congress to examine the bill for the forced loan, it is believed that no change in the Cabinet will take place.

The Epoca of Madrid states that the official reports of the Spanish Admiral in the Pacific show that there is a probability of the Peruvian difficulty being peacefully arranged.

The official Gazette publishes a decree authorising the establishment of an International Credit Company.

The frigate Numancia has left for the Pacific.

PORTUGAL.

The King and Queen have returned from Cintra, and are now residing at the Opida.

The reply to the Speech from the Throne has been unanimously voted by both Chambers.

The official Gazette has published the new regulations for the custom-houses of Lisbon and Oporto.

Much rain has fallen, and the Douro and Tagus have flooded their banks.

ITALY.

King Victor Emmanuel left Turin for Florence yesterday week, accompanied by General Della Marmora. Turin was excited, but quiet. He was enthusiastically received at Alessandria. The King reached Florence at ten o'clock the same night. The city was illuminated, and decorated with flags. A large number of persons thronged the King's line of route to the palace and enthusiastically cheered his Majesty. The National Guard alone were under arms. Shouts were raised of "Viva il Rè Galantuomo!" On reaching the palace the King came out on the balcony in response to the acclamations of the people.

Several municipalities in Piedmont have voted addresses to the King.

His Majesty has signed the bill for the sale of the State railways.

In order to secure to the city of Turin direct railway communication with the Mediterranean, the Government has granted a guarantee of 6 per cent on the capital of the lines between Turin, Savona, and Acqui.

Advices from Turin announce that the Council of Ministers have resolved upon establishing a naval station in the Gulf of Mexico and the Pacific, and that a frigate, a corvette, and a dispatch-boat are now being armed at Genoa for that service.

A despatch from Messina announces that an eruption of Mount Etna took place during the night of Jan. 31, after several shocks of earthquake. The lava continues flowing.

AUSTRIA.

The Neue Freie Presse of Thursday says:—"An agreement has been entered into between the Minister of Finance and the Credit Society, in order to provide for the payment of the eleven millions of florins due to the National Bank by the State on the 14th inst. According to this agreement, eleven members of the Administrative Council of the bank will each draw at three months upon the Credit Society for one million of florins. These bills will be accepted by the Society and discounted by the National Bank."

PRUSSIA.

Prince Alfred left Berlin on Sunday evening for Bonn, on the conclusion of his visit to the Crown Prince and Crown Princess.

The King received Lord Napier, the English Ambassador, at an audience on Monday.

The President and Vice Presidents of the House of Representatives were present at the last Court ball, and were received by the King with evident cordiality. These gentlemen had declined a previous invitation to Court on the plea of sudden indisposition.

The bill brought forward by the Government in the Chamber of Deputies fixes the annual military contingent at the proportion of eleven in every 1000 of the male population.

In Wednesday's sitting of the Chamber of Deputies the Minister of War introduced a bill altering and supplementing by twenty paragraphs the law of Sept. 3, 1814, upon the obligation to military service in Prussia. Under the proposed new regulations the whole term of military service is reduced from nineteen to sixteen years, of which the first seven years are to be served in the regular standing army. Of these seven years the first three must be served with a regiment, and the four following years in the reserve. During the next four years, those having fulfilled the above terms of service will be liable under the first call of the Landwehr, and during the remaining five years to the second call. The first division of the Landwehr will only be called out when the country is in serious danger. Special laws will regulate the service in the Landwehr and in the navy.

The Minister of Marine has requested authority to contract a loan of nine millions of thalers for the construction of a fleet.

The Council of Admirals at Berlin has definitively drawn up its project with regard to the formation of a navy. Seven vessels of war are in course of construction for the Government, two of which will be built at Dantzic and the others abroad. The Council of Admirals has created a large number of new appointments, amongst which may be mentioned that of an admiral and seventeen captains.

As the new military bill makes no concession, the majority of the Chamber of Deputies will not propose an amendment to the Address, but will simply express their regret that such a bill has been introduced. A reconciliation between the Chamber and the Government is considered to be impossible.

At a public meeting of the electors of Cologne a civic crown of silver, representing a wreath of oak-leaves, has been voted to M. de Grabow, President of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies. It was accompanied by an address, of which the subjoined is an extract:—"Your words have resounded throughout the country, and far beyond its frontiers. Everywhere they have received an enthusiastic echo in the hearts of enlightened and independent men, who see in the strict preservation of the constitutional rights of national representation an indispensable guarantee of the general prosperity. Many thanks are due to you for your manly attitude."

AMERICA.

By the Moravian, we have intelligence from New York to the 28th ult.

Mr. Blair had returned to Washington, having, it is said, altogether failed in his peace mission. The Confederate House of Representatives has unanimously confirmed the resolution to issue an address to the Southern people announcing the determination of Congress to continue the war; and at Washington resolutions have been introduced into the Senate in favour of the continuance of the war until the South shall make an unconditional submission. So it is clear that "the end is not yet."

The Federal General Terry had demanded the surrender of Wilmington, giving General Bragg until the 19th inst. to decide. Opinions differ as to whether the Confederates would surrender or defend the place. In the mean time Admiral Porter had occupied all the forts and works abandoned by the enemy, and was feeling his way up the river.

A Confederate squadron, composed of three ironclads and five gun-boats, and said to have been commanded by Captain Semmes, descended the James River during the night of the 23rd ult., with the supposed purpose of surprising the Federal flotilla and destroying General Grant's stores and transports at City Point. But the Confederate vessels failed to pass the obstructions laid by the Federals in the stream. One of them ran aground, and had to be destroyed; and the others were compelled to return without effecting anything.

General Sherman has received considerable reinforcements, but nothing definite is known as to his movements.

In the West there have been several movements of detached expeditions.

The city of New York was to furnish 20,000 recruits under President Lincoln's last levy; and the Government had refused to reduce the quota.

President Davis has signed the Congressional resolutions creating the office of general-in-chief. He has also sent a letter to the Confederate Congress stating that, when General Lee took the command of the army of Virginia, he was commanding all the armies of the Confederate States, but was relieved of the latter command at his own request. Whenever General Lee finds it practicable to assume the chief command, without withdrawing from the direct command of the army of Virginia, Mr. Davis will deem it conducive to the public interest to place him in that position. General Johnston has been reinstated, and appointed, it is said, to the command of the Confederate army in the West.

President Davis has written a long letter in which he argues against separate State action, and also against the project of a convention of all the States of the Confederacy and of the Union.

The New York oil "diggings" promise to become as remunerative as those of Pennsylvania or West Virginia, and Cattaraugus County is fast becoming the Mecca of those who hasten to be rich.

The Senate has ratified the treaties with the north-western bands of Shoshoonee Indians establishing peace and friendship, the several bands stipulating that hostilities and all depredations upon the emigrant-trains, the mail and telegraph lines, and upon citizens of the United States within their country, shall cease. The boundaries of their country, as claimed and occupied by them, are thus given by the New York Tribune:—On the north, by the middle of the Great Desert; on the west, by Steptue Valley; on the south, by Toedon or Green Mountains; and on the east, by the Great Salt Lake, Tuilla, and Rush Valleys. The Indians agree to remove to the reservations whenever the President shall deem it expedient for them to do so, and become herdsmen or agriculturists, the Government paying them certain annuities in money, provisions, and goods. The Indians also agree that the Pacific Railroad shall not be molested; that military posts, &c., may be constructed, the gold and silver mines worked, and mining and agricultural settlements formed, and rancheros established wherever they may be required.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA.

The Canadian Government and Parliament are taking high ground in the matter of the St. Albans outrages. Judge Coursol has been suspended, and a bill introduced to make good the fifty thousand dollars which were returned to the raiders on their release. In the opening debate in Parliament the Government was sustained by a large majority, and the conduct of the Southern refugees in Canada strongly denounced. A determination was expressed to stop the abuse of asylum. The Government is carrying out a general draught in order to be prepared for the worst, but the speeches in Parliament are friendly to the United States. The Judges have decided that Burleigh must be delivered up to the United States. A report that the English Government had ordered the dispatch of gun-boats to the great lakes is semi-officially contradicted.

A large majority in Parliament favours the confederation scheme. The British Columbia and Vancouver Island journals are agitating for the extension of the project to those colonies.

A movement is on foot for the annexation of Vancouver's Island to British Columbia and for the consolidation of the two Governments.

INDIA.

The operations against the mountaineers of Bhootan appear to have encountered very little opposition; and the campaign seems to be almost terminated, the British troops having occupied all, or nearly all, the districts and posts which it is intended to retain.

Sir Robert Napier, K.C.B., is to succeed Sir W. Mansfield as the Commander of the Bombay army.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief was to reach Delhi on the 27th, and to inspect her Majesty's 38th Regiment, which is encamped outside the city.

The Hon. Sir Robert Montgomery, K.C.B., has obtained permission from his Excellency the Viceroy to resign the office of Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjaub and its dependencies. Subject to the approbation of her Majesty's Government, his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India in Council has been pleased to appoint Mr. Donald Friell M'Leod, C.B., to be Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjaub.

The Lucknow Exhibition was opened on the 24th of December.

The whole railway line from Umritsur to Mooltan is completed, and has been traversed by trains. The line is to be opened for traffic this month.

The Thull Ghaut Incline was officially opened by his Excellency the Governor of Bombay on the 30th of December.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Lord Stanley will preside at the annual festival of the Warehousemen and Clerks' Schools, at the London Tavern, next Wednesday.

Lord Fermoy and Mr. Harvey Lewis, the members for Marylebone, have addressed their constituents and received votes of confidence.

Dr. Percy, F.R.S., succeeds Sir Goldsworthy Gurney in the management of the warming and ventilation of the Houses of Parliament.

An industrial exhibition in connection with the Wandsworth Working Men's Club is to be opened early in June next.

A collection, amounting to £232, has been made on the Stock Exchange for the relief of the sufferers from the burning of the Surrey Theatre. Contributions from other sources are flowing in apace.

General Sir De Lacy Evans, one of the members for Westminster, has issued an address to his constituents acquainting them that, on account of failing energies, he shall not again be a candidate for their suffrages.

The annual ball of the Ranelagh Yacht Club took place on Tuesday night at St. James's Hall. There were nearly 300 persons present. Colonel Evelyn, the commodore, presided at the supper.

Mr. Gregson, M.P. for Lancaster, died suddenly on Wednesday morning at his house, Upper Harley-street, in his seventieth year. The hon. gentleman was in the House of Commons on Tuesday evening.

The committee of the Metropolitan Free Hospital, Devonshire-square, Bishopsgate, have received advice of a legacy of £500 by the will of the late Mrs. Elizabeth Hill Morgan, of Cheltenham.

At the evening meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, on Monday next, at Burlington House, papers will be read:—"On the Basin of the River Mahanuddy," by R. Temple, Esq.; and "A Visit to the Ruined Cities of Cambodia," by Dr. Bastian.

The Times on Monday published the respective sum totals of the subscriptions received by the various charitable institutions in reply to the special appeals which it had allowed to be made in its columns during the past Christmas. The total received was £15,481 8s. 4d.

Mr. A. Gordon, C.E., has published a letter written to Mr. Cowper, in which he states that there are twenty steam-boilers under the floor of the Houses of Parliament, many of them working at high pressure, and some of which have not been tested for ten or twelve years. Unless matters are carefully managed, he anticipates a Guy Fawkes explosion one day.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer presided yesterday week at a meeting on behalf of the Newport-market Refuge. In the course of his speech he pointed out that institutions like the refuge were not intended to meddle with the work of the poor laws. They came rather as an addition to the parish relief of the poor. Without charging the workhouse authorities with negligence or want of feeling, he believed the poor were more tenderly dealt with in the refuges than they were in the unions.

At the meeting of the Court of Aldermen on Tuesday it was announced that the Sheriffs had changed the day on which executions should take place in London from Monday to Wednesday. The object is to prevent Sunday being disgraced, as under the present arrangement, by the gathering of crowds to witness the preparation for a hanging. The Court appointed a committee to consider whether the Secretary of State should be memorialised to allow executions in London to take place privately.

Mr. Bazalgette, the engineer to the Metropolitan Board of Works, has reported that both on the north and south sides of the Thames the main drainage works will be completed and come into operation by the 29th of March next, with the exception of the low-level sewer on the north side, which is being formed in conjunction with the Thames Embankment and the new street to the Mansion House, and will, therefore, probably not come into operation for a couple of years. The proportion of the area drained by the northern low-level sewer is only one seventh of the whole.

A meeting was held on Wednesday at the Freemasons' Tavern to promote the repeal of the malt tax. Sir Fitzroy Kelly presided, and there was present a goodly number of county members and farmers. Sir Fitzroy Kelly, in opening the proceedings, advised the farmers not to ask for more than they were likely to get. The resolutions, which were nearly unanimously passed, asked for a repeal of the duty as soon as possible, and demanded that surplus revenue should be appropriated in that way. Several members of Parliament were among the speakers. An influential deputation was appointed to wait upon Mr. Gladstone on the subject the following day.

Between Saturday night and Monday morning the shop of Mr. Walker, jeweller, of Cornhill, was entered by thieves; his safe was broken open, and jewellery valued at several thousand pounds was stolen. The burglars went to work in a most systematic manner. They must have secreted themselves on Saturday night in rooms occupied as offices above the shop, then cut a hole through the ceiling into the shop of a tailor, next door to Mr. Walker, and (failing to effect an entrance through the wall on account of its being lined with iron) made their way through the floor into the room where the jewellery was kept. There was nobody on the premises; and the policemen on duty near the shop never discovered that a robbery had been committed, although a light was kept burning inside, and openings in the shutters admitted a view of the safe-room. It was only when the shop was opened by Mr. Walker's assistant on Monday morning that the robbery was discovered. A reward of £1000 has been offered for the detection of the burglars; and an attempt is being made to increase the reward by another thousand, to be raised by subscription among the mercantile firms in the City.

Last week the births of 2277 children—1175 boys and 1102 girls—were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1855-64 the average number (corrected) was 2115.——A high rate of mortality, consequent on the late inclement weather, prevails in London. In the week that ended on Saturday last the deaths of 1773 persons were registered; in the previous week the number was 1747. In the corresponding weeks of ten years (1855-64) the average number of deaths is, with a correction for increase of population, 1530. The deaths in the present return, therefore, exceed by 243 the estimated number. 370 deaths occurred from zymotic diseases, the corrected average number being 324. Typhus was fatal to ninety-five persons—a number considerably above the average, which is fifty-two. Whooping-cough destroyed the lives of eighty-six children. Sixteen deaths occurred from smallpox, twenty-eight from measles, forty-six from scarlatina, and five from diphtheria. 500 persons died from diseases of the respiratory organs (exclusive of phthisis), the corrected average number being 381. Bronchitis proved fatal to 339 persons, of whom 163 were above sixty years of age; 102 deaths occurred from pneumonia, 180 from phthisis, seventy-eight from diseases of the heart, and 178 from diseases of the brain and nervous system. Thirty-two deaths were caused by accidents. The deaths of seven nonagenarians were recorded; the eldest was a man who had attained the age of ninety-seven years.

A meeting was held on Monday at the rooms of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science on the subject of Prison Discipline—Mr. Frederick Hill in the chair. A short communication was read from Sir Walter Crofton, C.B., in which he urged—first, that separation should form the basis of prison discipline; and, secondly, that there should be a progressive improvement both in labour and diet, dependent on the conduct and exertions of the prisoner. Captain Cartwright, governor of Gloucester Gaol, then read a paper, in which he reviewed the whole subject of prison discipline at length and strongly advocated a uniform discipline throughout all the gaols in England, both in labour and diet, so far as practicable. He also recommended a general registration of criminals jointly by the police and prison departments. Sir E. Wilmot maintained that punishment should be more deterrent. In some gaols hard labour and diet as dealt out to prisoners was anything but burdensome, and had become a mere farce. He thought that the labour of prisoners should be utilized by putting them to agricultural work. Mr. Elliot thought that, after so many fanciful schemes for the punishment of criminals had been tried and found wanting, it was high time that public attention should be turned to the fact that the punishment a prisoner underwent in gaol was, in many instances, nothing to be compared with what he had to endure in working for his daily bread. Flogging, and less attention to health and comfort, he considered necessary. Mr. Baker and Mr. Allen differed from Mr. Elliot as to the treatment of prisoners. After some observations from Colonel Colvill, Captain Cartwright, and the chairman, in which the latter recommended the plan adopted by Captain Brenton many years ago, of preparing boys in industrial occupations by making them earn their meals before they ate them, the meeting separated.

LAW AND POLICE.—The Court of Queen's Bench has been occupied for nearly a week with a case "Feather v. the Queen," in which the plaintiff, who is patentee of some improvements in shipbuilding, claims to proceed by "petition of right" against the Crown for alleged infringement of his patent by the Admiralty in the construction of the ship Enterprise. The Attorney-General demurred to the claim in the petition of right upon two grounds—first, that no patent was valid as against the Crown which concerned the defence of the realm; and next, that if the patent was valid as against the Crown, a "petition of right" did not lie against the Crown for a wrongful act by any of its Ministers. Both questions, it was observed, were, from their nature, of great public importance, especially the second, which, indeed, the Attorney-General declared to involve "considerations of the highest constitutional interest." Yesterday week the Lord Chief Justice gave judgment. The Judges were unanimous in their decision for the Crown, on the ground that the Crown, in making any grant to a subject, parted with none of its own rights, unless the parting was expressly declared.

Mr. Montague Smith, Q.C., is to succeed to the puisne judgeship vacated by Mr. Justice Williams, in the Court of Common Pleas. Mr. Smith was called to the Bar in 1835, and obtained a silk gown in 1847. Mr. Justice Smith took his seat on the Bench for the first time on Wednesday.

It is stated that Mr. Joseph Browne, of the Home Circuit; Mr. Webster, Sir Thomas Philips, and Mr. Milward, of the Northern Circuit; and Mr. Hardinge Giffard, of the South Wales Circuit, are to be raised to the rank of Queen's Counsel; and that Mr. Colley Robinson, of the Home Circuit, is to take the coif.

The following are the names of the committee proposed by Mr. Moffatt to inquire into the working of the New Bankruptcy Act:—The Attorney-General, Mr. Moffatt, Mr. Murray, Mr. Malins, Mr. Weguelin, Mr. Gathorne Hardy, Mr. Kirkman Hodgson, Mr. Crum-Ewing, the Lord Advocate, Mr. Lowe, Mr. Vance, Mr. Cave, Mr. Göschen, Mr. Roebuck, Mr. Taverner John Miller, and Mr. Ayrton.

A meeting of Benchers of the several Inns of Court was held on Tuesday, when it was decided, by a majority of 12 to 11, that ordained clergymen should be henceforward eligible for call to the Bar.

Heavy damages were given by a jury in the Court of Queen's Bench on Monday in an action for breach of promise of marriage. The plaintiff was Miss Woodward, the daughter of a surgeon at Worcester. The defendant, Mr. Clarke, had been a captain in the 54th Regiment. In 1863 he had wooed and won the affections of the plaintiff, and a series of letters passed between them. At last he wrote, without any previous notice, that he had made a mistake, and that he did not love the lady with the warmth which was desirable. He therefore broke off the match. The jury gave the plaintiff £2000 damages.

In the Court of Queen's Bench, on Monday, Mr. Tamplin, senior surgeon at the Royal Orthopædic Hospital, sued the executors of Mr. Cosens, late barrister-at-law, to recover the balance of an account due for professional services rendered to Miss Cosens, daughter of the deceased. The defendants pleaded that the charges were exorbitant. It appeared that the plaintiff was consulted by Miss Cosens for curvature of the spine. She visited him 218 times. He finally effected a cure, and the young lady had since been married. The plaintiff had only received one guinea from the father, who died in July, 1863. He claimed 218 guineas, or one guinea for each interview. The defendants paid about half that sum into court as sufficient. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed.

The trial of Mr. William Rumble, of Sheerness Dockyard, for a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act in connection with the attempted outfit of the Victor, the Confederate privateer Rappahannock, has ended in a verdict of acquittal. The Lord Chief Justice, in summing up, commented with some severity on the arts that had been used to entrap witnesses or engage them to give evidence for the prosecution.

Mr. Farnall has made his report to the Poor-Law Board on the case of Timothy Daly, who was alleged to have been neglected in the Holborn Union. Mr. Farnall, after minutely considering the evidence, comes to the conclusion that Daly was comfortably lodged and attended to in the workhouse, and that the charge of neglect against Mr. Norton, the surgeon to the workhouse, is not sustained. He considers, however, Mr. Norton's conduct in the matter to have been careless, and deserving of censure. To Mr. Farnall's report is appended one from Dr. Carr in reference to the case. He comes to the same conclusion as the inspector, but makes some suggestions for the improvement of the sick wards of the house. The Holborn Union board express their opinion, founded on these documents, that Mr. Norton was not guilty of neglecting or ill-treating Timothy Daly while under his medical care; but they express their strong displeasure at the proved neglect of the doctor to fill up the records of his attendance in the visiting-book, which renders all the records of his visits worthless, and they request that Mr. Norton's obedience to this part of his duty be insisted on for the future.

At the Surrey Sessions, on Tuesday, Henry Charles Smethwick, alias Tucker, alias Count Alexander Borromeo, and alias, doubtless, half a dozen other names—one of the most audacious impostors of this age—was tried on several charges of fraud. The prisoner saved the time of the Court by pleading guilty, but addressed a whining letter to the Bench, which, however, did not prevent the chairman from passing upon him a sentence of five years' penal servitude. Sergeant Odell gave a long history of the prisoner. He confirmed the statements recently made in the Lambeth Police Court regarding the prisoner's apprehension at Reading, while delivering a lecture on "Electro-Biology," in the assumed name of Count Alexander Borromeo; his sentence to one year's imprisonment, with hard labour, for obtaining money for supplying newspapers with reports of meetings which never took place; and his sentence to four years' penal servitude, on two charges of bigamy. Sergeant Odell further stated that the prisoner, who is an Irishman, had been very fond of saying that he had been in the Crimean War. He had never been there; but he was well known at some of the Continental watering-places as a cheat and a gambler. Since the committal from the Lambeth Police Court, he (Sergeant Odell) had received letters from ladies and tradesmen in different parts of the kingdom complaining of the prisoner's frauds and heartless conduct.

At the Middlesex Sessions on Monday John Wright, who was convicted a few weeks ago of stealing a bracelet belonging to Lady Honora Cadogan, was brought up for judgment. Mr. Attenborough attended to explain the exact nature of the circumstances under which his assistant purchased the bracelet. The Assistant Judge sentenced the prisoner to eighteen months' hard labour.

Another instance of a money-lending swindle was brought under the notice of the magistrate at the Marlborough-street Police Court on Wednesday. A person living in Cumberland saw an advertisement in a local paper stating that money was lent by a firm in Oxfofd-street. He applied for a loan of £30, and by return of post was asked for a fee of 10s. 6d. for registration. This he paid. Then came to him a note of hand, which he signed and sent back with the cost of the stamp and half a year's interest at six per cent, amounting altogether to over £2. He has never received the loan, and the address given in Oxford-street is only a small shop where the advertiser had his letters left.

At the Central Criminal Court on Thursday week Captain White, late of the ship Snowdrop, and his first mate, Sutton, who stood charged with scuttling their vessel, were acquitted.——Yesterday week Serafino Polioni was tried for the alleged murder of Michael Harrington in a broil on Saffron-hill, found guilty, and sentenced to death. The countrymen of the convict have spared no pains to trace out one Gregorio, who is said by them to be the actual murderer. Mr. Negretti brought him up to the Clerkenwell Police Station on Wednesday from Birmingham, when he confessed that he used a knife in self-defence on the day the man was stabbed. He was therefore charged as aiding and abetting in the murder. The case was again brought before the Court on Thursday, and a further hearing was fixed for to-day (Saturday).

NEW SHERIFFS.

A SUPPLEMENT to the London Gazette, published last Saturday, gives the following list of Sheriffs appointed by her Majesty in Council for 1865:—

ENGLAND.

(Excepting Cornwall and Lancashire.)

Bedfordshire—Lionel Ames, of East Hyde, Esq.
Berkshire—Benjamin Buck Greene, of Midgham House, near Newbury, Esq.
Bucks—Nathaniel Grace Lambert, of Denham Court, Esq.
Cambridgeshire and Huntingdonshire—John Hall, of Ely, Esq.
Cheshire—Wilbraham Spencer Tollemache, of Dorfold-hill, Esq.
Cumberland—Wm. Postlethwaite, of the Oaks, Esq.
Derbyshire—Sir Wm. Fitzherbert, of Tissington, Bart.
Devonshire—Baldwin John Pollexfen Bastard, of Kitley, Esq.
Dorsetshire—John Brymer, of Ilsington, Esq.
Durham—Wm. Peareth, of Usworth House, Esq.
Essex—Sir Thomas Barrett Lennard, of Belhus, Bart.
Gloucestershire—John Altham Graham Clarke, near Stonehouse, Esq.
Herefordshire—Sir Henry Geers Cotterell, of Garnons, Bart.
Hertfordshire—Forster Alleyne M'Geachy, of Shenley Hill, Barnet, Esq.
Kent—Robert Rodger, of Hadlow Castle, near Tonbridge, Esq.
Leicestershire—Frederick Palmer, of Withcote Hall, Oakham, Esq.
Lincolnshire—John Lewis Fytche, of Thorpe Hall, Louth, Esq.
Monmouthshire—Arthur Davies Berrington, of Panty-Goitre, Esq.
Norfolk—William Henry Trafford, of Wroxham, Esq.
Northamptonshire—Richard Aubrey Cartwright, of Edgcott, Esq.
Northumberland—John Errington, of High Warden, Esq.
Nottinghamshire—William Frederick Webb, of Newstead Abbey, Esq.
Oxfordshire—William Melliar Foster-Melliar, of North Aston, Esq.
Rutlandshire—William Gilford, of North Luffenham, Esq.
Shropshire—Francis Harries, of Cruckton, Esq.
Somersetshire—Sir John Henry Greville Smyth, of Ashton Court, Bart.
County of Southampton—Sir A. K. Macdonald, of Woolmer Lodge, Bart.
Staffordshire—Smith Child, of Stallington Hall, Esq.
Suffolk—John Page Reade, of Stutton, Esq.
Surrey—John Bradshaw, of Knowle, Guildford, Esq.
Sussex—Sir Percy Florence Shelley, of Boscombe, Christchurch, Hants, Bart.
Warwickshire—Henry Townshend Boultbee, of Springfield, Esq.
Westmorland—Arthur Shepherd, of Shaw End, near Kendal, Esq.
Wiltshire—Thomas H. A. Poynder, of Hartham Park, near Chippenham, Esq.
Worcestershire—Albert Hudson Royds, of Crown East, near Worcester, Esq.
Yorkshire—Francis Watt, of Bishop Burton Hall, near Beverley, Esq.

WALES (NORTH AND SOUTH).

Anglesea—George Higgins, of Red Hill, Esq.
Breconshire—Henry Gwynne Vaughan, of Yscirfechan, Esq.
Cardiganshire—Lieutenant-Colonel John Lewes, of Llanlear.
Carmarthenshire—Edward Morris Davies, of Upland, near Carmarthen, Esq.
Carnarvonshire—Charles Millar, of Penrhos, Esq.
Denbighshire—John Lloyd Wynne, of Coed Coch, Abergele, Esq.
Flintshire—Bryan George Davies Cooke, of Colomendy, Esq.
Glamorganshire—Thomas William Booker, of Velindra, Esq.
Merionethshire—Richard Meredyth Richards, of Caerynwch, Esq.
Montgomeryshire—Robert Simcocks Perrott, of Bronhyddon, Esq.
Pembrokeshire—Thomas Henry Davis, of Clareston, Esq.
Radnorshire—Thomas Williams Higgins, of Cwm Llanyre, Esq.

The Queen has appointed William Preston, of Ellel Grange, and of Rock House, Esq., to be sheriff of the county palatine of Lancaster for the year ensuing.

CHURCH AND UNIVERSITIES.

On the 26th ult. the parish church of Northleigh, Oxon, was reopened with special services, after being closed five months for repairs.

Convocation has been prorogued until the 14th inst., when it will meet for the dispatch of business.

The Bishop of Durham has headed the proposed special fund for erecting new churches in the diocese with a subscription of £2000, to be paid by five yearly instalments of £400. Mr. J. Davison has subscribed £400, the Rev. P. H. Yorke £100, Archdeacon Bland, Rev. J. P. Eden, Mr. W. W. Gibson, and the Rev. E. Cheese, each £50. Further sums have also been obtained, amounting in the aggregate to about £100.

On Wednesday week an influential meeting was held in Leicester, under the presidency of the Duke of Rutland, the Lord Lieutenant of the county, to take into consideration the spiritual destitution of the archdeaconry, and especially of the town of Leicester. The meeting resulted in a subscription list of upwards of £7000, which included two donations of £1000 each from Earl Rowe, and another from Mr. J. Harris.

The Executive Committee of the Bishop of London's Fund have issued a satement of the grants made by them during the first year, under the following eight heads:—Missionary clergy, £10,790; scripture-readers, £1970; mission women, £335; clergymen's residences, £800; educational purposes, £2400; temporary churches, schools, and mission stations, £6810; endowment of districts, £1200; permanent churches, £17,200; and sites, £2439; special donations, £5622.

The annual meeting of the Gloucester and Bristol Diocesan Association was held at Cheltenham—the Bishop presiding—on Monday week; and among the speakers were Mr. Holford, M.P.; Archdeacon Sir G. Prevost, Mr. Barwick Baker, &c. The statement of the treasurer showed that, during the year, there had been received as church collections, £948; donations, £37; and subscriptions, £446: total, £1413. Towards special objects there had been contributed £53. The grants that had been paid during the year amounted to £1365; the amount of grants still owing was £1546.

Mr. E. Cardwell, Secretary of State for the Colonies, has conferred the bishopric of Rupert's Land, which became vacant some months ago by the resignation of the Right Rev. Dr. Anderson, now Incumbent of Clifton, near Bristol, on the Rev. Robert Machray, M.A., Fellow and Dean of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge, Vicar of Madingley. The diocese of Rupert's Land is 37,000 square miles in extent, with a population of 200,000. The gross annual income is £700—£400 of which is derived from the Colonial Bishoprics Fund, and £300 from the Hudson's Bay Company.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.—Rectories: Rev. R. Briscoe, D.D., Vicar of Whitford, and Proctor for the clergy of St. Asaph, to Nutfield, Surrey; Rev. D. J. Evans to Remenham, Berks; Rev. H. Stobart to Warkton, Kettering. Vicarages: Rev. W. J. Bristow to Ravensthorpe; Rev. P. Turton to Ravensden, Bedford. Incumbencies: Rev. J. Finley to Aveley; Rev. W. H. Ranken to Radley, Berks; Rev. H. C. Watson, Curate of Croydon, to St. James's, Croydon; Rev. W. Way, Curate in sole charge of Lilley, Herts, to Chrishall; Rev. W. Whitworth to the new Church of St. Saviour, Bacup. Rev. W. O. F. Hughes to be Perpetual Curate of Upwood with Great Raveley, Huntingdonshire; Rev. S. Bushnell to be Curate of Hatcham, New Cross.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—At Oxford, in a convocation held on Thursday week, a form of statute was promulgated authorising the Vice-Chancellor to admit in future to the office of Proctor in the Chancellor's Court barristers-at-law and attorneys of the superior courts (whether they be members of the University or not), and such persons only; and providing also that the number of proctors shall in future be three at least, and that the permission to practise may be withdrawn by the Vice-Chancellor for sufficient cause. The Provost of Oriel (Dr. Hawkins) proposed and handed in an amendment. In a convocation held on Tuesday the Rev. John Griffiths, M.A., of Wadham, Keeper of the Archives, was elected a member of the Hebdomadal Council, in the room of the Rev. J. R. T. Eaton, M.A., Merton. Mr. A. Dendy, B.A., of Balliol, has been elected Law Scholar on the Vinerian foundation. Mr. James Simon Mackintosh, Commoner of St. Mary Hall, has been elected an Exhibitioner of Adam de Brome at Oriel. Mr. John Davies Davenport, B.A., and Mr. Walter Horatio Pater, B.A., Probationary Fellows of Brasenose, have been admitted Actual Fellows.

At Cambridge, the Smith's mathematical prizes of £25 each were adjudged as follow for 1865:—1. Hon. J. W. Strutt, Trinity, Senior Wrangler. 2. H. M. Taylor, Trinity, Third Wrangler. The Rev. G. Hale, Tenth Wrangler, 1863, has been elected Taylor Mathematical Lecturer at Sidney, Sussex. The Rev. J. R. Cornish, M.A., Fourteenth Wrangler, 1859, has been elected Blundell Fellow of Sidney. A correspondent of the Cambridge Chronicle finds fault with one of the problems set in the Three Days' Problem Paper in the Senate House respecting the game of "croquet," and "wants to know whether candidates for mathematical honours are expected to acquire a knowledge o croquet as part of their course; and suggests that setting a problem in so trivial a form is unworthy of the dignity of the University."

Mr. Gerard W. Tomkins, B.A., of Jesus College, Cambridge, has been appointed to an assistant mastership in Epsom College.

Rev. H. G. Evans, M.A., has been appointed to the second mastership of Crediton School, Devon.

Mr. J. Blanch, B.A., of St. John's College, Cambridge, Ninth Wrangler of this year, has been appointed to the vacant mathematical mastership at Lancing College. The Rev. Philip De Quetteville, M.A., of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, has been appointed to an assistant mastership in the same college.

The annual distribution of prizes to the boys of the Middle-class School connected with the district of Christ Church, St. Pancras, took place on the evening of Tuesday week. The Rev. H. W. Burrows, B.D., presided, and congratulated the Head Master, Mr. George Green, upon the efficient state of the school. The Rev. T. Jackson, Rector of Stoke Newington, delivered an address to the parents. The proceedings terminated with some recitations given by the boys of the upper form.—Guardian.

ALL SAINTS' SCHOOL, BLOXHAM, NEAR BANBURY.

THE successful efforts which have lately been made in Devonshire, in Sussex, and in other counties of the west and south of England, to establish good public schools for the education of boys of the middle class, at a moderate cost, seem to have encouraged a number of influential persons in Oxfordshire to countenance a similar establishment there. The new buildings of the Middle-Class School at Bloxham, near Banbury, were lately opened by the Lord Bishop of Oxford, in the presence of the Duke of Marlborough, Lord Lieutenant of Oxfordshire; Viscount Dillon, the Ven. the Lord Saye and Sele, Colonel North, M.P. for Oxfordshire; the Ven. Archdeacon of Oxford, and a large number of the clergy, gentry, and yeomanry of the county of Oxford. We give an Illustration of these buildings. The school was commenced, about five years ago, by the Rev. P. Reginald Egerton, on his own private responsibility, but without any view to a commercial profit; as in the same manner, two or three years before, the Rev. Prebendary Brereton, of West Buckland, had, with the aid of Lord Fortescue, established what is now the Devon County School. The sum of £1500 was then subscribed by some of the noblemen and gentlemen of Oxfordshire, and vested in trustees, for the endowment of the Bloxham school, which will hereafter be placed upon the footing of a public institution. It is especially intended for boys who are not to proceed to the Universities, but go straight from school to business life. The two leading ideas of those who have promoted this undertaking are, attachment to the Church of England and a thorough appreciation of the benefits of a public-school education. "It was their view that a training based on these two principles produced, as their natural fruit, those qualities of straightforwardness, honour and courage which pre-eminently distinguish the best type of English character." These middle-class public schools, in other parts of England, have been attended with the best results. Dr. Lowe, Head Master of the school at Hurstpierpoint, has now 300 pupils under his charge; while the school at West Buckland, in Devonshire, supplied no fewer than twenty-two scholars who passed the last local examination for the Associate's degree in the University of Cambridge—a larger number than came from any other school in England upon that occasion.

A FRENCH LIFE OF COLUMBUS.

THE life and exploits of Columbus are the subject of a handsome volume, "Christophe Colomb," just published by M. Ducrocq, of Paris. The author, M. le Marquis de Belloy, is a French naval officer, who feels a certain professional enthusiasm for the famous Genoese sailor. M. de Belloy, in his first voyage, when a boy of fifteen, happened to pass within sight of Palos, on the Atlantic coast of Spain. He was then taught by one of his superiors on board to greet with a reverent salutation that decayed and obscure little port whence started, on the 3rd of August, 1492, the memorable expedition of Indian discovery which brought the western hemisphere to the knowledge of the European world. For many years, therefore, M. de Belloy has cherished the fresh remembrance of those feelings of wonder and delight with which he listened to the story of Columbus as told in his ardent youth. He has now written this lively book for the especial entertainment of young readers, and most especially of his nephew, the young Rénê de Chavvigny, to whom the introduction is addressed. We should not, of course, in a narrative composed for such a purpose, expect to find any great display of historical research or profound philosophy; the author has been content to draw, with a free and careless hand, a bold outline sketch of the subject, omitting that precision of details and that critical judgment of persons and events which sober history requires. In the main, however, M. de Belloy's account of the career of Columbus is tolerably fair and truthful, though it is, like most other French works of eulogistic biography, written in a high-flown rhetorical style which is not much to our taste. There is a simple nobility in the character of Columbus, as in that of his countryman Garibaldi, which stands in no need of the elaborate ascriptions of honour and glory so abundant in this kind of literature. With regard to Queen Isabella the Catholic, who has the merit of having furnished Columbus with the means of undertaking his great design, M. de Belloy bestows upon her still more extravagant praises. After all, the motives of the Spanish Court in furthering this enterprise were so questionable, and the subsequent treatment of Columbus was so mean and so unjust, that Spain has no reason to be proud of the transaction. M. de Belloy has rather striven to exalt the power of individual genius, faith, courage and resolution, which contributed to this sublime achievement. In taking this romantic view of the matter, he may seem too much inclined to overlook those general influences of the age which would probably have led to the discovery of America within a few years although Columbus had never sailed—the fact being that Cabot had explored the northern part of that continent and the Portugue e had accidentally got to Brazil before Columbus and his Spanish comrades knew of anything beyond the West Indian Archipelago, which they still believed to be a part of Asia. But in such a narrative as M. de Belloy's, written merely for the gratification of young people, it would, perhaps, have been unnecessary to discuss these questions. The book will no doubt enjoy a wide popularity in France, were it only for the sake of the illustrations, designed by M. Leopold Flameng, in which a vivid and powerful imagination is combined with a high degree of artistic skill. We have selected one specimen of the wood-engravings for reproduction on this page. It represents the solitary figure of the hero himself, standing upon a cliff of the western shores of Europe and gazing beyond the known track of previous navigation far across the Atlantic Ocean.

LIFE WITH THE ESQUIMAUX.

THE manly eloquence and enthusiasm of Captain Sherard Osborn lately exercised a magnetic influence upon his hearers and irresistibly drew their thoughts in the direction of the North Pole. It seems therefore far from an inconvenient season for drawing attention to two unpretentiously written but highly interesting volumes, of which the theme is Captain C. F. Hall's "voyage and explorations of two years and three and a half months in and about the Arctic seas" (published by Sampson Low and Co.). It is difficult to discover whence the narrator derives his title—perhaps he is one of those who "have honour thrust upon them;" still, no doubt, "a captain is a head man;" and the head man of an expedition may not without justice be called a captain. Let it be understood that these remarks are made in no captious spirit, but for the purpose of setting forth in the strongest light the courageous achievements of the narrator, who, so far as we can gather from his account, having neither naval rank nor experience of seamanship, nor any but self-acquired knowledge of scientific matters, determined, for the sake of humanity, for the honour of the "glorious stars and stripes," and, of course, for his own fame, to penetrate to the regions of ice, to become domesticated amongst the Esquimaux or (as they call themselves) Innuits, to learn their language, to question them, and to travel with them, if by any means he might find out something certain about the remnants of the Franklin expedition. His own opinion clearly is that all Franklin's men have not perished, but that many are still living as naturalised Esquimaux. The narrative is written in a simple, artless style which does not incline one, however prone one's memory may be to recur to Baron Munchausen, to question the literal accuracy of statement for which the narrator vouches. Before his book could reach the hands of readers, the author had once more started for the haunts of the iceberg to follow up the traces he had found, or thought he had found, in his sojourn amongst the Esquimaux, of that which was the object of his toils and adventures. If the reader should marvel at the importance given to "the discovery of the Frobisher relics," the author justifies himself on the ground that "the discovery of these remains and the tracing of their history among the Esquimaux confirmed, in a remarkable manner, his belief that these people retain among them, with great positiveness, the memory of important and strange incidents; and as their traditions of Frobisher, when the author was able to get at them, were so clear, he is persuaded that among them may be sought, by one competent, with every chance of complete success, the sad history of Sir John Franklin's men." One hundred wonderful illustrations enliven the two volumes. A couple of these engravings are transferred to our pages; and we may quote the following explanations:—First (p. 57, vol. ii.), "On the way Koojesse and I had talk" with some more seals which we saw, and it was with great interest I watched him. He lay down on one side, and crawled, by hitches or jerks, towards his victim; then, as the seal raised its head, Koojesse would stop, and commence pawing with his right hand and foot." The second (p. 66, vol. ii.) is this:—

"We reached the entrance of Lupton Channel, and found a strong tide running into Field Bay, whistling, foaming, roaring, and boiling like a cauldron. As we laboured on, at our right were the iron cliffs of Bache's Peninsula (so named by the narrator after A. D. Bache, Superintendent of the U. S. Coast Survey), and conspicuous among them was a bold rock, terminating like a chimney-top. On the left lay Lok's Land, the 'much-dreaded land' of the Innuits; and, looking forward down the channel, we saw the bold front of Ellis Island."

COILING THE ATLANTIC TELEGRAPH CABLE ON BOARD THE GREAT EASTERN.

IN our last Number was an Engraving of the Great Eastern, lying in the Medway, and receiving the Atlantic telegraph cable from one of the hulks employed to bring it from the manufacturers' yard at East Greenwich. We now give an illustration of the manner in which it is coiled and stowed away on board the Great Eastern. That mighty vessel, "largest of all that swim the ocean deep," has undergone an internal transformation to fit her for her new duties as a cable-ship. The great object was to get as few coils of cable as possible—in fact, if possible, to have it all in one. Large, however, as the Great Eastern is, she could never hold the 2500 miles in one coil, for, apart from its weight, which is 5000 tons, its bulk in one mass would be gigantic—a coil 58 ft. in diameter and nearly 60 ft. high, enough to fill all the space from the promenade deck to the bottom of the roof. It is disposed, therefore, in three circular tanks—one aft, one amidships, and one forward. Each of these tanks is of solid construction, water-tight, built on what is called the 30-foot deck, and, with some minute differences, all are nearly alike in size, being 58 ft. in diameter and 20 ft. high. The forward tank is, from the shape of the ship, smaller in diameter than those amidships and aft, but the heights of all are alike. This tank is shown in the Engraving on our front page, with the lower portion of the cable. In order to sustain the enormous additional weight which will be placed on the decks when the tanks are filled with the cable, the deck on which the tanks are erected is strengthened by a system of knees and deck-beams, while the lateral pressure of the cable against the sides of the tanks will be counteracted by enormous stays of beams and supports, with the object of confining the dead weight of the cable to the centre of the ship, and preventing any undue overcoming, the outward pressure of the enormous mass when the vessel is rolling—as the Great Eastern does sometimes. The three tanks will hold respectively 817, 805, and 533 miles of cable, giving a total height of 2755 miles. The work of shipping the cable, which began on Thursday, the 10th ult., and will continue without intermission now until nearly the end of May, by which time it is hoped all will be safely away snugly on board the great steam-ship. The total quantity of rope required to connect Valentia with Bulls Bay, Newfoundland, allowing for the "slack" which must run out to prevent too great a strain on the cable, is about 2000 miles, or nearly 4000 statute miles. With this length a liberal margin is given of nearly 600 statute miles of rope for slack caused by currents, possible rough weather, and the avoidance of anything like unusual strain on the cable in the deepest water. Over one part of the route the depth is as great as from 2000 to 2400 fathoms, or nearly three statute miles—a depth, however, which is only considered of moment in case of unusual weather in paying out. The strength of the cable being sufficient to bear its own weight in eleven miles of still water, in this respect—and, indeed, in all respects—the cable has an enormous superiority over the old and ill-used rope which was first laid, and which, to the amazement of all those who know its real condition, were considered sound in fair working order for a few days. In size, in strength, in better condition, better insulation, and better outer covering, the new rope is never less than three times as good as the old one, while in many cases, and these the most important, its superiority is four, five, or even more. The cable is much larger cable, its weight in water per mile is less than half that of its unfortunate predecessor, its insulating power is 74 times against 34 tons, the maximum strength of the old rope. The method of joining up the various lengths in which the cable is made is also a great improvement upon the soldered joints in the wires of the first cable, while the standard for insulation and "conductivity" are as high as those decreed by the Persian Gulf cable, and the tests are continuous in every portion of the manufacture.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1865.

THE decision at which the Benchers of the Inns of Court have arrived, by a considerable majority, upon the question whether a clergyman can be admitted to practice at the English Bar, is in itself of some importance, and it also suggests some considerations of a larger interest. Twelve Benchers to eleven have declared that holy orders will not disqualify for the practice of an advocate. The sentence is given on the side of liberality and good sense, and the Popish dogma, "once a priest, always a priest," is among many similar condemnations of bigotry which have been unhesitatingly cast into the sea. We know, in everyday life, that many a young man is "brought up to the Church" as a mere business arrangement, and that many another young man resolves on becoming a clergyman before he has any definite idea of the solemn duties and responsibilities of the office, or of the enduring perseverance which it requires. When matured thought, or the coarser teaching of discontent, has shown him that he has made a mistake, he is not free to quit his calling. It is not better that another liberal profession should be open to him than that he should be compelled to labour at one which is distasteful to him? He had better be a good lawyer than a bad clergyman, say, considering the relative value of the interests committed to the charge of the professions, he had better be a bad lawyer than an indifferent clergyman. We need not dwell upon the exceptional cases in which great hardship is entailed upon men of peculiar conscientiousness, who are forced, for the sake of food and raiment, to pursue a calling for which they feel themselves unfit; but relief will now be offered to those if they can find more comfort in that work than in the sacrifice. On the whole, the Benchers of the Inns of Court should be thanked for having taken a step in accordance with the liberal feeling of the day. A gentleman never feels more proud than when he considers himself in a false position;" and it is well to have offered many gentlemen the means of rescue from the latter.

But it is a curious psychological question how far the pressure exercised by a lawyer does act upon the legal mind. We may assume that we shall tread upon no legal corns when we assert that the rule of morals taught to the young person is somewhat different from—we will not say somewhat higher than—that imparted to the young lawyer. We shall not be accused of the ordinary and vulgar claptrap which scoffs at lawyers, just as the Joe-Miller wits scoff at doctors, and the Bohemian wits at matrimony. Passing over that trash, we may, without offence, observe that a lawyer does not get a special hold justified in doing, a good many things which a conscientious clergyman would find it difficult to justify. Men of the world—and we do not mean, with Mr. Kingsley, to say that this implies also men of the flesh and of the third evil agency—know that lawyers have settled, and smile derisively at any one who would dispute, that a professional man may do almost anything for his client. Lord Brougham has said, we believe, a lawyer does not get a special hold justified in the world but his client for the time being; but this bold declaration has been explained, Gladstone fashion, and it is not an strong to say, that, considering the wide professional latitude is permitted to the defender, if not to the prosecutor. To save a ten-times convicted thief from an eleventh sentence it is allowed to bully, confuse, and insult the most honourable witness, lady or gentleman, who can be put into a witness-box; and it is done so habitually that it is very difficult to get a quiet, sensitive person into a prosecutor at all. It is a moot point whether it is quite right in an advocate to endeavour to throw suspicion upon other parties than the man in the dock, but it is quite clear that he would be acting unprofessionally if he paid the slightest regard to the coarse suspicion might take, his business being only to divert it. It is, we apprehend, an advocate's duty, as at present understood, to call no witness who can possibly endanger the safety of the client; and, though it is not for the high-minded barrister to advise that any such witness be got out of the way, we may suppose that the high-minded attorney quite understands that the witness must not be in the way, and that the high-minded managing clerk somehow makes it clear to somebody who is low-minded that the objectionable witness must disappear—anyhow, objectionable witnesses do disappear at the most convenient times, and within the last ten days we have heard the Bench remark on the fact. Then the solemn appeal to the consciences of the jury, the tears in the night palace—tears over a stranger, and probably a scoundrel, from a gentleman who, in accordance with the tone of society, would be too proud to show before witnesses his emotions over an event that really touched him in his domestic affections — the admirable acting at the close of a speech—all these conventionalities are recognised as the right thing; they are performed in the exercise of an honourable profession; and there is not one of the satirists who would not most bitterly rail at us who would not feel himself frightfully wronged were he party to an action and his counsel omitted any of the precautions or demonstrations against which it is easy to be so virtuous. We have agreed to submit to the indirect society there shall be set up a machine, worked by opposite parties, for the production of a result, and we have further agreed that if both parties work their handles the result shall be satisfactory, or we will think so.

But when the clergyman, exchanging surplice for stuff gown, comes into the new arena, will he be troubled by any apparent irreconcilability between what he has been taught and teaching for some years, and what he has just learnt? He may be slightly incommoded in this way, until he shall have had his ears properly opened to the fitness of things and to the exceedingly admirable working of the law system. He will gradually learn, of course, that what he has been taught for a thousand years of age, or nearly; whereas this is the nineteenth century. The American poet observes, and this will be the experience of the sculptor. Some of the old rules about charity that thinketh no ill, and the duty of being pitiful and courteous, and things of the kind, may be embarrassing when he has, at first, to bully a nervous lady out of a plain statement of a plain fact, and, moreover, which he will blat at as perjury,—but he will get over that. False witnesses used to be stoned to death in "Judee," but they are very delicately hustled in England, except by the advocate whose business it is to expose them. We do not mean to carry the argument to imply that a gentleman would suggest the employment of such methods; but the most high-minded gentleman forms his opinion of his witness, and takes care not to run risks with him—it is a conventionalism. The clergyman, and the lawyer, and the rest of it, may at first seem a little awkward to one who has been denouncing hypocrisy and reading the commination against him that loveth and maketh an untrue statement; but he will be told that he is in a strange and new position, that he has but to argue from his brief, and that he says but what he is told to say, and may therefore lawfully go on resisting a conviction which has gone home to everyone else in court. But we apprehend the force of all this will be enhanced a distinguished member of a distinguished profession, of which we are all justly proud—but we only say that, just as starting in the race, the clergyman-lawyer will require blinkers.

> But Jonathan Q.
> Robinson,
> Say they didn't know everything down in Judee;

THE COURT.

THE Queen, with the junior members of the Royal family, is expected to leave Osborne House to-day (Saturday) for Windsor Castle.

On Wednesday week the Queen, accompanied by the Princess of Wales and Prince Leopold and attended by Colonel Sir T. M. Biddulph, drove out in a carriage and four. The Prince of Wales accompanied by the Duke of Cambridge, went shooting. Princess Louise and Prince Arthur took a drive.

MARRIAGES IN HIGH LIFE.

Countess Danner, the morganatic wife of the late King of Denmark, is about to marry Count Silfwerstolpe, descendant of an ancient Swedish family. The marriage will take place at Nice.

The marriage of Lady Victoria Scott and Lord Schomberg Kerr will take place at Dalkeith, in the Duke of Buccleuch's private chapel, towards the end of this month.

A marriage will take place, on the 23rd inst., between Captain Rawdon de Robeck, 4th (King's Own) Regiment, third son of the late Baron de Robeck, and Catherine Gordon Hepburne, only daughter of Mr. Cosmore Alexander Hepburne, of Clarkington.

POLITICAL AND FASHIONABLE ENTERTAINMENTS.

His Excellency the Prussian Ambassador and Countess Bernstorff entertained at dinner, on Monday evening, various members of the Corps Diplomatique at Prussia House.

Earl Granville gave a full-dress banquet, on Monday evening, to the supporters of the Ministerial party at his house in Bruton-street, Berkeley-square. Covers were laid for forty-six. His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge attended as Commander-in-Chief. The noble Earl read the text of the Queen's Speech, which was delivered by commission at the opening of Parliament.

The Earl of Derby, as leader of the Conservative party in the House of Lords, gave the customary dinner to his supporters in that branch of the Legislature, on Monday evening, at his residence in St. James's-square. The Earl had a dinner party, on Wednesday evening, of the members of the House of Commons.

Viscount Palmerston gave a full-dress Parliamentary dinner on Monday evening at Cambridge House, Piccadilly. The noble Premier read the Queen's Speech to his assembled friends. Viscountess Palmerston had a small and early party after dinner.

The Right Hon. B. Disraeli entertained at dinner at his residence, Grosvenor-gate, on Monday evening, a party of members of the House of Commons.

Frances Countess Waldegrave held her first assembly for the season, on Wednesday night, at her residence, Carlton-gardens. The réunion was fashionably attended. Previously to the assembly the Right Hon. Chichester Fortescue, M.P., and the Countess Waldegrave entertained his Royal Highness the Duke d'Aumale and a select circle at dinner.

The Right Hon. the Chancellor of the Exchequer and Mrs. Gladstone entertained a select party at dinner, on Saturday evening last, at their residence on Carlton House-terrace. Mrs. Gladstone received a small party after dinner.

MUSIC.

The success which attended the first performance of Maillart's new opera, "Lara," at Her Majesty's Theatre (of which we gave some account last week), has been fully confirmed. On every subsequent evening it has drawn full and brilliant houses, and has been received with undiminished favour. This opera is an excellent specimen of the modern French musical stage, does honour to the young composer's genius, and well deserves its reception both in Paris and London. Mr. Harrison, too, is entitled to high praise for the admirable manner in which the work has been produced under his management.

At the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden, a new piece was brought out on Thursday evening. It is an opera, in one act, called "The River Sprite," the music by Frank Mori, the libretto by George Linley. Next week we will give an account of the piece and its performance.

At the Monday Popular Concert of this week "Dussek's pianoforte sonata, "L'Invocation," so enthusiastically received when played by Arabella Goddard at the previous concert, was repeated with, if possible, increased effect, and at its conclusion the performer was brought back to the orchestra by prolonged acclamations. Our fair pianist deserves the warmest gratitude of the public for her efforts in reviving the works of the great masters of former times. But for her, this sonata of Dussek, a work worthy of Beethoven in his happiest moments, would most probably have been lost in oblivion. The other instrumental pieces were Mozart's divertimento in B flat, for four stringed instruments and two horns; and Hummel's septet in D minor, for the piano, with stringed and wind instruments. Mozart's divertimento is one of the composer's early productions—a marvel of simplicity, melody, and grace. Hummel's septet is his most celebrated work of its class. It is generally known to amateurs; and performed, as on this occasion, by the greatest pianist and the most exquisite accompanyists of the day, it is one of the highest treats that an amateur can enjoy. The vocalists were the Misses Wells; they sang Winter's beautiful duet, "Vaghe colli," and Mozart's "Sul' aria" with a grace and sweetness that delighted the audience.

The newly-established Beethoven Society, of the formation of which we gave an account a few weeks ago, goes on and prospers. Its fifth concert, at Willis's Rooms on Saturday evening last, was an excellent and successful entertainment. The programme included Haydn's 81st quartet in F major; Beethoven's grand sonata in C minor, op. 30, for pianoforte and violin; and the same composer's 10th quartet for stringed instruments. The principal violin was Herr Jansa, one of the most accomplished chamber violinists of the day; the pianist was Mdme. Alice Mangold, a young and charming performer, who has few superiors. Several elegant vocal pieces were sung by Miss Susan Galton and Fräulein Mehlhorn. The concert was ably directed by Herr Wilhelm Ganz, and the various performances were warmly applauded.

Handel's "Judas Maccabeus" was performed at Exeter Hall, on Wednesday evening, by the National Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. G. W. Martin. The performance was excellent on the whole, though it suffered from the absence of Mr. Sims Reeves, who was at first announced, but is still unable to sing, in consequence of his very severe accident. Mr. George Perren sang in his stead; but it is no disparagement to this gentleman to say that neither he nor any other of our tenors is competent to fill Mr. Reeves's place, especially in an oratorio which taxes so heavily the highest vocal powers of the performer. Mr. Perren, however, exerted himself greatly, and his efforts were favourably received. Mdme. Rudersdorff's admirable performance of the principal soprano part in this oratorio is well known to the public, and she never was more successful than on this occasion. Miss Palmer and Mr. Weiss sang with their usual ability and effect. The choruses were well sung—with strength and energy—though greater smoothness would sometimes have been desirable. The hall was very full.

Professor Sterndale Bennett has returned from Leipsic, which city he has visited in consequence of an invitation from the directors of the celebrated Gewandhaus Concerts to conduct the performance of his new symphony, composed last season for the Philharmonic Society. Our London readers must remember the effect produced by that beautiful work, which was generally pronounced the author's chef-d'œuvre in orchestral composition; and it appears that the Leipsic audience, the most intelligent and critical in Europe, formed a similar opinion; for the symphony (which was magnificently performed) was received as warmly as it had been by the composer's own countrymen. Dr. Bennett's works have long been well known and duly estimated in Germany; and the public of Leipsic showed themselves anxious to do honour to the visit of the great English musician. A concert in compliment to him was also given by the directors of the Conservatoire. The programme consisted of a selection from his works, including the fourth concerto, in F minor, sestet, capriccio in E, and several of the "Preludes and Lessons," performed by the pupils of the Conservatoire.

The sixth and last of the present series of the Hackney Classical Concerts was given at the Manor Rooms, on Tuesday week. It was an admirable and truly classical entertainment. The principal features of the programme were Haydn's quartet in C—that which contains the celebrated variations on the Austrian hymn, "God Preserve the Emperor"—and Beethoven's quartet in F, both of which were splendidly played by Messrs. Burnett, Betjeman, Webb, and Edward Howell. A duet by Bottesini, originally for the violin and contrabasso, but arranged for violin and violoncello, was admirably executed by Messrs. Betjeman and Mr. E. Howell. Our young violoncellist's fine tone and brilliant execution are becoming more and more remarkable. A manuscript quintet for the piano and stringed instruments, from the pen of Mr. Prout, who himself played the pianoforte part, was much and deservedly applauded. Several vocal pieces, particularly Rossini's "Di tanti palpiti," were sung by Miss Lucy Hann, a young vocalist of great promise; and the air, "In happy moments," from Wallace's "Maritana," was given with great effect by Mr. Arthur Howell.

The annual general meeting of the Benevolent Fund of the Sacred Harmonic Society was held last week, at Exeter Hall—Mr. Harrison in the chair. From the report read at the meeting it appears that the expenditure in relief has increased from £27 8s., in the year 1856, to £146 4s. in the past year; and for the last four years the relief account amounts to £587 15s. The report further stated that of the relief distributed by the fund about one half is among the professional associates of the society, from whom, however, not more than a tenth part of the income is derived. The treasurer's abstract of accounts shows a balance against that officer of £24. The invested fund is £2300, New Three per Cents. The usual complimentary votes were passed, and addresses delivered by various gentlemen present, urging the claims of the fund upon the professional and amateur members of the Sacred Harmonic Society.

Mr. Santley continues his triumphant career in Spain. The Barcelona correspondent of a Paris musical journal, after speaking of his appearance in "Lucia di Lammermoor," says:—"Since his début in the 'Trovatore,' Mr. Santley has marched onward from success to success. His is a talent of the very highest order, and his voice is so happily timbrée that one cannot hear it with indifference. Mr. Santley manages it with an art which one cannot sufficiently admire; without exaggeration, by force of expression alone, by the legitimate employment of all the resources of the vocal art, he produces his effects, and raises the enthusiasm of his hearers."

Mr. Charles Swinnerton Heap, of Birmingham, pupil of Dr. Monk, of York, has been elected to the Mendelssohn scholarship lately founded in the Royal Academy of Music.

The Barcelona papers, which lately recorded the successful début of Mdlle. Georgi at the Lyceum Theatre, now state that the opera of "Martha" is about to be represented, she and her sister taking the two principal parts.

THE THEATRES.

The theatres are beginning to place their pantomimes in a subordinate position. At Drury Lane "Henry VIII." still continues to be the leading piece. "David Garrick" and "Lord Dundreary" take the precedence at the Haymarket. At the Adelphi, in consequence of the indisposition of Miss Bateman, "Stephen Digges" and "The Flowers of the Forest" are substituted for "The Hunchback." Mr. Fechter continues to flourish as Robert Macaire. At the Princess's, Mr. Boucicault's comedy of "The Streets of London" follows the burlesque, "The Hidden Hand" and "Cupid and Psyche" remain the stock pieces at the Olympic. The other theatres maintain their usual bills, except the Grecian, which on Monday revived Herr Mosenthal's pathetic drama of "Deborah." Miss Edith Heraud is re-engaged to sustain the part of the heroine, and attracted an overflowing audience.

The benefit given to Paul Bedford at Drury Lane, on Thursday week, was altogether a remarkable exhibition. The veteran actor was surrounded by the élite of the profession, and the occasion was also distinguished by the presence of the Duke of Cambridge, the Duke of Beaufort, and many other noblemen, gentlemen, and celebrated artists. The pieces were well chosen. "The Area Belle" gave opportunity for the humour of Mr. Toole and Mr. Paul Bedford; "My Aunt's Advice" introduced Mr. Sothern; and "Box and Cox" Mr. Buckstone and Mr. Compton. Mr. Bedford also addressed the audience, and the business ended with the Scotch song of "Auld Lang Syne," in which all joined in chorus. The result was exceedingly profitable.

A paragraph lately appeared in several journals to the effect that a bottle had been picked up on the west coast of France containing a paper, dated Dec. 7, 1863, stating that Captain Toulouse, of the Garonne, of Bordeaux, was on the point of being murdered by his officers and crew. The Journal de Bordeaux now explains the matter, on the authority of Captain Toulouse himself, who arrived at Bordeaux on Dec. 14, and then declared that no attempt had ever been made on his life, but that he had written the paper in question and thrown the bottle into the sea while in a state of delirium, caused by a violent attack of fever.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

MORE than two years have elapsed since this huge metropolis was scared half out of its wits by the prevalence of crimes of robbery accompanied by violence. A score or two of hardened ticket-of-leave men sufficed to keep nearly three millions of people, for weeks together, in an agony of fear. Nothing was talked of, thought of, but garotting. Peaceable folk went about with spiked dog-collars round their necks, and whole arsenals of bowie-knives and revolvers in their belts. Well, the garotting panic has passed away. The "Thugs" and "Phansigars" of London still pursue from time to time their nefarious trade; but outrages of a very aggravated nature are comparatively rare. The revival of the use of the cat-o'-nine-tails as an accessory to penal jurisprudence has caused Mr. William Sykes to perpend, and to hesitate ere he makes too free with his life-preserver, his knuckleduster, and his bottle of chloroform.

No sooner, however, is one door closed than another is opened. It seems that we must have our average of evils and devour our peck of troubles quand même. The reigning pest is Burglary. There is a "run" on jewellers' shops. The "cracksmen" are doing things "on the large." No petty thefts of watchguards or pencil-cases content them. One after another the magnificent goldsmiths' establishments at the east end of London are being broken into and property to the amount of thousands of pounds stolen; and, as though to show the sporadic nature of crime, a young Spaniard, on the very morrow of the great Cornhill jewel robbery, smashes with his elbow a pane of glass in a shop in Cheapside and runs away with a tray containing no less than two hundred and fifty-six diamond rings.

Now, it may reasonably be assumed that jewel-robbers are not likely to be deterred from their evil calling by the fear of penal servitude, the crank, and the cat. In old times the gallows and breaking on the wheel have been found powerless so to deter them. Given a rich booty and an accessible one, and you will never lack villains who will risk every peril and every punitive infliction to secure it. How, then, should the plague of burglars be met? Assuredly, by adopting increased measures of security. Nothing need, perhaps, be said here about the construction of iron "safes" just now, for that would probably lead to a controversy; and between the relative merits of Chubb, Bramah, Hobbs, and Milner non-professionals are not qualified to judge. Still, it may be asked whether our system of police watching and supervision is as perfect as it might be. The City tradespeople are crying out against the police most vehemently, and declaring that the streets are not adequately patrolled. Unless the police force amounted to three times its present number, it is difficult to see how they could be adequately patrolled. The thief knows quite as well as the inspector on what particular part of his beat a policeman should be at a particular moment. In every important street there should be a couple of public night watchmen, inhabiting a little wooden hut with a red lamp outside. One of the two should be alternately on duty at the hut or patrolling the ground within fifty yards of it. No London square should be without one of these huts, and the watchmen would tend to prevent not only burglaries but garotte robberies and outrages on women. That red lamp would send many a scoundrel slinking home to Spitalfields. It would be very idle to object that watchmen have been tried in London before and have been found wanting. The old "Charlies" were paralytic incapables who went to sleep so soon as the watch was set, and ran away when they were attacked. The watchmen of 1865 should be young, athletic, and thoroughly "wide-awake" fellows.

Of all the droll announcements of the introduction of an important element of civilisation in a half-savage country, can anything surpass the account of the establishment of the electric telegraph in Morocco? The Emperor Muley Mohammed something—they are all Muleys and mostly Mohammeds down there—having decreed the formation of a telegraphic line, the mollahs and dervishes of Fez applied themselves to dreaming of dreams for an entire day and night, and then, waiting on the Emperor, informed him that the scientific improvements of Frangistan in general, and the telegraph in particular, were inventions of Sheitan and the offspring of Jehanum. His Majesty, so runs the story, caused each of the holy men to receive forty blows on the soles of his feet, and immediately issued a codicil to his decree enacting that anyone who in any way presumed to injure or interfere with the telegraph should be at once decapitated. All decrees in Morocco are, as is well known, binding.

There is an "Anglomania" of a curious nature reigning in Paris. Not for "le turf," or "le sport," or "le boxe," but for English dramas. Two English dramas by the well-known author of "The Dead Heart" are in preparation at leading French theatres, and anything English in the dramatic line is eagerly asked for by Parisian managers. Mr. Watts Phillips, it is well known, writes only original dramas; but the directors of the French stage should be warned against reckless importations from England. A case might occur at last similar to his who went out for wool and came home shorn. Suppose a batch of favourite stock English pieces submitted to a boulevard manager—"Simpson and Co.," "Blue Devils," "Deaf as a Post," "Box and Cox," "The Lottery Ticket," "Grandfather Whitehead," "The Bengal Tiger," "A Day Well Spent," "Ladies, Beware!" for instance. Alas! they are all translated from the French. About "Sweethearts and Wives" I am not quite so certain, although the paternity and maternity of Billy Lackaday have a decidedly French savour; but I remember an old Professeur d'Anglais in Paris, twenty-five years since, who used to declare that Sheridan's "School for Scandal" was a translation, not from one, but from two French pieces. The history of plagiarism would afford a new D'Alembert and Diderot materials for a work thrice as voluminous as the Encyclopædia.

The first number of the Pall-mall Gazette appeared on Tuesday, very appropriately in concurrence with the opening of Parliament. This new evening paper and review is handsomely printed (in the brave old "Esmond" type) on fair paper, and altogether, in "make up," matter, and manner has a "Pallmallish" and scholar-like guise. There was a capital bit of club and committee-room politics in the first number in the shape of a letter from Sir Pitt Crawley, Bart., to his nephew, on his entering Parliament; but is the editor of the P.-M. G. quite au fait in his baronetage? Old Sir Pitt Crawley (Becky Sharpe's Sir Pitt) could not spell, and the writer of the "letter to his nephew" is manifestly a cultivated gentleman. Moreover, old Sir Pitt died while George IV. was King. His son and successor, Sir Pitt (author of a pamphlet on malt), died shortly after the passage of the Reform Bill; and the present possessor of the title is Sir Rawdon Crawley, Bart., the son of Colonel Rawdon Crawley, C.B., sometime Lieutenant-Governor of Yellow-Jack Island. Sir Rawdon was a boy at Charterhouse at the time of the demise of his lamented uncle, and could not then have entertained any thought of entering Parliament.

The publication of an exquisitely-beautiful series of photo-lithographed facsimiles of Shakspeare's plays has been commenced with the comedy of "Much Ado about Nothing." The series will not exceed twenty quartos. Mr. Preston is the photographer, Messrs. Day and Son the publishers; and the good work has been produced under the superintendence of Mr. Howard Staunton from "the matchless original of 1600," in the library of the Earl of Ellesmere. And, lo! we have a copy which has almost as great a claim to be called matchless; for, certainly, in no age or country save our own could it have been put forth with such beauty, such fidelity, and such completeness. For half a guinea at least one "thing of beauty" may be purchased which will continue "a joy for ever."

Under the head of "Intelligible at Last" a contemporary gives a funny cutting from an American law report, in which it is stated that one of the principal newspapers in New York is chiefly edited in the Bloomingdale Lunatic Asylum. This is very facetious, but it is erroneous; and very unjust, besides, to the leading organs of the New York press. The "principal" papers in the Empire City are the Herald, the Times, the Tribune, the Daily News, the Express, the Evening Post, the World, the Commercial Advertiser, and the Journal of Commerce; and these are respectively edited by Mr. James Gordon Bennett, the Hon. Henry Raymond, the Hon. Horace Greeley, the Hon. Ben Wood, Mr. Erastus Brooks, Mr. William Cullen Bryant, Mr. Manton Marble, Mr. W. H. Hurlbut, and Mr. Prime. These are dailies. Of weekly papers the only considerable one is the Independent, edited by Mr. Theodore Tilton and the Rev. H. Ward Beecher. I have the pleasure of knowing most of these gentlemen very well, and can vouch for the fact that not one of them is, or has been at any time, an inmate of any madhouse whatsoever. Yet a little funny paragraph such as the one to which I have adverted is calculated to irritate the American people almost to madness.

"ROBIN ADAIR," BY A. JOHNSTON, IN THE WINTER EXHIBITION OF MODERN PICTURES, 53, PALL-MALL.

It is one great advantage of painting pictures from, or suggested by, favourite songs or ballads—and even short undramatised tales and romances—that they directly appeal to every one. And yet the artist has not to satisfy, or, as it often happens, contend against, any very definite preconceptions in the spectator's mind of the characters the painter seeks to realise. It is otherwise as regards the persons of the dramatist, especially when more distinctly drawn and coloured, so to speak, and individualised by the actor. It is different, too, with historical personages, where authentic materials for correct portraiture exist; and, even where these are not to be had, we involuntarily find those personages become embodied in our imaginations through the minute delineations of the historian; while many characters of the novel and even the romance writer seem as familiar to us as the very "people we have met." Who, we may ask, was ever quite satisfied with painters' versions of Juliet or Imogen, Hamlet or Lear, Falstaff or Puck; with artists' representations of Alexander, Nero, or Richard III.; of Moses, David, or Our Saviour; or with artists' embodiments of Sir Launcelot of the Lake, Sancho Panza and his master, Mr. Pickwick, or Edmond? Poor Thackeray said of his friend Mr. Walker's very clever illustrations to "Philip," that the Philip of the draughtsman was not the Philip he, the conceiver of the character, had so long mentally known, and from whom he was so loth to part. And could we ask them, few authors, we suspect, would know their foster children when disguised by the painters.

However, not to wander further from the subject of the picture we have engraved, and which we last year reviewed on its exhibition at the Royal Academy, all the artist (Mr. Johnston) had in this case to do was to make his Robin Adair sufficiently handsome to account for the love-longing of a fair maiden, which is all the burden of the well-known Scotch ballad. That he has done this, and made the susceptible young lady herself lovely to boot, requires no demonstration, even could we give it with the pen. Very properly, he has rendered the costumes as contemporary with the date when the ballad was composed; and for the same reason we have the sedan with the chairmen in attendance—one lifting the lid. The little by-play of the coxcomb eyeing the fair heroine with his glass (so greatly in contrast with the gentle deference of young Robin), while another lady, evidently suggesting all sorts of cross purposes, in turn watches with furtive jealousy the fop who is thus forgetting the attention due to her for another, will not pass unnoticed by the reader. We have only to add that the lines immediately illustrated are—

And when the play was o'er,
What made my heart so sore?
Oh! it was parting with Robin Adair.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

SUPPOSING that her Majesty the Queen had fulfilled the anxious wishes of a large portion of her subjects and had proceeded in state from Buckingham Palace to Westminster to open Parliament in person, what a damaged effect would have been there. That half-mediæval pageant would have been smirched and bedraggled by rain and mud, and would have presented that most sorry of sights, finery and splendour in an aqueous eclipse. Her Majesty's faithful lieges may console themselves so far for the disappointment which they felt in her continued absence from a scene which is always one of her popular triumphs. One is getting used to the ceremonial of inaugurating the Session by Commission; but still it is difficult to get rid of the feeling that, contrasting it with the really gorgeous splendour which pervades the Upper House when the Sovereign presides over her Parliament for a brief half hour, the step from the sublime to the ridiculous is in this instance particularly short. The Royal Commissioners as they appear in character are solely responsible—involuntarily of course—for this, because all the rest of the arrangements are simple and business-like, all the other persons present presenting their everyday features, and being in their habits as they live. But on that uneasy cross-bench in front of the throne the cynosures of every eye stand out with singular grotesqueness. Peers' robes, despite crimson cloth, and ermine, and gold lace, are ungraceful in shape, being based on the long cloaks of babyhood, and have the unpleasant art of giving a look of age to the most upright human form. But when to these are added certain cocked hats which are the common property of the whole Peerage, being kept at the house, and never worn anywhere else, and which therefore are made of one size and on one pattern, which seems to have been invented with special regard to making the wearers look fierce at the Commons, in whose presence the Lords have the privilege of remaining covered, why, the identity of Dukes, Earls, and Viscounts is lost, and an affinity to certain figures which boys carry about on the 5th of November is complete. To be sure, the Lord Chancellor has a hat with its own peculiar cock, but then it is twin to that which his own coachman wears; and, perched uneasily on the top of his bag wig, it always gives that functionary, whoever he may be, an air of Captain Macheath after he had retired from business on Hounslow-heath and was trying with indifferent success to look like a respectable citizen of his time. Why do not the Peers on these occasions wear their coronets, if any of them have such a thing materially and actually in their possession? However, one must not talk with levity on what is evidently a matter interwoven with our glorious Constitution.

At five o'clock all this is forgotten, and we find Peers perhaps more business-like in their proceedings than the Commons, and setting to their work with a will. On Tuesday evening those of their Lordships who had had the privilege of hearing Lord Harry Vane in the Commons, however they may deplore the cause, may not have been cruelly disappointed at his being prevented making his début as Duke of Cleveland. The rear-rank man had to step to the front—that is, the Earl of Charlemont, who was to have seconded, had to move the Address; and, looking to the tone and character of his speech, he was, probably, not much discomposed in his arrangements by the change. He is a young Peer, and was modest, as became his legislatorial youth; and had the good sense to speak most on that which he may be supposed to know most—the state of Ireland—and acquitted himself, on the whole, fairly. Lord Houghton, in the Upper House, has only cast the skin of Mr. Monckton Milnes, and was quite as much at his ease amongst their Lordships as he was amongst the Commons. Physically, as he appeared on this occasion, one has only to imagine Tom Pipes, the boatswain, endued with the uniform of a deputy lieutenant, and the idea is complete. But, seconding the address almost impromptu, he made a very good speech; a little ex cathedrâ, perhaps, and calculated to let their Lordships be aware that he was not at all overwhelmed by the novelty of his presence in the midst of them, but neat and suggestive. Positively, although Lord Derby was in his place, looking ardent and lively, his eye with all its characteristic brightness about it, there was a supposition of an instant that the Address was about to be agreed to without a debate. But good-naturedly, in the fullest sense of the term, Lord Derby did intervene, and made things so pleasant, that the political atmosphere of the moment grew quite genial, and Lord Granville, whose business it was to watch for points to which to reply, suffered his face to lose its anxious expression and to return to its normal chubby placidity. Nothing could have been happier than his allusion to Lord Derby's recent classical achievements; while the quotation from the translation of Homer was so apposite and well placed that it almost seemed as if the two Earls had arranged their speeches together beforehand. Perhaps the evening would have been quite as agreeable, or even more so, if the House had been spared one of Lord Russell's platitudinous expositions of foreign policy, which might just as well be kept in type and read periodically, say once a month, by the clerk at the table; and their Lordships would have been able to dine punctually at seven instead of at a quarter to eight; and not with less appetite, and consequent digestion, from the knowledge that the Opposition threatened them with no party debate this year.

The entry of Mr. Speaker into the Lower House was welcomed by a goodly gathering of familiar faces, in none of which was there any trace of that Parliamentary tenuity which should characterise the countenances of the members of a moribund Legislature. If they felt themselves to be in extremis, they contrived successfully (to quote the Earl of Derby) to galvanise themselves, and were, in appearance, even merry. At four o'clock, there was not by any means a crowd; and, as Mr. Disraeli did not look in the least mischievous, and lounged carelessly in his seat, instead of, as it were, warming his resolution within his folded arms, as his manner is when he is going to be aggressive, the outsiders, who had got inside for the nonce, were informed by the more initiated that there was not much chance of a passionate party display, which, of course, was what they would have liked to witness. At notice-of-motion time enough was given out to occupy a moderate Session; for every conceivable subject, from railways and capital punishments to threepenny postage-stamps, was proclaimed for discussion and consideration. Most of the subjects were new; and, indeed, all the old questions which used to be paraded on the first night of the Session were conspicuously absent. With a due sense of that modesty which is becoming to rather young members, the mover and seconder of the Address did not get into their places until just before they were to be called on to do their spiriting, which they did sufficiently well, neither exciting nor offending. To be sure, Sir Hedworth Williamson seemed to look at his situation from rather a comic point of view; and, though he only once ventured to perpetrate an attempt at mirth, there was evidently a current of fun underlying his demeanour; but he was, nevertheless, adequately decorous, and there was a manly simplicity about the style of his work which was just the thing to catch the favour of the House; and they petted him accordingly, and listened to him. Mr. Hanbury Tracy, on the contrary, seemed to be so pregnant with a profound speech, so palpably intended to instruct the House on the whole philosophy of politics, while, at the same time, he was not quite so perfect in his words, as the actors say, as he might have desired, that he provoked conversation amongst members with each other about things in general, and had, we suspect, to cut off a great part of a very searching disquisition, together with an eloquent and ornate peroration, for lack of attention. Mr. Vincent Scully has, we believe, intimated his intention of retiring from the representation of the people at the end of the present Parliament, and therefore he may be congratulated on having achieved, in the last moments of his legislatorial existence, a great Parliamentary distinction; he inaugurated the debate on the Address. Nobody objected, on this of all other occasions, to his talking for a long hour or so in his "melancholy-Jacques" style, veiling his bitterness of spirit under an affectation of jocoseness, on the wrongs of Ireland; nobody seemed to care at first to follow him but Mr. Brady; and it is just probable that even Mr. Maguire might not have been roused into the utterance of one of his ardent declamations on that subject if it had not been for the intervention of two English members into the discussion. Mr. Danby Seymour, having had his usual fling at Sir Charles Wood's Indian policy—which is, perhaps, what it is, because Mr. Seymour is not Under Secretary for India—and having naturally expressed his surprise at Mr. Massey having been chosen for the post of Finance Minister for our Indian empire, when a gentleman like Mr. Seymour, who has been three months in Bengal, and brought home no end of statistics for the India Reform Association, and perhaps a tiger-skin or two for himself, is wasting his breath night after night from the back benches was available, pronounced, in his authoritative way, that the people of Ireland were worse governed than the ryots of India, who were crushed by only having thirty years' leases. Encouraged thus, up rose Mr. Long—a rising young Conservative statesman, who has a knack of composing, and, on due opportunity, delivering, smart and antithetical sentences—and related his horrified experience of a recent little tour in Ireland, and evolved the striking and original idea that the remedies for the evil under which that country labours are to make landlord-absenteeism penal and compulsorily to place the Prince of Wales in the Viceroyalty. Artfully enough, Sir Robert Peel, in his reply, contrived to mix up the sentiments of Mr. Maguire and Mr. Long, and so to make the statements of the one as absurd as the other; thus giving a little more spirit to the Irish debate, which had changed its usual place in the order of the proceedings of the Commons, being early in the evening and the Session, instead of late in both. With unconscious good nature, Lord Fermoy crushed it out with his elephantine rhetoric; although afterwards Mr. Kinglake had a few solemn words of warning, as usual, on a point of foreign affairs, which he had, after his manner, specially discovered. Colonel Sykes was angry, as usual, with Sir Charles Wood about India, and with the whole Government about India and Japan. As by that time everybody had gone away, there was no alternative but to agree to the Address and adjourn, or to tempt some mischievous member to count out the House on the first night of the Session.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The seventh Session of the present Parliament was opened by Commission. The ceremony was a very simple one. A few ladies assembled in the House of Lords and occupied the back seats usually taken by the peers. In the galleries there were also a few ladies. As soon as the Royal Commissioners entered, the Lord Chancellor directed the Usher of the Black Rod to summon the House of Commons, and in a few moments afterwards the Speaker, in his state robes and accompanied by a few members of the House of Commons, appeared at the bar. The Lord Chancellor then read the QUEEN'S SPEECH.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,

We are commanded to assure you that her Majesty has great satisfaction in recurring again to the advice and assistance of her Parliament.

The negotiations in which the Emperor of Austria and the King of Prussia were engaged with the King of Denmark were brought to a conclusion by a treaty of peace, and the communications which her Majesty receives from foreign Powers lead her to entertain a well-founded hope that no renewed disturbance of the peace of Europe is to be apprehended.

The civil war in North America still unhappily continues. Her Majesty remains steadfastly neutral between the contending parties, and would rejoice at a friendly reconciliation between them.

A Japanese daimio in rebellion against his Sovereign infringed the rights accorded by treaty to Great Britain and to certain other Powers; and, the Japanese Government having failed to compel him to desist from his lawless proceedings, the diplomatic agents and the naval commanders of Great Britain, France, the Netherlands, and the United States of North America, undertook a combined operation for the purpose of asserting the rights which their respective Governments have obtained by treaty. That operation has been attended with complete success; and the result has afforded security for foreign commerce and additional strength to the Government of Japan, with which the relations of her Majesty are friendly.

Papers on this subject will be laid before you.

Her Majesty regrets that the conflict with some of the native tribes in New Zealand has not yet been brought to a close; but the successful efforts of her Majesty's regular forces, supported by those raised in the colony, have led to the submission of some of the insurgents; and those who are still in arms have been informed of the equitable conditions on which their submission would be accepted.

Her Majesty has had great satisfaction in giving her sanction to the meeting of a conference of delegates from her several North American provinces, who, on invitation from her Majesty's Governor-General, assembled at Quebec. Those delegates adopted resolutions having for their object a closer union of those provinces under a central government. If those resolutions shall be approved by the provincial Legislatures, a bill will be laid before you for carrying this important measure into effect.

Her Majesty rejoices at the general tranquillity of her Indian dominion, but her Majesty regrets that long-continued outrages on the persons and property of subjects of her Majesty, and for which no redress could be had, have rendered it necessary to employ a force to obtain satisfaction for the past and security for the future.

Her Majesty deeply laments the calamity which has recently occasioned great loss of life and property at Calcutta and other places in India. Prompt assistance was rendered by the officers of the Government, and generous contributions have been made in various parts of India to relieve the sufferings which have thus been occasioned.

GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Her Majesty has directed the Estimates for the ensuing year to be laid before you.

They have been prepared with every attention to economy and with due regard to the efficiency of the public service.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,

Her Majesty commands us to inform you that the general condition of the country is satisfactory, and that the revenue realises its estimated amount. The distress which prevailed in some of the manufacturing districts has greatly abated; and the Act passed for the encouragement of public works in those districts has been attended with useful results.

Ireland during the past year has had its share in the advantage of a good harvest, and trade and manufactures are gradually extending in that part of the kingdom.

Various measures of public usefulness will be submitted for your consideration.

Bills will be laid before you for the concentration of all the courts of law and equity, with their attendant offices, in a convenient site; a measure which her Majesty trusts will promote economy and dispatch in the administration of justice.

The important work for the revision of the statute law, already carried to a considerable extent by recent Acts of Parliament, will be completed by a bill that will be laid before you. Her Majesty hopes that this work may be a step towards the formation of a digest of the law.

Bills will also be submitted for your consideration for the amendment of the laws relating to patents for inventions, and for conferring on the County Courts an equitable jurisdiction in causes of small amount.

Your assistance will also be invited to give effect to certain recommendations made to the House of Commons, after inquiry, directed by that House, into the operations of the laws regulating the relief of the poor.

A bill will be laid before you founded on the report of the Commission for Inquiring into Public Schools; and her Majesty has directed that a commission shall be issued to inquire into endowed and other schools in England which have not been included in the recent inquiries relating to popular education.

Her Majesty commits with confidence the great interests of the country to your wisdom and care; and she fervently prays that the blessing of Almighty God may attend your councils and may guide your deliberations to the attainment of the object of her constant solicitude, the welfare and happiness of her people.

On the conclusion of the reading of the Speech, the Speaker and the members of the House of Commons retired, and the Peers adjourned during pleasure.

DEBATE ON THE ADDRESS IN REPLY TO THE ROYAL SPEECH.

The House resumed at five o'clock, when, the Speech from the Throne having been again read,

The Earl of CHARLEMONT (in the absence of the Duke of Cleveland, owing to domestic breavement) moved the Address in reply to the Royal Speech. Having adverted to the principal questions to which the attention of Parliament had been called, he read some statistics referring to the condition of Ireland to prove the gradual progress of that country, and maintained that though some persons and parties were dissatisfied, the people were generally loyal.

Lord HOUGHTON seconded the motion. After referring to the treaty with France of 1852 and the confederation of the British North American provinces, he defended her Majesty's Government from the charge of having violated its neutrality in the civil war now waging in America. He denied that in any one instance it had ever departed from the policy of non-interference it had declared it would observe. As to the relations of England to foreign nations generally, he pointed out the important fact that wherever England was in arms it was entirely in self-defence. The domestic legislation in which they were asked to engage in the present Session would, he assumed, be of the same kind as that of former years. The measures to be proposed to them would mostly be of a practical character. He had hoped that in some manner they would have succeeded in broadening the basis of the Parliamentary representation; but that work was, perhaps, reserved for another and more ardent generation. He hoped, however, that some progress would be made in preparing a digest of the law of England, a measure that certainly ought to receive serious attention.

The Earl of DERBY described the Speech from the Throne as just the sort of speech that was likely to be addressed by an aged minister to a moribund Parliament, whose dissolution no event can postpone; so that all its experienced advisers could do was to find it some gentle occupation and take care that its dying moments were not disturbed by any unnecessary excitement; whilst its physicians held the usual consultation and pocketed their accustomed fees. The noble Earl then adverted to our relations with Brazil and the civil war in America, calling attention to the ingratitude with which the neutrality of this country had been met by the Government of Washington, who had given notice to terminate the Reciprocity Treaty and the agreement for securing the neutrality of the American lakes. Under these circumstances the noble Earl said he regarded with satisfaction the proposed confederation of the British North American provinces. He alluded to the distress in the cotton districts, pointing out the condition of those districts; and expressed his regret that legislation had not been determined upon as the result of the Public Schools Commission.

Earl GRANVILLE congratulated their Lordships upon the good sense and good humour displayed by the Earl of Derby, and congratulated the latter upon the brilliant success which had attended his literary labours during the recess. Referring to the notice given by the Government at Washington to terminate the Reciprocity Treaty with England, he stated his belief that it was to be traced to irritation consequent upon the movements of Confederate raiders, but that there was still time for negotiation.

The Earl of LEITRIM, having spoken on the Irish portion of the Speech,

Earl RUSSELL stated his pleasure at finding that there was a general approval of the House of the foreign policy of the Government; but in answer to observations of Lord Derby on the diplomatic rupture with Brazil, he denied that the Foreign Office was to blame, or could have taken any other course than they had adopted. As regarded American politics, he urged that the United States expected that her Majesty's Government should do all that the law of nations and international law required to prevent any aid being given to the Confederates; but it had been impossible to prevent acts by British subjects, which had caused great irritation in America, such as the fitting out of ships in English ports to prey on the commerce of the United States. In Canada also Confederate agents had done acts calculated to embroil this country with the United States, and it was not surprising that the Federal Government, seeing the Canadian lake made use of for such purposes, should be inclined to take steps to put a stop to such proceedings. While, however, her Majesty's Government would adhere strictly to neutrality in the American contest, they would not admit claims on this country which were not founded on justice.

The Address was then agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

Lord Courtenay took the oaths and his seat for Exeter; Mr. Morris, for Carmarthen; Lord A. Hervey, for West Suffolk; Mr Bromley, for North Warwickshire; and Mr. Waldegrave Leslie, for Hastings.

New writs were ordered to issue for the election of members for Tralee, in the place of Mr. O'Hagan; for the city of Cork, in the place of Dr. Lyons; for Salford, in the room of Mr. Massey; and for Truro, in the room of Mr. Montague Smith.

A number of notices of motion and for the introduction of bills were given; amongst them, a bill by Sir George Grey, to consolidate and amend the law relating to prisons; by the Attorney-General, a bill to provide for the expenses of new courts of justice; by Mr. W. Cowper, a bill to provide a site for courts of justice; by Sir F. Kelly, a motion for the consideration of the reduction and ultimate repeal of the malt tax; by Lord Robert Montagu, a bill for the utilisation of sewage; by Mr. Roebuck, of a question to the Chancellor of the Exchequer as to the intention of the Government with regard to railway legislation; by Mr. H. J. Baillie, for a committee of inquiry as to whether the ships of the Navy were armed in conformity with the requirements of modern warfare; by Mr. Hibbert, a bill to allow of capital punishment within prisons; and by Mr. Hennessy, a motion on the state of Ireland.

DEBATE ON THE ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO THE ROYAL SPEECH.

The Address, in answer to the Speech from the Throne, was moved by Sir H. WILLIAMSON, member for North Durham, who adverted to and commented upon, seriatim, the different points of the Speech with considerable minuteness, and expressed an opinion that there was nothing in that document to excite controversy, and therefore he recommended harmony and a desire for the general good in the councils of Parliament.

Mr. H. TRACY, member for Montgomery, seconded the motion He expressed a feeling that the satisfaction caused by the Speech from the Throne would have been enhanced if it had been delivered by her Majesty in person, and a hope that ere long the country would receive that gratification. He then proceeded to deal with its topics in a more generalising and argumentative tone than that adopted by the mover, but enlarging with equal fervour on its spirit and suggestions.

Mr. SCULLY disputed the accuracy of that paragraph in the Speech which referred to Ireland. He denied that manufactures were extending in that part of the United Kingdom, or that it had had the advantage of a good harvest.

Mr. BRADY insisted that the people of Ireland were suffering under a succession of bad harvests, and that they were flying from the country because they could not obtain a proper remuneration for their labour.

Mr. D. SEYMOUR complained that no intimation had been given by the Government of a redemption of the pledge to initiate a reform in Parliament, on the faith of which they came into office, and urged that no moment could be more favourable than now for the passing of a moderate reform bill, especially after the speech of Mr. Gladstone on that subject last year. At any rate, the present Session ought to be employed in domestic reforms, especial attention being directed to the subject of national education. He also criticised the Indian policy of the Government.

Mr. R. LONG stated his grievance against the Queen's Speech—that it contained no encouraging word for the agricultural interest, and no mention of the repeal of the malt tax. Having spent several months recently in Ireland, he was horrified and disgusted with the wretched condition of that country.

Mr. SCOURFIELD hoped that, in any proposed reduction of the military force of the country, efficiency would not be disregarded.

Mr. MAGUIRE, while advocating the principle of self-reliance as one of the means of regenerating Ireland, was of opinion that the spirit of Irishmen should be supported and stimulated by wise and just legislation.

Sir R. PEEL ridiculed the argument and statements of Mr. Seymour and Mr. Long, whose ignorance of the real state of Ireland he asserted, adding that at the proper time he would be prepared to vindicate the course pursued by the Government towards that country. He justified the terms in which Ireland was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. KINGLAKE questioned the policy of the Government in recognising the Emperor of Mexico, notwithstanding an assurance which had been given that no such step would be taken so long as civil war, which might end one way or the other, continued. He said it appeared that hostilities between the contending parties were still going on, and that the whole country was by no means reduced under the Imperial authority.

Colonel SYKES took occasion to imply censure on the policy of the Government in India, China, and Japan.

Sir C. WOOD pointed out the necessity of putting a stop to the outrages which had been committed for more than twenty years on the frontier by the inhabitants of Bhootan.

The Address was then agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

Mr. O'Reilly gave notice of a motion for the appointment of a commission to inquire into the mode of recruiting for the Army.

Mr. Walter gave notice that, on Sir J. Pakington's motion for a committee of inquiry into the conduct of the business of the Committee of Council for Education, he should move to add words extending the inquiry to the subject of inspection of schools.

Sir R. Peel, in answer to Mr. Maguire and Lord Naas, said that the Government was preparing a bill for reforming the Court of Admiralty in Ireland. The subject of arterial drainage in that country was under consideration, but he could not say that any measure was in preparation.

Lord Naas obtained leave to introduce a bill to enable certain companies to issue mortgage debentures on land.

REPORT OF THE ADDRESS.—STATE OF IRELAND.

On the report of the Address in answer to the Speech from the Throne,

Mr. Scully moved to omit the paragraph relating to Ireland, and to insert, "We regret that the general condition of Ireland cannot be regarded as prosperous or satisfactory, and that multitudes of the inhabitants continue to emigrate to foreign countries through the want of remunerative employment at home," instead thereof. He contended that the paragraph was ill-advised, calculated to deceive the public with regard to the true state of Ireland, and ought not to have been inserted in her Majesty's Speech.

The amendment was seconded by Mr. O'Reilly.

Sir R. PEEL said that it seemed, on the previous evening, to be the feeling of the House that the paragraph in question was a proper one, and was justified by the condition of Ireland in the past year, especially as compared with the state of that country a few years ago; while a spirit of enterprise was developing itself amongst the people which was calculated, at no distant period, to place Ireland in the position she was entitled to hold amongst nations.

Major GAVIN was of opinion that there was a tendency amongst the people of Ireland to exert themselves and to work for themselves, and this was especially to be noticed in regard to the cultivation of flax; while, on the whole, there were gleams of hope for the country.

Mr. BRADY strenuously combated the assertion that there was anything in the state of Ireland which warranted the statement in her Majesty's Speech.

On a division, the amendment was rejected by 67 to 12.

Sir J. ELPHINSTONE observed that there was nothing in her Majesty's Speech on the subject of the military and naval services; and at this time, when, looking to the state of affairs in America, it was necessary that steps should be taken to place our Navy in a position to protect our commerce, for which purpose it was not now efficient. He also complained that the subject of India had not been more prominently brought before Parliament.

The report was then agreed to.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

The Lord Chancellor laid upon the table certain returns connected with the business of the Court of Bankruptcy during the past year. He hoped, when the report of the Committee was made, to propose some remedy for the evils which those returns disclosed.

Lord Belmore called attention to a recent judgment in the Court of Chancery Appeal in Ireland, with reference to the liability of shareholders in railways.

Lord Houghton moved for a return of the number of unions or parishes that have availed themselves of the Act of July 29, 1864, enabling them to receive from the Metropolitan Board of Works the sums of money expended on the relief of the casual poor; of the amount of money hitherto so expended and of the unions where the guardians have provided new wards or other places of reception for this class of poor since the passing of the above-mentioned Act. The noble Lord observed that though this Act had been in operation during the present winter, yet the appeals made by the managers of private refuges had been more urgent than ever. He believed that the returns he asked for would show that the Act had been in effective operation, but that the poor had preferred applying to the refuges supported by private charity. It appeared to him that those private refuges had a tendency to increase the pauperism of London.

Earl Granville assented to the returns.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

Mr. G. F. Boyle took the oath and his seat for Buteshire in the room of Mr. Mure, elevated to the judicial bench in Scotland.

Mr. C. Forster brought up a vast number of private bills in respect to which the standing orders had been complied with.

The attention of the House was then occupied for upwards of an hour and a half with the consideration of the standing orders.

Mr. Newdegate gave notice that upon an early day he would call attention to the existing arrangements for the management and inspection of monastic establishments.

Mr. Baines gave notice of his intention on the first convenient day to move for leave to bring in a bill to extend the franchise in England and Wales.

Sir. F. Kelly postponed his motion on the malt tax from the 28th of February to the 7th of March.

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.—Mr. M. GIBSON, in reply to Mr. Bentinck, stated that it was not the intention of her Majesty's Government, during the present Session, to introduce any measure with the view to the better prevention of railway accidents, or to take any steps founded upon the recommendations of the Committee that sat upon the subject a few years ago. The railway companies, in cases of disaster, always evinced a willingness to supply the Government with every possible information. The subject of passenger communication with the guard was at present under the consideration of a committee composed of some of the directors of the various leading railway companies, and when the result of their deliberations were known it would be time enough for the House to discuss the subject. It was important, however, to notice that, whereas in 1863 there were only fifty-two accidents to railway passenger-trains, there were in 1864 seventy-seven accidents, an increase that no doubt was greatly to be regretted. It must at the same time be borne in mind that in the latter year there was a considerable increase of mileage, of passenger-trains, and of general traffic. During the year 1864 the railways had carried 220,000,000 passengers, and, altogether, there were only fourteen persons killed, being a proportion of one person killed out of 15,714,285. There was, however, an increase on the previous year of persons injured by railway accidents, being one out of 315,638. The sum paid by way of compensation by railway companies was such as to teach them caution in a most effectual way, being about £170,000 in the year 1863. The return of the sums paid last year had not as yet been made out.

Mr. Moffat moved for a Select Committee to inquire into the operation of the Bankruptcy Act and report thereon. He adverted to many of its practical and technical deficiencies as developed in practice.

After a brief discussion, the motion was agreed to.

Mr. Hadfield obtained leave, in Committee of the whole House, to introduce a bill to render it unnecessary to make and subscribe declarations as a qualification for offices and employment, and for other purposes.

COUNTRY NEWS.

The Queen has approved of Dr. Ferdinand Krapf as Consul at Cardiff for the Emperor of Austria.

General M'Clellan was one of the passengers by the China, which arrived at Liverpool on Sunday from America.

An industrial and art exhibition was opened in Lancaster on Thursday week, which promises to be a successful affair.

During some deep excavations at Woolwich Arsenal several fossil oysters, in an excellent state of preservation, have been found.

A meeting has been held at Hanley to promote the holding of an industrial exhibition for the northern division of Staffordshire in the course of the ensuing spring.

Mr. Lowe states that another slight shock of earthquake occurred at Beeston, near Nottingham, at about half-past one o'clock on the morning of the 1st inst.

A fire broke out early on Thursday morning in one of the bed-rooms of Sandringham Hall, but it was soon extinguished, and the damage done was of trifling extent.

A service of plate, value £1000, has been presented by the Midland Railway Company to Mr. S. Beale, M.P., who has recently retired from the chairmanship of the company.

The Manchester Art-Workmen's Industrial Exhibition will be opened on Monday, the 20th inst., at the Royal Institution, by Sir J. P. Kay-Shuttleworth, Bart., the High Sheriff.

The Duke of Beaufort has lost nearly forty head of deer from their browsing on a yew, the boughs of which were bent down within their reach by the snow.

A little boy, four years old, wandered away from Plumstead on the 23rd ult., and was found starved to death in a ploughed field at Shooter's-hill on the 4th inst.

The Right Hon. Thomas O'Hagan was on Thursday week sworn in before the Lord Chancellor of Ireland as fourth Justice of the Court of Common Pleas; and James Anthony Lawson, Esq., LL.D., was on Saturday morning sworn in as her Majesty's Attorney-General for Ireland, and took his seat as such at the sitting of the Court of Chancery in Dublin.

Great distress, which threatens disturbance, exists in the west of Ireland. In Galway the authorities had to call in the military to overawe the crowds who walked the town with a black flag, because they refused to work for 10d. a day upon a task which the public had found for them rather than let them suffer want.

The salmon-fishing season for England and Wales (which had been closed, except for rod-fishing, for five months) opened on Thursday week, and great expectations are formed that the present year will prove the beneficial operation of the Salmon Fisheries Act of 1861, under which protection has been afforded to the breeding fish, and the supply has been much increased in a great many rivers.

A Dundee correspondent of the Times writes:—"A gentleman, ninety years of age, lives in this neighbourhood, in the full possession of his faculties and in the vigorous enjoyment of the socialities of life, dispensing hospitality at home and visiting his friends, whose father was born in 1711, in the reign of Queen Anne, and whose grandfather was born in the reign of Charles II. A chain of only three links thus spans nearly two centuries."

The mortality of the week ending Saturday last is higher than it was in the ten chief towns of the kingdom. The births were 4196, the deaths were 3557, in the week, and the annual rate of mortality was thirty-four per 1000. The rate was thirty-one in London, thirty-three in Edinburgh, and thirty-seven in Dublin; forty-two in Liverpool, thirty-five in Manchester, thirty-one in Salford, thirty in Birmingham, thirty-eight in Leeds, thirty in Bristol, forty-four in Glasgow.

Between the Soho and Hockley stations of the Great Western Railway, near Birmingham, is a tunnel, over which an arm of the old Birmingham Canal passes. On Wednesday the waters burst through the brickwork of this canal, flooded the tunnel, tore up the rails, and, escaping from the mouth of the tunnel nearest Birmingham, poured, in an immense volume, into the lower ground which lies adjacent to the station, doing a large amount of damage. No lives were lost, though many narrow escapes are reported.

The Liverpool Mercury has an account of a Cheshire rector, who wore a moustache, had choral service, abolished Tate and Brady for "Hymns Ancient and Modern," and preached in his surplice. These four offences displeased one of his parishioners. This gentleman at last offered to place £50 at the disposal of the Rector for each proposition he might concede, or £200 in all. His propositions were as follow:—"That the intoning of the service should be discontinued; that Tate and Brady's version of the Psalms should be adopted instead of the "Hymns Ancient and Modern;" that the sermon should be preached, as in former times, in a black gown; and that the Rector should shave off his moustache." On receiving his parishioner's letter the Rector was inclined to be angry, especially at the allusion to his not over-handsome moustache; but a night's reflection somewhat cooled his passion. After consulting with his wife, he resolved to concede one of the propositions, and thus secure a £50 note for the benefit of his schools. He determined to shave off his moustache—a matter involving no sacrifice of principle; but, with regard to the other three propositions, he resolved not to forego the practices he had adopted in the church. He accordingly wrote a letter to this effect to his troubled parishioner informing him that, if he attended church that morning, he would find him (the Rector) minus his moustache, at the same time requesting him to send in return a cheque for £50. The speculator in cotton did not fail to attend church as desired, and to his great delight he found the Rector had kept his word. On getting home he sent a cheque for the £50 to the Rector, who has appropriated the money for the benefit of the parish schools.

Mr. John George Dodson has been appointed chairman of Committees in the House of Commons in the room of Mr. Massey, now Financial Minister of India.

The steamship Leila, which left the Tyne for Calcutta on the 2nd of January, has been lost off the north-east coast of Scotland. All hands are supposed to have perished.

The House of Lords will, it is understood, begin hearing appeals on Monday next. The list contains sixty-one causes and eight peerage cases. There are nine appeals from the Court of Chancery, England; fourteen from the Exchequer Chamber; two from the Divorce Court; the celebrated case of "Doglioni v. Crispin," the Portuguese will case, from the Court of Probate, which is expected to last several days; fourteen from the Court of Session in Scotland; and five from the Irish Court of Chancery.

The anniversary of the revolution which, in 1858, put an end to Soulouque's rule in Hayti and restored the Republican Constitution, with a President elected for life, was celebrated on the 22nd of December last. A religious ceremony took place in the cathedral church of Port-au-Prince. The festival was marked by the manœuvres of the new corps of riflemen of the President's Guard. The 1st of January is the anniversary of the proclamation of the independence of Hayti in 1804. On the 31st of December all the civil and military authorities and the several establishments of education in Port-au-Prince were admitted to present to the President their good wishes on the occasion of this national festival.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

OWING to the continuous sales of money stock, and the prospect of a new loan being introduced into the Stock Exchange next week for Peru, to the amount of £3,000,000 or £4,000,000, considerable heaviness has prevailed in the market for National Securities, at further depressed quotations.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, Feb. 6.—The supply of English wheat on sale here to-day was very limited. Good and fine samples were in fair request, at full prices. In other kinds, next to nothing was doing, at late rates. Foreign wheat—the show of which was good—moved off heavily, at late rates. We were fairly supplied with barley, in which only a moderate business was doing, on former terms. No change took place in the value of malt. The trade, however, was less active. Oats changed hands slowly, at about stationary prices. Beans and peas were in improved request, at late quotations. The flour trade was steady.

Feb. 8.—The demand for all kinds of produce was in a sluggish state. Compared with Monday, however, no change took place in prices.

Arrivals this Week.—English and Scotch: Wheat, 480; barley, 1740; malt, 790; oats, 50; flour, 330. Irish: Oats, 810. Foreign: Wheat, 50; barley, 4660; oats, 12,170.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 36s. to 41s.; ditto, white, 40s. to 46s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 36s. to 40s.; rye, 26s. to 28s.; grinding barley, 23s. to 24s.; distilling ditto, 25s. to 28s.; malting ditto, 24s. to 35s.; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 51s. to 61s.; brown ditto, 47s. to 50s.; Kingston and Ware, 54s. to 61s.; Chevalier, 60s. to 62s.; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 18s. to 23s.; potato ditto, 20s. to 25s.; Youghal and Cork, black, 18s. to 20s.; ditto, white, 19s. to 22s.; tick beans, 30s. to 34s.; grey peas, 31s. to 34s.; maple, 34s. to 36s.; white, 36s. to 40s.; boilers, 37s. to 40s. per quarter. Town-made flour, 37s. to 40s.; households, 32s. to 33s.; country marks, 27s. to 33s. per 280 lb.; French, 30s. to 32s. per sack; American, 19s. to 25s. per barrel.

Seeds.—Clover seed supports the late high quotations, with a steady inquiry. Most other seeds are inactive. In cakes, only a limited business is passing.

Linseed, English, sowing, 58s. to 61s.; Calcutta, 60s. to 60s.; hempseed, 42s. to 46s. per quarter; coriander, 18s. to 22s. per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 9s. to 10s.; white ditto, 9s. 6d. to 10s.; tares, 8s. 0d. to 9s. 0d. per bushel; English rapeseed, 76s. to 80s. per quarter; linseed cakes, English, £10 to £11 5s.; ditto, foreign, £9 10s. to £11 11s.; rape cakes, £5 5s. to £6 5s. per ton; canary, 50s. to 56s. per quarter; red clover seed, 68s. to 120s.; white ditto, 58s. to 80s. per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 6½d. to 7d.; of household ditto, 5d. to 6d. per 4 lb. loaf.

Averages of Grain.—Wheat, 38s. 4d.; barley, 29s. 2d.; oats, 19s. 6d. per quarter.

English Grain Sold Last Week.—Wheat, 83,629; barley, 70,131; oats, 9358 quarters.

Tea.—Most kinds are a dull inquiry, and, in some instances, prices have a drooping tendency.

Sugar.—Raw qualities are in improved request, and the quotations are well supported. The stock is 101,156 tons, against 73,302 tons last year. In refined goods, only a moderate business is doing, at 42s. per cwt. for common brown lumps.

Coffee.—The inquiry is far from active. Prices, however, may be considered firm. Stock, 10,776 tons, against 10,800 tons in 1864.

Rice.—The transactions are on a full average scale, at previous quotations. Stock, 51,613 tons, against 54,833 tons last year.

Provisions.—Irish butter moves off slowly, at about previous quotations. Foreign parcels are firm. Fine Friesland, 130s.; Kiel, 124s.; and fine American, 115s. per cwt. The sale for bacon is heavy, at 59s. to 60s. per cwt. for Waterford on board. Lard is quite as dear as last week. In other provisions the transactions are on a moderate scale.

Tallow.—The market is quiet. P.Y.C., on the spot, is selling at 41s. 6d. per cwt. Stock, 30,025 casks, against 61,410 ditto last year. Rough fat, 2s. 2d. per 8 lb.

Oils.—Linseed oil is selling at £32 15s. per ton; rape is quoted at £41 to £45; olive, £38 to £39 10s.; and fine palm, £36 to £36s 10s. French turpentine, 66s. per cwt.

Spirits.—There is only a limited inquiry for rum, at about previous quotations. Brandy supports late rates. The transactions in grain spirits are only moderate.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £4 10s. to £5 10s.; clover, £5 10s. to £6 10s.; and straw, £1 8s. to £1 12s. per load.

Coals.—West Hartley, 15s.; Walker Primrose, 12s. 3d.; other qualities, 13s. to 19s. per ton.

Hops.—Selected samples of last year's growth move off freely, at full quotations. All other kinds are a dull inquiry, at late rates. Prices range from 110s. to 200s. per cwt.

Wool.—The market, generally, is heavy, and prices are barely supported.

Potatoes.—The supplies are moderately good, and the trade is steady, at from 55s. to 135s. per ton.

Metropolitan Cattle Market (Thursday, Feb. 9).—The show of beasts in to-day's market was limited, and in but middling condition. Most breeds were in fair request, at full prices, the best Scots having realised 5s. 6d. per 8 lb. With sheep we were scantily supplied. Downs and half-breds moved off freely, at extreme rates; but other kinds were a slow inquiry. The top figure was 6s. 2d. per 8 lb. Calves were in short supply and fair request, at full prices—viz., from 4s. 4d. to 5s. 6d. per 8 lb. In pigs, very little was doing, at late quotations. Milch cows were very dull.

Per 8 lb. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s. 8d. to 4s. 4d.; second quality ditto, 4s. 8d. to 5s. 0d.; prime large oxen, 5s. 2d. to 5s. 4d.; prime Scots, &c., 5s. 4d. to 5s. 6d.; coarse and inferior sheep, 4s. 4d. to 4s. 10d.; second quality ditto, 5s. 0d. to 5s. 4d.; prime coarse-woolled sheep, 5s. 6d. to 5s. 10d.; prime Southdown ditto, 6s. 0d. to 6s. 2d.; large coarse calves, 4s. 4d. to 5s. 0d.; prime small ditto, 5s. 2d. to 5s. 6d.; large hogs, 3s. 4d. to 3s. 10d.; neat small porkers, 4s. 0d. to 4s. 6d.; suckling calves, 16s. to 21s.; and quarter-old store pigs, 20s. to 25s. each. Total supply: Beasts, 978; cows, 130; sheep, 2910; calves, 112; pigs, 312. Foreign: Beasts, 101; sheep, 320; calves, 107.

AVENUE TO THE TEMPLE OF KAMAKURA, JAPAN.

IN our last week's Paper was an extract from a letter we had received from our Special Artist and Correspondent at Yokohama, giving an account of his visit to the Temple of Kamakura, some twenty or thirty miles from Jeddo, on Nov. 22, the day after the murder of Major G. W. Baldwin and Lieutenant R. N. Bird, of the 20th Regiment, who were attacked and slain upon the high road in that vicinity by some persons not yet known. We now publish an Engraving from Mr. Wirgman's sketch taken upon that occasion, giving a view of the avenue leading from the great temple, called Hatchuma, to a smaller shrine, where the famous bronze statue, or idol, named Daiboots, is most religiously preserved and worshipped. It was to indulge their curiosity with a sight of this noted object of Buddhist adoration that the two unfortunate English gentlemen rode over from Yokohama on the previous day, intending to return the same night. It is supposed that they were met on the road, very near the spot shown in our Illustration, by some of the licensed bullies in the retinue of one of the daimios, or great feudal lords; and upon little or no provocation—perhaps merely for omitting to pay the usual tokens of respect—were assailed and slaughtered by these ruffians.

MEETING OF

THE MANCHESTER AND SALFORD CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY IN THE FREE-TRADE HALL, MANCHESTER.

THIS is the age of great movements—of surprises. The country in general is, perhaps, as little prepared now for the Illustration which represents an assemblage of 2300 practical co-operators in the Free-trade Hall, at Manchester, under the presidency of the Mayor of that important city, as it was some months ago to read of a temperance meeting convened within the walls of a building sacred to Bacchus—the Valhalla of the City Corporation—the great Guildhall of London, under the actual and living presidency of the Lord Mayor. When the Free-trade Hall was opened co-operation was not. It has since sprung into vigorous being, and we have taken the opportunity, in a series of papers recently published in this Journal, to sketch its rise, and take the gauge of its present dimensions. For the information of those whose eye has not been caught by the notices referred to, it may be well to state that more than 200,000 working people—for the most part men, the heads of families averaging four or five members—are banded together throughout the country in an endeavour to supply themselves with wholesome food at a moderate price and to cover the week's expenses with the week's wages. Their subscribed capital amounts to more than a million sterling, and the profits of trade, formerly absorbed by a host of middlemen, are now distributed amongst the shareholders, and yield them from fifteen to twenty per cent upon the money invested.

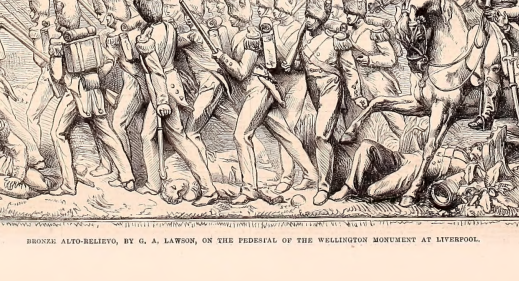
The Manchester and Salford Industrial Co-operative Society is a section of this large body, but by no means the most flourishing one; and we have called special attention to it more because its annual meeting affords us the opportunity of showing the large proportions of this movement than because its merits place it in the first rank amongst the associations. Unless we take its domestic phase, as illustrated by the happiness and material prosperity brought to many a family which before its advent was steeped in pauperism, or held upon the verge of that abyss, co-operation affords but few picturesque features, and we have therefore seized upon the best that presented itself.

The proceedings of the seventh annual meeting of this society commenced on Tuesday week with a tea, after which the assembly was seated to listen to the report of the year's transactions, and various addresses founded thereon, the intervals being enlivened with vocal and instrumental music, and recitations. The numbers were soon dispatched, and various speeches by J. M. Bennett, Esq., the Mayor; Messrs. A. Heywood and Bowker, Aldermen; and Messrs. F. C. Edwards, S. Ashworth, Max Kyllmann, J. M. Percival, Ingham, Dyson, and E. Jones were delivered, all most encouraging to the working men who had successfully devised and carried out such an enterprise for their own benefit. After these speeches the spacious hall was cleared for the ball, which was kept up with great animation till a late hour.

RESTORATION OF ST. STEPHEN'S CRYPT, PALACE OF WESTMINSTER.

BENEATH St. Stephen's Chapel, which is now St. Stephen's Gallery, in the New Palace of Westminster, running between the upper and of Westminster Hall and the central lobby of the two Houses of Parliament, there is an underground chapel or crypt which was built by Edward I. towards the end of the thirteenth century, sometimes called "St. Mary's Chapel in the Vaults," but more commonly St. Stephen's Crypt. The entrance to this chapel is in Old Palace-yard. It was much injured, not by the fire which destroyed the Houses of Parliament in 1834, but by the carelessness of those employed subsequently in the building of the New Palace. They used the venerable chapel as a storehouse or lumber-room, so that the sculptured pillars, windows, mouldings, and other decorative features were sadly defaced. It is satisfactory to know by the illustration in our present Number that this ancient building (almost the only portion which remains to us of the old Palace at Westminster) has lately been restored with much care, and is now to be used as the chapel of the New Palace at Westminster, according to the original design of the late Sir Charles Barry. The restoration has been carried out by Mr. Edward M. Barry, in whose charge the New Palace has been placed since the death of his father, in 1860.

The length of the chapel is 90 ft., and it is 28 ft. wide, and 20 ft. high. It consists of five bays, the easternmost of which is raised to form a sanctuary. There is a private entrance at the north-west corner from the palace, and access is given to the public by a door near the angle at the southern end of Westminster Hall down a flight of stone steps, thence through a door on the right hand. On entering the vaulted chamber, the spectator is struck with its fine proportions and sombre effect, its bold moulded groinings, and richly sculptured bosses. The stained-glass windows, seven in number, are by Mr. Hutchings, and represent the ministry and martyrdom of St. Stephen. The walls beneath the windows are covered with alabaster and inlaid marble, disposed in a rich diaper pattern, and the whole of the groining is decorated with arabesques and figures executed on gold grounds. The old bosses have been carefully preserved, and represent the martyrdom of St. Stephen, St. John, St. Catharine, and St. Lawrence, and also St. George and the Dragon, all beautifully executed. The east wall is panelled with deep recessed tracery, with full-length figures on a gold ground. The decoration of this part of the chapel, the easternmost bay, forming the sacrarium, was intrusted to Messrs. Clayton and Bell, of Regent-street. There are nine panels, the centre of which is to contain a cross. The other eight panels represent St. Peter, St. Stephen, St. Oswald, St. Ethelreda, St. Edmund, St. Edward the Confessor, St. Margaret of Scotland, and St. Edward the Martyr. In the roof also of this portion of the chapel Messrs. Clayton and Bell have painted a choir of angels, with a rich ornamental design all round. The reredos is to be a low structure, of marble and mosaic, and is not yet completed. All the columns are of polished Purbeck marble, and have been executed by Mr. Field, who has also carried out all the marble and alabaster work. The decoration of three of the bays, without any figures, has been done by Mr. Crace, of Wigmore-street, from the designs of the architect.



ALTARPIECE OF TERRA-COTTA, THE WORK OF ORGAGNA, FROM THE PALAZZO CANIGIANI, AT FLORENCE.

TERRA-COTTA ALTARPIECE, FROM THE PALAZZO CANIGIANI, AT FLORENCE.

THE remarkable specimen of Tuscan sacred art which is represented by our illustration is a piece of sculpture in terra-cotta, about 5 ft. in height by 4 ft. in width. It was lately removed from the Palazzo Canigiani, in Florence, where it formed the altarpiece of a chapel attached to an hospital for the receiving of pilgrims on their way to Rome, which had existed from a remote antiquity in that palace. It thence passed into the possession of the present proprietor, and is now on view at the establishment of Messrs. Colnaghi, Pall-mall East. At the time of its removal from the Palazzo Canigiani it was very thickly incrusted with whitewash, remains of painting and gilding—so thickly that it was only when the many coatings of rubbish had been removed that the beauty and value of the work became recognisable. It was then pronounced by the unanimous opinion of the great number of connoisseurs who examined the work, carefully comparing it with the well-known tabernacle by Orgagna in the church of Or San Michele, at Florence, to be by that artist. It may be observed, on close inspection, that the head of the Virgin has been detached and reattached, but the head is not a restoration. The figure was entire in this respect when the work came into the hands of its present owner; and the head was broken off in moving the tabernacle from his house to another in Florence for the purpose of a loan exhibition in that city.

SCULPTURE ON THE PEDESTAL OF THE WELLINGTON MONUMENT AT LIVERPOOL.

THE bronze alto-relievo sculpture, designed by Mr. G. A. Lawson and cast by Messrs. Robinson and Cottam, for the pedestal of the Wellington Monument in Lime-street, Liverpool, has lately been fixed in its place. We give an illustration of the design, which is of a very bold and striking character. Its subject is that momentous incident of the Battle of Waterloo when the Duke ordered the Guards to make their final charge. The representation includes a group of about twenty figures, nearly 3 ft. in height, and the idea sought to be conveyed is very well carried out. The principal figure, of course, is that of Wellington himself, who occupies a position in the relief upon the spectator's left. He is upon horseback, holding a telescope in one hand and the reins lightly in the other. In the background, and slightly in advance of his chief, is Lord Hill, also upon horseback, who is pointing the Duke's attention to some movement of the enemy. Immediately in the rear of Wellington rides the Marquis of Anglesey, in his hussar uniform and upon his fine horse, while, in a Highlander, in kilt and tartan, who, still in the attitude of a running man, has just arrived in hot haste with some despatch, and is also pointing forward. The attitude of the Duke and the expression of his countenance are skilfully conceived, and give one a good idea of his calm, imperturbable temperament, which is rendered the more striking by the excitement visible in those around. The horse on which he is mounted is designed with great freedom and spirit. In front of Wellington the Guards are advancing—the charge with fixed bayonets, and the artist has succeeded in giving considerable variety to the action and expression of the men. One of the officers in front has just received a mortal wound, and, with his eyes closed in death and his hand pressed to his heart, is only seen from falling by a soldier who has stepped from the ranks. Close by, another wounded officer is lying upon the ground; and the mangled remains of others who have before fallen victims are scattered about, the living trampling over the dying and the dead. Battered standards, broken guns, swords, shot and shell, are seen lying about in all directions, half hidden by the trodden corn, and denoting what a scene of strife and havoc has been enacted on that famous field.

CAUTION.—MENIER'S CHOCOLATE (Chocolat Menier).—Important notice.—To avoid being deceived by resemblance in the form of the cakes, colour of the covering, arrangement of the label, and that quasi-similarity of names which imitators have invented for the purpose of passing off their chocolate as the Chocolat-Menier, the purchasers should look for the trade-marks, the real name upon the back of each division of the cake, and the signature "Menier" upon the seal of the cover. The fine quality (yellow paper) at the price marked, 2s. per pound, is especially imitated, because it is this that the public have particularly adopted. It gives the highest satisfaction, both for its low price and its excellent quality.
Wholesale, Menier, No. 23, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, W.C.

BREAKFAST BEVERAGE.—Homœopathic practitioners, and the medical profession generally, recommend COCOA as being the most healthful of all beverages. When the doctrine of homœopathy was first introduced into this country there were to be obtained no preparations of cocoa either attractive to the taste or acceptable to the stomach; the nut was either supplied in the crude state or so unskilfully manufactured as to obtain little notice. J. EPPS, of London, homœopathic chemist, was induced, in the year 1839, to turn his attention to this subject, and at length succeeded, with the assistance of elaborate machinery, in being the first to produce an article pure in its composition, and so refined by the perfect trituration it receives in the process it passes through as to be most acceptable to the delicate stomach. For general use Epps's cocoa is distinguished as an invigorating, grateful breakfast beverage, with delicious aroma. Dr. Hassall, in his work, "Food and its Adulterations," says:—"Cocoa contains a great variety of important nutritive principles; every ingredient necessary to the growth and sustenance of the body." Again, "As a nutritive, cocoa stands very much higher than either coffee or tea." Directions:—Two tablespoonfuls of the powder in a breakfast cup filled with boiling water or milk. Tin-lined ¼lb., ½lb., and 1lb. labelled packets. Sold by grocers, confectioners, and chemists. Each packet is labelled "J. Epps, Homœopathic Chemist, 112, Great Russell-street, 170, Piccadilly; 48, Threadneedle-street; Manufactory, 398, Euston-road, London."

EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES, for Cough, are supplied only in boxes, containing two and four ounces, 6d. and 1s., labelled J. Epps, Homœopathic Chemist, No. 112, Great Russell-street; 170, Piccadilly; and 48, Threadneedle-street.

DR. DE JONGH'S
(Knight of the Order of Leopold of Belgium)
LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL. Invariably pure, uniformly excellent, palatable, and easily taken. Universally recognised to be incomparably superior to every other kind.

DISEASES OF THE LUNGS AND CHEST.

The extraordinary virtues of DR. DE JONGH'S COD-LIVER OIL in Pulmonary Consumption may now be considered as fully established. No remedy so rapidly restores the exhausted strength, improves the nutritive functions, stops or diminishes emaciation, checks the perspiration, quiets the cough and expectoration, or produces a more marked and favourable influence on the local malady. DR. WAUDBY, late Physician to the Hereford Infirmary, bears the following high testimony to its efficacy in Diseases of the Chest, from his own personal experience:—"I can take DR. DE JONGH'S OIL without difficulty or dislike and with as little inconvenience as water alone. Not only in my own case, but in many others I have seen, it has caused an improvement of chest symptoms and an increase of weight, so soon and so lastingly as to be quite remarkable. I believe DR. DE JONGH'S OIL to be the most valuable remedy we possess for chronic and constitutional disease."

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

The late Dr. JONATHAN PEREIRA, F.R.S., Physician to the London Hospital, &c., &c.
"It was fitting that the author of the best analysis and investigations into the properties of this Oil should himself be the purveyor of this important medicine. Whether considered with reference to its colour, flavour, or chemical properties, I am satisfied that, for medicinal purposes, no finer Oil can be procured."

DR. EDWARD SMITH, F.R.S., Physician to the Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest, Brompton, &c., &c.
"We think it a great advantage that there is one kind of Cod-liver Oil which is universally admitted to be genuine—the Light-brown Oil supplied by DR. DE JONGH. It has long been our practice, when prescribing the Oil, to recommend this kind, since, amidst so much variety and uncertainty, we have confidence in its genuineness."—(Extract from "Consumption, its Early and Remediable Stages.")

DR. LANKESTER, F.R.S., Coroner for Central Middlesex, &c., &c.
"I consider that the purity and genuineness of this Oil are secured in its preparation by the personal attention of so good a Chemist and intelligent a Physician as DR. DE JONGH, who has also written the best Medical Treatise on the Oil with which I am acquainted. Hence I deem the Cod-liver Oil sold under his guarantee to be preferable to any other kind as regards genuineness and medicinal efficacy."

DR. LETHEBY, Medical Officer of Health, and Chief Analyst to the city of London, &c., &c.
"The Oil corresponds in all its characters with that named 'Huile Brune,' and described as the best variety in the masterly treatise of DR. DE JONGH. It is, I believe, universally acknowledged that DR. DE JONGH'S Light-brown Cod-liver Oil has great therapeutic power; and, from my investigations, I have no doubt of its being a pure and unadulterated article."

DR. BARLOW, Senior Physician to Guy's Hospital, &c., &c.
"I have frequently recommended persons consulting me to make use of DR. DE JONGH'S Cod-liver Oil. I have been well satisfied with its effects, and believe it to be a very pure Oil, well fitted for those cases in which the use of that substance is indicated."

EDWIN CANTON, ESQ., F.R.C.S., Surgeon to Charing-cross Hospital, &c., &c.
"For several years past I have been in the habit of prescribing DR. DE JONGH'S Light-brown Cod-liver Oil, and find it to be much more efficacious than any other varieties of the same medicine which I have also employed with a view to test their relative superiority."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold only in capsuled IMPERIAL half-pints, 2s. 6d.; pints, 4s. 9d.; quarts, 9s.; labelled with his stamp and signature, WITHOUT WHICH NONE CAN POSSIBLY BE GENUINE, by respectable Chemists and Druggists.

CRAMER'S ENGLISH PIANETTE. 37 Guineas. Cramer and Co. manufacture this capital small instrument, with the full compass of seven octaves, and trichord throughout, with check repeater action. The case is of polished oak or pine. In practising on this Pianette the fingers of the player will find the same elasticity of touch and rapidity there as on the Grand Pianoforte, and will serve to the learner. In rosewood or walnut, 36 and 38 Guineas.

Purchasers are particularly requested to observe that this instrument has not the common or single action, but the double or check action; and that Cramer and Co. are the original manufacturers.

BROADWOOD'S NEW DRAWING-ROOM GRAND, price 75 guineas in Rosewood, and 105 guineas in Walnut or Mahogany. Broadwood and Sons, in introducing this new Grand Pianoforte, have not merely adopted the Pianoforte Cramer and Co. have selected the very finest specimens and they have added to them all the improvements of the present day, and the result is a Pianoforte of the most elegant form and perfect fashion. Gentlemen—the public having an opportunity of hearing this Pianoforte at Cramer, Beale, and Chappell's Pianoforte Gallery, 201, Regent-street, which after three years gives the instrument to the purchaser, or the hirer can have the option of purchasing the Pianoforte Gallery (the largest in Europe), 307 and 309, Regent-street.

BRADD'S NEW BOUDOIR GRANDS, in Rosewood, 50 guineas; in Walnut, 55 guineas. Broadwood and Co. have selected from the manufactories of three celebrated makers—Broadwood, Collard, and Erard—the best specimens of each, that is to say, the best pianofortes produced. These are specially in advance of the older class of instruments, and secure very near the power of a Cottage Grand. Gentlemen—the public having an opportunity of hearing this Pianoforte at Cramer, Beale, and Chappell's Pianoforte Gallery, 201, Regent-street, which after three years gives the instrument to the purchaser, or the hirer can have the option of purchasing the Pianoforte Gallery (the largest in Europe), 307 and 309, Regent-street.

THE SOUTH LONDON INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION AT THE LAMBETH BATHS.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

THE OPERATIVE COACHMAKERS' EXHIBITION IN THE HALL OF THE COACHMAKERS' COMPANY, NOBLE-STREET, ST. MARTIN'S-LE-GRAND.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

THE SOUTH LONDON INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION.

The second South London Industrial Exhibition at the Lambeth Baths was opened on Wednesday week. The ceremony was performed by the Bishop of Winchester, supported by the Right Hon. W. Cowper, M.P.; the Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, M.P.; Mr. Locke, M.P.; Mr. Doulton, M.P.; Messrs. Charles and Thomas Lucas, the Rev. Newman Hall, and others. Prayers having been read, the Bishop opened the proceedings in a kindly and appropriate address, in which he dwelt on the value to the working classes of such displays of competitive industry, and then called on Mr. G. M. Murphy, the hon. secretary, to read the report. This report, after referring to the first efforts of the promoters of the plan, went on to say that at an early period of the movement it was determined to raise a guarantee fund of £1000 for the purpose of securing the committee against loss and of inspiring the exhibitors with confidence in the project. The sum guaranteed was £1108 5s. 6d., the number of guarantors being ninety-six, many of whom are working men. The committee also offered a prize of £5 for the best design for an exhibition medal, the competitors to be working men. Twenty-one designs were forwarded, and the adjudicators (D. Maclise, R.A.; R. Redgrave, R.A.; and M. D. Wyatt, F.S.A.;) were unanimous in awarding the prize to Mr. R. W. Martin, of Walworth. Arrangements have also been made that a medal from the designs to which was awarded the second place in the adjudicators' list will be sold in the exhibition. The number of exhibitors are 663; this number might have been doubled, supposing they had had sufficient room to accomodate so many, and had not been scrupulously strict as to prescribed boundaries and the time for the reception of applications. The room required for exhibition purposes is about 5000 square feet of wall or hanging space, 1200 feet run of table space of various depths, and 800 feet of floor space. To meet so large a demand for room the erection of the gallery, as at present constructed, was determined upon, as well as the appropriation of premises adjoining the bath. In all these arrangements the committee have had in view the accommodation of the public, the comfort of the exhibitors, and the success of the exhibition; and they trust it may be found that they have not altogether failed. In order that every facility may be afforded to all classes for the examination of the articles brought together at so much expenditure of time and skill, the exhibition will be opened every Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, from twelve till four, at the charge of 6d.; on Fridays, from twelve till four, 2s. 6d.; and every evening, from six till ten (Saturdays, two till ten), 2d.; children half-price at all times. The committee have to acknowledge the great pleasure they have felt in receiving such hearty co-operation from all with whom their duties have brought them in contact—the president, vice presidents, guarantors, adjudicators, the chairmen and speakers at the public meetings, the representatives of the press, and all who have laboured with them.

The reading of this report was followed by long applause; and, a few addresses having been made by Mr. Kinnaird, the Rev. Newman Hall, Mr. Locke, and other speakers, the National Anthem was sung and the exhibition declared to be formally opened. The collection will remain on view for one month.

THE OPERATIVE COACHMAKERS' INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION.

An exhibition of models and specimens of workmanship belonging to the coachmaking and harness-making trades was opened, on Wednesday week, in the hall of the Honourable Company of Coach and Harness Makers, Noble-street, St. Martin's-le-Grand. The Marquis of Lansdowne and the Dean of St. Paul's favoured the opening of this exhibition with their presence, as well as the Master and Wardens of the Coachmakers' Company; Mr. Henry Cole, C.B.; and several of the leading members of the Society of Arts. A guard of honour of the 4th Middlesex (West London) Rifle Volunteers, under the command of Captain Woodall, attended on the occasion. The Marquis of Lansdowne presided, and delivered a brief address congratulating both the masters and workmen of the coachmaking and harness-making trades in London upon their first industrial exhibition. Mr. G. N. Hooper, chairman of the managing committee, read a short essay upon the history and present state of these trades, observing that in 1669, when the Coachmakers' Company obtained their first charter from King Charles II., their industry was a mystery, and its processes were secret; but such an exhibition as this showed vast change, not only in the processes employed, but in the altered state of feeling on the part of employers and workmen, who now courted inquiry, comparison, and inspection of their work, hoping to interest the public by showing how much ingenuity, patience, and care were necessary for the production of a first-rate carriage. This exhibition of the coachmakers' handicraft, as a first attempt, is very creditable. There are most ingenious and tasteful drawings and designs for carriages by working men, and various models of improvements in splinterbars, steps, roofs, and other details of carriage-building. Elegant models of the Queen's and other state carriages form an attractive feature in the exhibition; and there are some wonderful specimens both of heraldic and ordinary coach painting. Some of the imitations of "basket" bodies are exquisite. In another department the harness-makers are excellently represented; and there is an immense variety of coach lamps, including one which generates its own illuminating vapour and produces a most powerful and continuous light. Cushions, hammer-cloths, lace, and the whole furniture of every description of carriage, are exhibited in great variety, with all the more mechanical parts of coachbuilding. Not the least useful among the designs for improvements are the models of street-cabs and other vehicles for the conveyance of the sick and wounded to the hospitals. Altogether, the exhibition is well worth a visit.

M. Nigra, the Italian Minister, has made a present to the Empress Eugénie of a Venetian gondola, to navigate the calm waters of Fontainebleau. M. Nigra, besides being a diplomatist, is also a poet, and accompanied his present with a sonnet engraved in gold letters inside the gondola. The verses are said to be very well turned. A French version has been published, of which the substance may be thus rendered:—"Christened in the stormy waters of the Adriatic, the fatal city of the Doges sends me to thee. At thy feet, fair Empress, I lay the anger, hopes, and fears of an oppressed race. The winged lion, erst so proud, is now in chains! the soil of St. Marc echoes to the foreigner's tramp; the faithless sea has broken the ring of our mystic nuptials; the gondolier's lips are mute. The moon sadly tinges the golden domes; silent is the laguna, and the sea without a sail; the lion slumbers yet on his bed of seaweed—till the day of vengeance wakes him to life again. Woman! If the silent Emperor ever lingers on this peaceful lake, tell him that on the Adriatic shore Venice—spoiled, naked, bleeding—suffers, but lives still, and waits for the hour of her freedom."

The ship Landsborough, 1166 tons burden, belonging to Messrs. Tike, Mackay, and Co., sailed on the 12th ult. from Gravesend, and 23rd from Plymouth, for Queensland; Captain Maxwell, commander; Surgeon-Superintendent, Dr. F. H. Scott; assisted by Mrs. Edwards, matron. The Landsborough is the forty-ninth vessel that has sailed on the land order system of emigration, under the immediate direction of the Queensland Government. She contains 317 souls, divided into paying, assisted, and free passengers, and consisting of 146 members of families, 116 single men, and 61 single females.——The Castle Eden, which sailed from Southampton on the 9th of July last, arrived at Moreton Bay, Queensland, on the 31st of October, with 316 Government emigrants. Seven births and three deaths (all of infants) took place on the voyage.——The Queen of the South, which left Liverpool on the 31st of July, arrived at Moreton Bay on the 31st of October, with 434 emigrants. Thirteen deaths (including three adults) and four births took place on board.——The Sir Robert Sale, which left Plymouth on the 30th of July, arrived at Sydney, New South Wales, on the 29th of October, with 292 emigrants. Seven deaths and two births took place on board.

The following special gifts for the purchase of the life-boats hereafter named were presented last year to the National Life-boat Institution:—Berwick-on-Tweed, Bridlington, Cardigan, and Carmarthen Bay, collected in Manchester by Messrs. R. Whitworth, J. G. Bell, and the Rev. E. Hewlett, £940 9s. 10d.; Alnmouth, Miss Wardell, £320; Redcar, Messrs. John Crossley and Sons, £300; Whitby, No. 2, Dr. H. W. Watson, £180; Donna Nook, Mr. Robert How and Miss How, £350; Theddlethorpe, Mrs. B. Caslake, £350; Sutton, collected in Birmingham, £250; Skegness, friends of the late Mr. Herbert Ingram, M.P., £205 5s.; Dover, collected in Wiltshire by Captain N. J. Reed, R.N., £435 10s. 9d.; Poole, a Lady, £500; Penzance, J. C., £250; Sennen Cove, Mrs. M. A. Davis, £300; Padstow, collected in Bristol by Captain R. Tryon, R.N., £570; Newquay (Cardigan), Ancient Order of Foresters, £255 11s. 3d.; Porthdinllaen, Lady Cotton Sheppard and Friends, £250; Holyhead and New Brighton, Mr. Joseph Leather, £662 15s.; Blackpool, Mrs. and Miss Hopkins, £250; Piel, Commercial Travellers' Life-boat Fund, £250; Girvan, Mr. Alexander Kay, £400; Londonderry, Mr. J. D. Aldcroft, £250; Tramore, Cambridge University Boat Club, £250; Ardmore, a Friend, £300; Valentia, a Lady, £508; making a total of £8327 11s. 10d. Each life-boat station requires £50 a year to keep it in a state of efficiency.

FINE ARTS.

EXHIBITION OF THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

This exhibition, just opened in Pall-mall, is a decided improvement upon its immediate predecessors. Artists of established reputation (with some conspicuous exceptions we shall presently note) are still sparsely represented; but there are many works of interest by the "rising men," and among these there appear to us to be a larger proportion of subjects giving some evidence of reading if not of invention. The hanging also is more satisfactory than it has been for some years, yet any qualified judge of art could point to several very manifest discrepancies between relative position and merit.

When this exhibition is the subject of conversation at the dinner-table or in the drawing-room, as well as generally in art-circles, the fact that will probably be first discussed will be that Sir Edwin Landseer contributes three pictures. Of these the most remarkable, for its conception of the stern wildness and terror of nature, is entitled "An Event in the Forest" (204). A stag has fallen headlong from a precipice among the ice, snow, and boulders which block the bed of a mountain torrent, and lies with eyes filmed in death. A fox, scenting his prey, is cautiously approaching, but suddenly crouches with fear at sight of an eagle, who, with outspread wings and retracted claws, looms on high through the mist and prismatic bow of the torrent, and prepares to dart down with lightning swoop for the first repast. The execution of this picture, though apparently very slight, is most masterly; it expresses the animal character perfectly, and is fully competent to convey to the mind a sense of the fine imagination which pervades the entire work. Excellent, also, though in a different way, is the more familiar subject called "No Hunting till the Weather Breaks" (189), where, in front of a kennel and among the pack of hounds, a hunter stands, ready-saddled—looking back, as horses will when they expect to be mounted—and with his master's pink thrown across the saddle; but no master appears, or is likely to appear, through the driving snow. In a third picture, of a Skye terrier—a portrait, as the title indicates, of a favourite dog belonging to her Majesty—"Dear Old Boz" (85), Sir Edwin is seen to less advantage than in any recent work we remember; the tone is monotonously low, and the greens of the background are not pleasing in contrast. Another well-known animal-painter, Mr. Ansdell, has a very large picture at the head of the room, which, although more distinguished for ability and spirit than many of his paintings nearer the cabinet size, appears to us in subject forced and far-fetched. It is a canine version of "The Death of Cæsar." Impersonating Cæsar is a huge brindled and, we believe, Cuban mastiff, who lies, weltering in his blood, at the foot of a pedestal bearing a bronze statue erected to the memory of "Pompey," a favourite setter, as, by-the-way, may have been a not unusual custom in ancient Rome, judging from the Hall of Animals, in the Vatican. In the background are Brutus, Cassius, senators, and citizens, in the shape of howling and slinking stag-hounds, blood-hounds, pointers, and so forth. Now, how Cæsar met his death is here not clear; and the whole seems a parody, neither comic nor edifying. We do not wish to draw odious comparisons; but it is not thus that Landseer has traced or suggested those analogies between man and the brute creation which have so often won our sympathies for the latter. It is legitimate to seek resemblances in the natural habits and instincts of animals to those of men; but the result is only grotesque when we, as it were, merely transform men into animals. Metempsychoses of this sort, while allowable enough in written fable, are generally too palpably absurd in the more definite realisations of the painter.

Turning to subject-pictures with human figures, we have to notice an unusual number of works of assured excellence or promise. Mr. J. Pettie, whose "Time and Place" we engraved last year, has two pictures equally remarkable for dextrous facility of touch. The one represents a wounded cavalier despatch-bearer (402) lying on straw (the figure admirably foreshortened) concealed in a barn, with a buxom lassie bringing him a bowl of soup or posset. In the other a poor fiddler of a theatrical orchestra, who, as the title tells us, is "Out of an Engagement" (312)—though not for want of applying for one, as his muddy boots and the pile of playbills testify—is seen solacing himself over his violin in a comfortless garret, while two daughters, perhaps themselves unemployed ballet-girls, regard him with pitying love. Appeals like this to our compassion for the secret distress of those who minister to our amusement have often been made by Thackeray, Dickens, and Bulwer, and they are surely equally proper to the function of the painter. Mr. F. Wyburd has a picture called "Baby's Corner" (51), which we are engraving, and shall therefore have another opportunity of describing. Mr. C. Lucy, the painter of several large historical works, and notably of "Cromwell at Hampton Court"—a picture exhibited during last season at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly—has, alternating to the moderate in scale and familiar in subject, invested with a fresh charm of touching expression and pleasing colour the nursery rhyme of "The Babes in the Wood" (358). The background was probably studied from the noble beeches of Fontainebleau forest, near which this English artist resides.

Mr. W. B. Richmond, a young artist (son of the A.R.A.), exhibits a picture so striking in certain qualities as to guarantee much public interest in his career. Three little maidens, called "Three Sisters" (118)—we suppose in a poetical sense, for they have no family resemblance—are seated in a rocky landscape. On the lap of the eldest lies an open book, and we are led to infer that some passages she has read from it, combining in their effect with the romantic solitude of the scene, the soothing hush of evening, and the mellow glow which, as well as flushing the neighbouring heights with roseate light, suffuses all nature with gorgeous though low-toned reflected hues, have led all three into mute reverie, like three sister Mignons. It may be objected that the sentiment expressed is beyond the years of these little ladies; that the centre figure is rather commonplace in character; that there is with modern types of face an apparent simulation of needless mediævalism, and that the flesh-painting is comparatively heavy; yet, after all deductions are made, there is an almost Giorgionesque richness of colour in this picture that is unique in this exhibition, and indicates the possession of a rare faculty, all the more remarkable in an artist so young as Mr. Richmond. We should add that the brilliancy of colour is obtained by painting solely with transparent colours on a thick impaste of white, and the danger of this system of execution is that the means of effect may, by becoming too obvious, lose the virtue of genuine art. M. G. D. Leslie, another young artist, son of an academician, seems resolved to live in a rather crudely vernal yet, withal, pleasant fifteenth-century world of his own: witness his young gallant up a cherry-tree, near a moated hall or manor house, plucking some of the fruit for lips as red (395); and his stingy monk cheapening the Lent mackerel of a pretty upbraiding fish-girl (534). Mr. F. Weekes (again a son of an academician) brings to his illustrations of the past, if a gloomy set of colours, a bright and racy humour: see his brigands "Dividing Spoil" (264), and his "Settled or Not" (460)—a grotesquely-grim Don Quixote-like Roundhead, or, more probably, a border ruffian, alighting from his Rosinante and advancing cautiously towards an enemy or victim at whom he has just emptied the contents of his carbine. Mr. Weekes sends also a comic little picture, which might at first sight be attributed to his brother, of an old fellow rasping on his fiddle "Away with Melancholy" (488).

Mr. C. Rossiter has an exquisite little bit of sixteenth-century street life (307), perfect in colour and telling of the story—in truth quite a gem—representing a staid civilian protecting (ready, if need be, with his cudgel) a fair girl from the insolent attentions of a young lordling or courtier. A happy thought, as indicating the character of the times, is that of introducing the young clothier's apprentice, who, with another cudgel, is coming out to the defence, fearless of the fop's rapier, from the sign of the Golden Fleece hard by. Mr. R. Beavis gives us a stirring and highly-picturesque tableau of Scottish chivalry illustrative of Scott's "Lay," "The March of the Men of Buccleuch" (292). Mr. D. W. Wynfield has made a considerable advance in his picture of a gay gallant audibly "Composing his Love Speech" (109), to the infinite amusement of two listening, comely young dames, for one or both of whom the speech is doubtless designed. The last, but not, though rather drily painted, the least promising, picture we have to notice in the class of "historical-genre" is "A Man of Straw" (3), by Mr. E. Crawford, which is easily construed as a man whose once costly but now shabby dress proclaims him ruined by the "law's delays," or the frequent impossibility of obtaining justice, say only a hundred and fifty years ago; and whom a crafty lawyer is here torturing by sounding his ability to advance the necessary bribes to suborn witnesses, whether true or false.

Of subjects drawn from contemporary life there is no lack in this exhibition. Spain supplies materials to two painters of merit: Mr. Burgess, who contributes a more than usually rich and effective study, "The Beauty of Valencia" (551); and Mr. Long, who sends a characteristically impish little Gitanino (14). By Mr. H. W. Phillips there is a study of an Egyptian head (174), well drawn and modelled and broad in effect. Mr. F. Richie is the exhibitor of a provoking picture of "A Border Fair" (319)—"provoking" because, while the labour expended is great and the incidents are graphic and multifarious, the colouring is lamentably black and the drawing distressingly unsound. There is far more art-merit in Mr. J. Holland's "After the Race" (483). Mr. A. Johnstone's "Youth and Age" (105)—an ancient dame counselling a young lassie—has the painter's usual facile effectiveness. Mr. J. Morgan is seen to more than ordinary advantage, especially as regards colour, in two or three pictures of child life and character—of which one, entitled "Little Woman," is especially to be commended. Mr. J. Clark's subject of the same class, "Going to School" (225), has the negative hues of recent works, with, however, much luminousness and some of that simple truth to nature and freedom from self-consciousness rare among English pictures of this class, yet never wholly absent from this artist's works.

Mr. P. R. Morris, the Academy gold-medal student at Rome, and the young artist whose "Morning After the Crucifixion," in last year's exhibition, we so warmly praised for its originality (an estimate which has been confirmed by Mr. Ruskin in his "Cestus of Aglaia"), contributes a picture which deserved a better fate than to be placed next the floor in the third room. It is called "The Battle Scar" (516), and sets before us a young soldier of a Highland regiment showing his mother the now hardly-perceptible trace of an old cut in his sword-arm from a Russian sabre or Indian tulwar. The subject may not suit fastidious tastes, and the soldier is, it must be confessed, a rather smug young Sandie; but the painting generally, and very especially that of the head of the loving, clinging mother, is worthy of all praise. Mr. G. E. Hicks, under the title, "A Lesson in Faith" (475), has a manly and pleasing picture of a little boy jumping fearlessly from the top of a tall cabinet into the arms of his sailor father.

The pressure on our space this week compels us to defer our remarks on the landscapes, &c., in this exhibition till next week.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

My Diary in America in the Midst of War. By G. A. Sala. (Tinsley.) Mr. Sala's peculiar powers appear to the greatest possible advantage in these two volumes; and the consequence is that there has not been published for many a long day a book more full of entertainment and amusement. His keen faculty of observation had full scope; his talent for minute description was taxed to its utmost; his ability to place both persons and things in the most striking light was freely exercised; his intimate acquaintance with popular taste had a chance of showing itself; his brilliant colouring had a fine opening for application; his appreciation of humour did him excellent service; his capacious memory or his punctual notification supplied him with copious stores of anecdote; and his epigrammatic style of writing gave a pungent flavour to the sentences which flowed from his pen. It must be remembered, however, that the greater part of that which is contained in his two volumes was written in the form of letters to a newspaper which has, perhaps, the largest circulation of all daily publications in England, if not in the world. The remembrance of this fact will enable the reader to understand not only why Mr. Sala frequently speaks of himself as "the subscriber," but also why he should have been accused by the Americans (particularly those of extreme Northern principles) of misrepresentation. For it is plain that he must have given ready ear to what would be likely to amuse and to gratify his readers and to increase the circulation of the paper for which he had undertaken his pilgrimage; and how well Mr. Sala fulfilled his objects, let those many admirers testify who purchased the Daily Telegraph simply for the pleasure to be derived from his letters. Now, experience will tell you that there is nothing so delightful as to have pointed out to you the mote in your neighbour's eye; and in this respect Mr. Sala has been a most conscientious as well as humorous showman. He would, of course, have scouted the idea of putting upon paper what he had neither seen nor heard; but he would naturally repeat not only what he saw but what he heard that was likely from its grotesqueness to convulse with laughter, from its folly to put upon good terms with themselves, and from its horribility to interest as well as shock his readers. In fact, the "chiel" who "taks notes" in a foreign country nearly always does so in the spirit of a censor. Hence the charge against Mr. Sala of misrepresentation, by which is probably meant an unconsciously, perhaps, partial, but still a partial, representation. A man who spends but a year in a large country cannot gain an insight into its interior economy; he gets but the public—which is usually the worse—view of it; and Mr. Sala, so far as we can discover, does not seem to have penetrated far, if at all, into American private society. Nathaniel Hawthorne, who lived amongst us in time of peace far longer than Mr. Sala lived amongst the Americans in time of war, found occasion to apply the lash to us; and, though he did not lay it on with the vigour displayed by Mr. Sala, even Nathaniel Hawthorne has been accused of misrepresentation. However, that the Americans are not so black as they have (not by Mr. Sala) been painted is proved by the fact that Mr. Sala, in spite of his "misrepresentation," was not subjected to the American amenities of cowhiding, tar-and-feathering, or gratuitous riding upon a rail. He hit them hard, and they winced; but they took no ruffianly vengeance such as they are reported to be in the habit of taking. One is pained at Mr. Sala's views on the negro question; but, on the whole, one is inclined to look upon his picture as a faithful representation of matters as they appeared to a writer who was far from a "Northern sympathiser," who was on the look out for literary capital, and who was expected to make of his capital the most that he possibly could. Mr. Sala was, of course, dependent to a considerable extent upon hearsay, but it will be profitable in the interest of truth to compare what he says at p. 361 and at p. 377, vol. ii., with what has been written about Sherman's barbarity in driving out the inhabitants from Atlanta and about the composition of the Northern armies. We read, with respect to the former, "all the inhabitants who were able fled from before the dreaded Yankees," from which one would infer that there was no great hardship in removing those who would have gone had they been able, and that Hood's letter to Sherman was mere "talk;" and with respect to the latter, "the best blood, the best bone, the best sinew, of the Northern States have already been offered up to this Moloch. There is scarcely a Unionist family—from that of the millionaire merchant to that of the petty farmer and storekeeper—which has not sent a son, a brother, and often even a father and bread-winner to the war;" from which one would infer that the Northern armies are not entirely, or even principally, composed of "Irish and German mercenaries." It is true that Sherman's reply to Hood does not quite bear out the inference we have said might be drawn, so that Mr. Sala's account may not be literally correct; but as regards the composition of the Union armies, Mr. Sala is as likely to be well informed as any other "special correspondent" or "commissioner," and it is desirable, whatever one's individual sympathies may be, that truth should not be sacrificed to prejudice and passion.

Our Convicts. By Mary Carpenter. (Longmans.) The name of Miss Carpenter, of Bristol, is very well known to all who take an interest in the most difficult problems of social reform. That lady has won for her opinions the authority which is due to a practical experience of some fourteen years in her benevolent labours in the school which she has founded at Red Lodge House for the moral and industrial training of destitute children who might otherwise be thrown into a life of crime. By the publication of two distinct treatises on the subject of "Juvenile Delinquency" and "Reformatory Schools," followed by her evidence before a Committee of the House of Commons and her frequent communications to the Birmingham conferences and the successive congresses of the Social Science Association, Miss Carpenter has already proved that an enlightened woman is far abler than the generality of men to solve the question of the best mode of reclaiming neglected or corrupted boys and girls.

The treatment of adult criminals is another question; though it may perhaps be said that, as they are but children of a larger growth, the same principles of management which Miss Carpenter has found most successful in a juvenile reformatory should be found in our convict prisons. It is enough, however, here to remark that she gives her strongest recommendations to the chief features of the "mark system," as it was called, which the late Captain Maconochie introduced into the penal settlement in Norfolk Island about twenty years ago. The essential principle of this system is to make the criminal perceive that by good behaviour he can shorten the period of his trial of which are recorded with a punctual accuracy from day to day, will gradually improve his position, and that the moral qualities and habits will certainly be attended with the forfeiture of a step in his advancement. This is done by the use of a set of marks, corresponding to certain privileges which may be earned by the accumulation of a stated number, resulting finally in an abridgement of the term of imprisonment and a small pecuniary reward on the day he first begins his new life of freedom in the world outside. We may quote the sentence in which Captain Maconochie explained the moral working of the mark system:—"It is to place criminals in a state of utter poverty, destitution, and suffering, from which nothing but the most strenuous, persevering, unflinching exertion can elevate them; they are to be at the bottom of a well, with a ladder provided by which they may ascend if they will, but without any bolstering or dragging up, other than their own efforts; if they even halt they are made to descend, for their maintenance from day to day is to be charged to them." A thoroughly consistent system of penal servitude has practically been established by Miss Carpenter, if administered without caprice or favour, would deal beneficially, no doubt, with nine tenths of the common offenders. It may still be possible, for a signal exception, to send a criminal out of mere heinous crimes, especially in cases of personal outrage, to retain the old-fashioned institutions of the Hulks and the whipping-post and the like. In these cases the reformatory object of most secondary punishments should give place to the vindication of the supremacy of the law and terrible example. The reclamation of ordinary criminals who belong to the class of professional thieves and vagabonds is not the moral strength to endure a life of patient labour is quite a different matter; and the views set forth by Miss Carpenter on this subject are worthy of our best consideration.

Christian's Walks. By the author of "Julia Halifax, Gentlewoman." (Hurst and Blackett.)—The title of this simple story is calculated to mislead. One's mind naturally reverts to the dear old "Pilgrim's Progress," and one looks to find that Christian made his escape out of the city to the Celestial City. But the Christian who made or did not make a mistake was a young lady of the name of Christian, and she age, married a man (whom she did not love, but very much respected) of forty-five or fifty years of age. She did not love him at first, but soon learn for few weeks in love, and had interchanged letters with a young gentleman whose acquaintance she had made at the house of a decease him; and this omission is, if we understand the author, supposed to have been the cause of Christian's illness. It is not clear that her grave and reverend senior and husband was aware of her love affair and of her high-minded dismissal of her lover, and had not been prompted by this knowledge to make her a proposal of marriage, it seems to us, in our insensible simplicity, that there was just as great a mistake in the matter on hers. Husband and wife appear to have agreed to unpack "and much "also about nothing," matters come straight, and the wedding cards turns away from the drawing-room door. The tale as good a life as anybody else. The book will, we have no doubt, be a great favourite with women. It is full of the most minute particulars upon love and marriage, and pretty, good, and naughty children. It shows how marriages can be made and, if we are not mistaken, are often out of nest to nothing; and in it due regard is paid to dress and ornamental matters. The effect produced upon the mind by a parure of diamonds is both natural and touching—she bursts into tears and very nearly loves her husband. But the way in which three hundred pounds are set and knit, and the manner in which must be the right spelling) and cry, is enough to make a man wish he had never been created. Christian would have given him to swear eternal bothersheetsd, to see on his own buttons, darn his socks, and keep a look-out for moths. The management of feminine contradiction in the story; the author advocates love as the only ground for marriage, and yet Christian's love for her husband, as love, is represented after six months' marriage as having a "complete and overcast idea." We are accustomed to look to women novelists to induce young ladies to disregard love as an incentive to matrimony than "Christian's Mistake."

Private Life of an Eastern Queen. By William Knighton, LL.D. (Longmans.) If there be not a loud call for this little book, then we have formed a most erroneous estimate of the curiosity felt by readers about the privacy of Oriental magazines. The queen alluded to is that unhappy Queen of Oudh, who, with a cruelty which she did not always deserved, but is been possible, the success which it failed to achieve, determined to be the penis and unfortunate Queen of Oudh (as she was to an Oriental) of a voyage from Lucknow to England, seek the favor of Queen Victoria, and beg a throne for the restoration of her son's kingdom. The story, told by Ethin Jan, the late Queen of Oudh's hookah-attendant, is full of interest, and notwithstanding the gigantic quaintness of the original from Urdu into English by Mr. Knighton, who expresses himself in a manner in which is related. The reader must not expect to find the events of the Queen's journey to, and sojourn in, England described; the narrative is confined to that of life at the Court of Oudh.

The Book of Perfumes. By Eugène Rimmel. (Chapman and Hall.) A handsome volume, embellished with numerous plates. It really a very learned and carefully-prepared history of perfumery; it is compiled with excellently illustrated and numerous extracts from various high authorities; and it does great credit to its compiler.

Duchess Agnes, &c. By Ira Craig. (Strahan.) The fame which the author won by her "Ode on the Coronation" and other occasional contributions to periodical literature will not be diminished by their association in present volumes.

The Voice of the Year. (Charles Griffin and Co.) An exceedingly handsome book, illustrated. It contains the choicest pastorals, which Our they be in translations or originals, by the best English poets. And there is a useful index for the assistance of those who wish to find out a favourite piece, an appropriate quotation, or a time-honoured authority.

The directors of the great railway in Bombay have selected Captain Garland Orders, R.E. as the manager-in-chief of their line.

The Reform movement makes rapid headway. On Thursday week the people of Rochdale met and passed a series of resolutions urging the necessity of an increase for the enfranchisement of the working classes; there was a similar meeting at Nottingham. It was attended by Mr. Paget, M.P., Mr. Ellis, M.P., and other members of Parliament. On the 30th ult. the people of Leeds and Manchester met in their respective towns. He time was held at Bolton on Monday last—Mr. R. Harwood, ex-Mayor, in the chair—at which a resolution was passed declaring that Parliament in being is a Reform bill immediately on the reassembling of Parliament.

The Rev. H. Solly, secretary of the Working Men's Club and Institute Union, has issued a circular to the clubs connected with the Union (Carey Inn, Jan. 28th), in which he says:—"We are quite right in considering that the Bill for Legalising Trade Societies is the most important social measure of the Union. I have written to Mr. Hughes to urge the rest of the cells under which the working classes labour, or that is better suited to secure the object. I am glad to say that the Government has decided to see them comply. I have written to Lord Lyttleton upon our want of increased facilities for beautify with him, and have received a courteous and benevolent answer. I replies to hear from him that the society continues to do its work." I am sincerely yours, Henry Solly."

Two deputations from Belfast waited on Thursday week upon the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the one at the head of the Duke of the Regius Doctum, and the second on the subject of intermediate education. That on the former subject had before the Lord Lieutenant the claims of the Presbyterians to increased support from the Government, and urged them by a reference to the strength and loyalty of their body. During the viceregalty of Lord Carlisle a deputation on this subject waited on him, and he forwarded their memorial to the Queen. The Prince's answer was considered favourable, and the Lord Lieutenant, although he promised to forward their memorial, held out no hope that the Government would grant the request of intermediate education was also from the Presbyterian Church. They wished for the establishment of a class of commercial occupying a place intermediate between the national schools and the classical schools. The deputation pressed himself in favour of turning the endowed schools to account for this purpose, but feared there would be difficulty in dealing with them in that way

THE NEGRO IN AMERICA.

"The coloured man," said Mr. Frederick Douglas, the eloquent negro orator, at a lecture which he recently delivered in New York, is the master of the situation. Your scholar-state he shall declare himself, on that side will be the victory." Mr. Douglas knows his people, and does not exaggerate the importance of the coloured man in the mighty struggle, of which their cause was the pretext rather than the cause; and, knowing them so well, his opinion that they will fight for the Union is the promise of freedom to themselves and families; that they will not, as some pessimists have feared, turn their coats and join the cause in which their services are enlisted; but that, on the contrary, they will zealously, faithfully, and bravely earn their liberty on the terms proposed, is entitled to the respect which all opinion founded upon knowledge claims from every loyal citizen of the South, under the pressure of military necessity, is about to make this vital experiment, the fate of a replenished race of the dwindling and ever diminished armies, the time is favourable for a review of the progress already made in the emancipation of the coloured race. As a preliminary to the consideration of the future of the negro, it be steadily borne in mind that the South, though it has always been proslavery, has always been pro-negro; and that the North has, in the manner, been anti-slavery and anti-negro. The South has maintained that it was a good thing for America that the negro should remain where it is and increase and multiply, and that it was a better thing for the negro that he should be a slave in America than free in Africa. The North, on the other hand, has maintained as strenuously that slavery was an abomination, a curse, and a crime; but that, all things considered, it was a very bad thing for America that the negro race had ever been introduced into it; and that if slavery was to be abolished, it was evils almost, if not quite, as flagrant. Social prejudice set up and still insists on this preposterous claim. The result is that throughout the North, the negro is practically excluded from participation in social position and political privilege by the tyranny of custom and the unanswerable argument of force. In the Free States of the West neither negro nor negress are allowed to enter the State. To harbour a negro is a penal offence for a coloured man to cross their borders and presume to live. But he has not left behind him white enemies. The negroes of the North feel this social excommunication more acutely than the negroes of the South. They are practically slaves. In the South the white man does not hate the negro, nor the negro the white man; while in the North the hate is mutual. The negro's chance of fame for the negro is purely theoretical and political, and not in the slightest degree social; while the opinion entertained by the negroes of their white foes is that they are the slaves of fear. It is their belief, is of the kind which uses men entertain towards palpable hypocrisy. They believe that the white man is a coward at the best thing they and their race could do would be to betake themselves out of the country. This is the feeling which prevails throughout America. Mr. Douglas, speaking for his race, declares that they will do nothing of the kind. "I was born in the United States, and like the rest of the earth, like the red Indians; that they have found a home in America, and like the rest of the earth, like the red Indians; that among friendly, and not among hostile, white people. Possibly, and very probably, the negro may be, if the South should achieve or help to achieve its independence by the aid of the coloured people, that the Southern negroes will be free. But the negroes of the North, and of the South, attracted by the superior congeniality of the climate. In the North there are 4,000,000 of negroes, and in the South 4,000,000. In fact, if their numbers were not augmented by fugitives from slavery, they would not increase. They are a prolific people, but of short race, as may be discovered from the fact that the annual number of deaths among them is as great as that of births.

The South hold the doctrine that the Federal Government had no power to abolish slavery in the States, but that the States had the only agency which could effect the purpose was the lawful and Constitutional legislation of the States in which it was established. Mr. Lincoln, by military reason and for State necessity, abolished slavery by proclamation and by stroke of the pen in the first year of the war, Missouri, Kentucky, Maryland, Delaware, right and left, it is not because of his proclamation, but because the Federal Army, by the proclamation, had liberated Missouri have, in their sovereign capacity, resolved to abolish it. Missouri has followed the lead of Maryland. In other words and deeds, finding the futility of "proclamations" or "edicts" of military power, debates no amendment to the Federal Constitution—the abolition of slavery by the States, in which, if the amendment shall pass, it will tolerate no longer. And, more effectual than anything that has been done or can be done, the Southern confederates not alone to emancipate its slaves, but to elevate them in the social scale, and look to them for aid in the war, by the offer of the liberties of mutual interest and reciprocal gratitude. The black man in the North is a pariah, in the South he is a man. It is probable that the black man who shall have served in the Confederate army will be free, and as much entitled to consideration as the white man whose contemporaries can make him.

It is from this point of consideration of all these circumstances that the emancipation of the slaves is more likely to be satisfactorily effected by the Southern than by the Northern people. So passionately does the North hate the South, so overwhelming are the sentiments of pride, as well as of material resources, that it is prepared to make for its black race the best terms that can be obtained. Instead of holding down its arms on the sole condition of the maintenance of slavery by the States, the Federal Government and the majority of the North would in all probability accede to the proposal. The negroes have the best of reasons for knowing that the Northern people have at all available opportunities that they will not consent to be played with by either side for the purpose of serving a party cause. They think they have arrived at the decisive moment of the struggle. There can be little doubt that the South are in want of greater help than they have the North; but the South, by reason of its climate, is a better home for people of their blood than the frozen regions of New York, New England, or Canada. It is probable that, under the properly-organised system of labour which would be necessary to prevent them from becoming a burden upon the resources of the South, if it should be recognised among the independent nations of the earth, would be available, by the Southern people, to develop the latent which resources more rapidly than it was ever able to do under the system of slave labour. The Southern people, almost universally adopted. Should, however, the South be conquered, the question of the negro as well as to emancipation would be settled by the North. Slavery may be abolished, but the Northern overseer will take the place of the Southern master, and the industrial and social condition of the negro throughout the whole Union as they now are in the North, and the poor negro will be fortunate if he escape in the sequel the fate of those races that could not be enslaved and as a consequence were exterminated.

There are 264 post towns in the United Kingdom which send letters to London; fifteen of these are sent by mail; and six which send five day mails.

At the monthly meeting of the Royal Archæological Society held on Monday week Dr. Brushfield read his second paper on the Parochial Registers and Registrars of Banbury in Oxfordshire. The Rev. Canon Blomfield presided, and there was a large attendance. Dr. Brushfield commenced with a historical and general description of the site, and of the pottery and insulated pavements discovered there, prefaced by a short sketch of the 21st Legion, and of its permanent head-quarters at Deva, of Chester. In his second paper he pointed out the usual characteristics of Roman masonry, so that the peculiarities of the Roman work at Deva might be clearly shown. Having carefully gone over all the details of the building, he came to the conclusion that the group of noble, classic-looking ornaments, in which much resemble ten and a thorough mastery of the subject were shown, that it was neither a temple nor a private dwelling, but that it most probably formed part of the public baths of Deva, with, possibly, shops and stores. For proof of this however, we must, he said, wait until further excavations have been made on the north and south sides. A short discussion followed, all the speakers agreeing in opinion with Dr. Brushfield, to whom a hearty vote of thanks was accorded.

THE FARM.

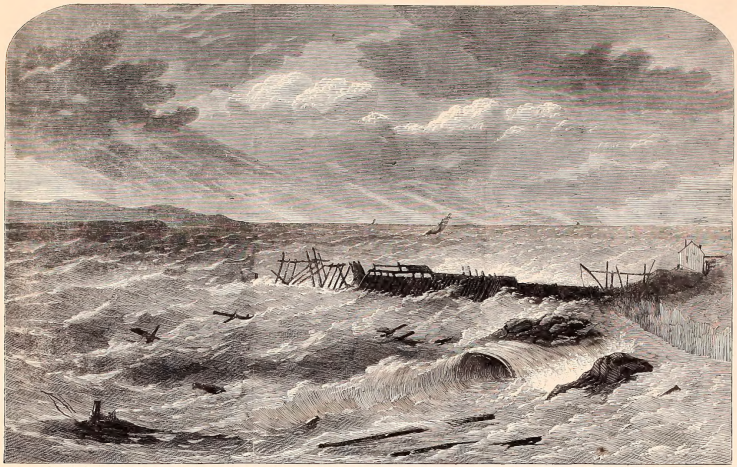
The monthly council of the Royal Agricultural Society was held last week. Its finance department seems to be flourishing, although the annual arrears from members on Dec. 31 were £831. The Newcastle meeting shows a balance of £1342 6s. 6d. on its own account; and the balance in the hands of the bankers on Jan. 31 was £1744 19s. 8d. Mr. Moore is made a foreign steward for the Plymouth meeting, and Mr. Bowly a steward of live stock in the room of Mr. Milward, whose three years of office has expired. In future all the prize awards are to have rosettes—white, red, and blue—for first, second, and third, but why not have a distinguishing ordeal for the judges? A rearrangement in munication committee has been formed to confer with directors, and to endeavour to settle the time upon which steel stock and implements can be conveyed over the companies lines.

The Fitzwarenne of the present month gives a very singular instance of accumulation of fat inside a four-year-old shorthorn ox. The very plain and light fleshed, but the conical fatty deposit was 3 ft. 1 in. in length, 2 ft. 1 in. in circumference at its largest end, and 151 lb. in weight. When cut into it was found to be of a beautiful white colour, and full of fine juice. The kidneys were covered in the same size, the left being much smaller than the right. The farmer (which we presume is the proper word for a manufacturer, who situated in the centre of the deposit) weighed only three quarters of a pound, and the latter three pounds and a half. The kidneys of the ox of the same age and size are generally found to weigh from two pounds to two pounds and a half each.

The West Riding Steam-Ploughing Company held their half-yearly meeting lately, and their report showed that there was an available sum of £260 8s. 6d. profit upon the last half year, of which £150 was added to the reserve fund, and £110 3s. 6d. retained as a floating estate to provide for the dividend, which was the balance of the said last autumn, and the expensive breakages attendant on it, have done much to reduce the profits, and the directors allusion was made to the attempts which are being made to prevent road locomotives passing through highways and bridges during the night, a subject regarding which deputation is to wait on Sir George Grey.

Dr. Spencer Thomson, the Edinburgh investigator of parasitic worms, has issued a caution against employing sewage matter as manure. He found that the eggs of one of these worms (trichocephalus) are annually swept away into the ocean; and that, if the accumulation of sewage be spread over the surface of land, the larvæ will find their way into our cattle and vegetables and entozoetic diseases will sometimes result from such accidental glimpses. "Four hundred net there alarmist notions in his recent lecture —"Four hundred acres of land, treated more wastefully and filthily than any of the London sewage farms, would be required for a century and consume the very noses of the Edinburgh people, who have, moreover, been fed for generations on the very fish which have been nourished upon this sewaged grass. If any evils of the kind alleged are in the least to be apprehended, they are certainly not shown themselves in the healthiness of so large a town, which, however, I believe, stands as low as that of any in Britain."

Mr. Hegan has published his private catalogue, which contains fourteen Grand Duchesses, and twenty-four Grand Duke, the bulwer at Wetherby during the past and present year have been as follow:—Third Duke of Cleveland, Second Duke of Inchiquin, Fifth Duke of Clarence from Duchess 87th. Both of these are rich roans, and by Second Duke of Wharfedale, and the former is bespoken by Mr. Eastwood, for the Earl of Feversham. Sixth Duke of Collingham, a rich roan, by Duke of Wharfedale from Duchess 85th; and Duke of Oxford, by Second Duke of Fourth Duke from Duchess 79th, the celebrated "white twin" which died soon after giving birth to the Duke of Oxford. Fifth Duke of Cleveland by Duchess 70th brought a red bull-calf dead, and died herself soon after; and Duchess 69th, a red cow, died in the act of calving to the forty-eight hours after its birth. The bulier-calves are red, and red and white, both by Second Duke of Oxford, the former from Duke and Duchess 89th. Among the other calves not pure Duchesses there is a very handsome roan heifer, another red bull, Duke Oxford, by Second Duke of Wharfedale, dam by Grand Duke of Wetherby, grandson by Archduke.



Mr. Stratton's sale by the Lump of Lothian (who has come back again to Wall's Court and Broadbottom this season) are not very numerous but very select. The principal are Belvedere Second Maid of Honour (in calf to 7th Duke of York), Brilliance from Eighth Duchess of Gloucester (in calf to the gold-medal bull), Second Duchess from Rosebottom, Lady Crosbie from Lady Hinda, Peerless from Peeress, Sharpshooter from Sixth Duchess of Oxford, Duke the Duke cow at Newcastle; Sunbeam from Sunset, one of the few left by the celebrated prize cow of that name; Princess Summer from Princess, of the Moss Rose sort; Bright Kirn from a Hermit cow, and Bridelight from Duchess, the latter a very handsome roan heifer. The Duke Castle of Montrose's Rosedale (late Lady Fiqet's) has unfortunately lost her bull-calf; and Mr. Dickenson's bull, Hyde Park (19,994), by Grand Duke of Wharfedale, and Duchess of Oxford, is also dead. Mr. Bywell, of Chilwick's, shorthorn sale is announced for April 5th, by Mr. Strafford, and the entries for the Royal Dublin Show of April 17th close on March 11.

DESTRUCTIVE STORM AT DOUGLAS, ISLE OF MAN.

The Isle of Man was visited, on Sunday week, by a tremendous hurricane, which caused the loss of life of the vessels from a breakwater, in course of construction at Douglas. This work, consisting of a series of stone piers, extending from the shore to deep water and were to be filled with stones and rubble, forming an artificial barrier to shelter the harbour of refuge. It was to be completed intended to be 1100 ft. in length, but had been actually carried to the length of 600 ft., when the storm came to a standstill. The valuable last June little or no progress has been made with it. There are several other breakwaters, of a precisely similar construction, designed by Mr. Abernethy, the engineer of the one, which have, since their completion, withstood every storm that has occurred—as at Blyth, on the coast of Northumberland, and at Port Erin, in the Isle of Man, in the Bristol Channel; at Stranraer, and at Falmouth; but in the Isle of Man itself, the breakwater at Ramsay and that which was left of the same kind, have sustained no damage from the late hurricane, though Ramsay is on the opposite extremity of the Isle of Douglas. The huge piles and beams of timber, which were torn from the work of the breakwater and drifted on to the beach, presented a curious and terrible havoc on the Monday morning. A small vessel, named the Jane and Agnes, laden with timber for the breakwater, was driven from behind the Imperial Hotel, at Douglas; but her crew, three men and a boy, were happily saved by means of ropes.

WRECK OF THE EARL PEMBROKE STEAM-SHIP AT NEWCASTLE.

The iron screw-steamer Earl Percy, 400 tons burden, belonging to the Tyne Steam-shipping Company, and engaged in trading between Hamburg and the Tyne, was driven on to the pier called the Black Middens, at Tynemouth, on Friday week, about eleven o'clock in the morning. The vessel was bound to the Tyne in ballast from the Elbe boats. There was only one passenger—Mr. Peterson, a merchant of Hamburg. The vessel was under the command of Captain Woodhead, assisted by Captain B. Taylor. The Earl Percy had arrived from Hamburg with a general cargo, and was consigned chiefly to the well-known and fifty-five sheep, all kept between decks. When the ship came off Tynemouth, the weather was thick and foggy to some extent, but it is supposed to the prevent surrounding objects from being seen at some distance. There was little or no wind blowing at the time, and the slight air that was felt was from the south-west. She was, however, a tremendously heavy easterly sea running on the bar, the tide being about the first quarter ebb when the steamer took the bar. Notwithstanding the height of the sea, the improvements effected by the Tyne Commissioners by the removal of the bar made it perfectly safe for the Earl Percy to come in, even if her draught of water had been much greater than it really was. She came safely over the bar, and held on her course up the harbour. When approaching that part of the harbour nearly opposite the Spanish Battery, the persons on shore, who were on the look-out and watching her movements, saw that she was not keeping her proper path, and it became almost impossible that she would be able to reach her port in safety,

DOUGLAS BREAKWATER, ISLE OF MAN, AS DAMAGED BY THE LATE STORM.—SEE PRECEDING PAGE.

A succession of heavy waves came rolling in between the piers, and, as she was alternately lifted on their foaming crests and then left in the trough of the sea, it was seen that she had lost steerage way, and that she might be thrown upon the rocks momentarily. While lying in this helpless state, a heavy cross sea struck her on the starboard quarter, causing her to run off against her starboard helm; and the next sea hove her upon the Black Middens, on the identical spot marked by the appalling calamity which happened to the Stanley on that dark November night when so many precious lives were so miserably lost. On this occasion, however, the calamity took place in broad daylight, and with hundreds on shore eager and willing to render assistance to save the lives of those on board the Earl Percy. It unfortunately happened that one of the boilers of the Stanley had been left on the rocks at the spot where that vessel struck. The Earl Percy took the ground with this boiler immediately beneath her, midway between the fore and main masts. The heavy sea caused her to beat heavily, and the consequence was that, having this boiler beneath her keel, she broke her back on it, and was also holed in several places upon the rocks. As the tide left her she settled down with a strong "list" to starboard, the foremast having an inclination over her bows. The heavy sea thundered against her port side, but, owing to the rapid fall of the tide, little else but spray came over her. The pilot, Mr. John Ramsay, of South Shields, as soon as the vessel parted, ordered all hands to the poop. In the mean time preparations were made by those on shore to rescue them without delay. Mr. Lawrence Byrne, chief officer of the coastguard at Tynemouth, immediately caused the rocket apparatus to be brought down to the beach, opposite the wrecked steamer. The first rocket fired carried the line right across the vessel. The crew hauled the tail-block on board and made it fast to the mizenmast, but just then the appearance of a life-boat on the scene prevented them from availing themselves of the rocket apparatus. Had the apparatus been needed, the mode in which the crew made it fast showed that they were not going to repeat the fatal mistake which led to such a fearful loss of life on board the Stanley. Amongst the first life-boats that were manned and put off to the wreck was the Providence, of South Shields, the coxswain of which, Mr. Joseph Smith, has distinguished himself on several other occasions. The South Shields life-boat, the Tyne, Mr. Andrew Harrison, coxswain; the Northumberland life-boat, Mr. Gilbert Young, coxswain; and the California, steered by Mr. James Gilbert, coxswain of the Constance life-boat, were all quickly afloat and doing their best; but the Providence was the first to get to the Earl Percy and take off the persons on board her, who were safely conveyed to the shore at the Low Lights. As soon as the tide had fallen a little the wreck was boarded by a party of men for the purpose of saving as much as they could of the cargo and stores. The cattle were thrown overboard and hauled ashore by ropes, but some of them were more dead than alive. A number of casks of lard and butter were floated to shore, not much damaged; and the sailors managed to save their hammocks and chests. The scene during these operations was a very animated one, and witnessed by thousands of people on the beach.

THE AUSTRALIAN INTERCOLONIAL RIFLE-MATCH.

About two years ago we published an Engraving of the champion riflemen of the province of New South Wales, who were then successful in the first intercolonial rifle match between that province and the neighbouring province of Victoria. In 1863, the New South Wales marksmen were again victorious; but we have now to record that the last contest, which extended over three days, Nov. 14, 15, and 16, resulted in a victory to the Victorians. The subject of the contest was a challenge shield, value £250, which has to be won by either colony thrice in succession before it can be permanently held. The third struggle was therefore regarded with unusual anxiety, both by the marksmen and their friends. As the result proved, the men were very equally matched, and a more spirited or closer contest has seldom if ever been witnessed. The firing was at seven ranges, from 200 to 900 yards. At the 700-yards range both teams scored 292 points—"a tie;" and when half of each team had fired at 900 yards, they also tied, making the total score on each side 1808. On the third day the last five men on each side went in. The Victorians scored 113, the New South Wales men 96; thus making the grand total:—Victoria, 1921; New South Wales, 1904: majority for Victoria, 17. The declaration of the result was received with great cheering. Corporal Macartney, of Bendigo, was the highest total scorer on the Victorian side, and Dickson on the Sydney side; both made 207 points. The greatest good feeling and fairness were exhibited on both sides throughout this very close and exciting contest. The great improvement since 1863 in the shooting of both teams was the subject of general remark. The firing of the Victorians was excellent. Our Engraving contains the portraits of these gentlemen—viz., Lieutenant-Colonel Rede, Major C. H. Hall, Major W. D. Pitt, Captain M'Cartney, Captain Courtman, Lieutenant Sargood, Lieutenant Templeton, Sergeant Douglas, Sergeant Cole, Messrs. Ewan and M'Naughten. Major W. D. Pitt acted as umpire for Victoria. Major C. H. Hall was captain of the team, and had been intrusted by the council of the Victoria Rifle Association with the task of selecting those who were to shoot.

BURNING OF THE MARKET HOUSE AT KINGSTON, CANADA WEST.

We give an Illustration of the scene presented by the burning of the Market House in the town of Kingston, which was reported by the last Canadian mail. This building was situated in the Market-square, at the corner of King-street, and was a capacious structure, used for a corn exchange and for other commercial purposes. The fire broke soon after nightfall on the evening of the 4th ult., and before midnight the whole interior of the building was gutted, so that only the bare walls remained. A heavy snowstorm prevailed for an hour or more during the conflagration, which produced a singular effect by the reflection of the red light from the descending flakes of snow. We are indebted to Mr. H. K. Sheldon, of King-street, for the View which we have engraved.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

A couple of suburban meetings have helped to while away the sporting torpor so far; but the ground was so deep in the Harrow country that one horse fairly stuck in his canter and his jockey declined going to the post. So far, the Chester Cup is declared to be "a moral" for Lord Zetland; and there are thirteen points between the Beaufort Brown and the rest; but Roodee certainties have invariably crumbled away. Chattanooga has survived the roaring reports, and is backed freely for the Two Thousand, which will be worth pretty nearly £5000 this year. There are great searchings of hearts as to whether Liddington will go for this race. It seems far more the course for him than for a game bantam or rather a Dr. Syntax sort of a horse like Zambesi, who is not much beyond fifteen hands, and as thick a little beauty as ever man looked at. The public cling very fondly to the hope that the black may be the Epsom horse of the stable after all, and go bounding to victory like a ball, up and down those "hills on the Surrey side," as William Scott used to style them. A Champagne winner always has a peculiar prestige with the public, as that stake can boast of eleven winners of the three great events on its list in forty years, to say nothing of Beeswing, Aphrodite, and Ely. However, the friends of Russley take the 11 to 2 merrily enough about Liddington, and declare that Mat Dawson has never tried a horse higher. He will be very little short of sixteen two by the summer. Lioness goes, we are told, to Costa by the Baron, and Queen Bertha to King Tom.

For the Newmarket Handicap 30 out of 67 accept; for the City and Suburban, 102 out of 170; for the Great Metropolitan, 52 out of 94; for the Chester Cup, 86 out of 164; and for the Great Northamptonshire Stakes, 47 out of 97. Ackworth (8st.) and Victorious (7st.) stand in for the Chester Cup, and both should have some chance. Ely is struck out of everything; but Mail Train is one of the "Contents" at Epsom, Chester, and Northampton, as well as in the Newmarket Free Handicap.

The hard weather operated sadly against the Ridgway meeting, and many dogs had their preparation for nothing. Mr. Spinks ran four of his Sea Foam-Sea Flower litter in the United North and South Stakes; but three were put out in the first ties, and Sea Bride in the second. Mr. Johnston had more luck with his Dalgig-Woodpigeon trio, and finally won the stakes with Fieldfare; King of Hearts, by Canaradzo, running up. Owing to the absence of the dogs, there were no less than eight byes in the first round. The Clifton Cup finish was between two sons of Canaradzo; and Gipsy King, who is, like King of Hearts, from one of the Silkworm litters, was the winner. Lord Sefton had seven dogs at the meeting, but only won two courses with Starlight, whose dam, Stella, has just had puppies by Patent. It is said that Marshal Forward and Cheer Boys will both go for the Waterloo Cup, for which there has been a great rush to get on old Rebe once more.

An important game appeal case has been settled by the Common Pleas. Two gentlemen were driving along the highroad on their way to shoot when one of them alighted, shot a hare in a field, and brought it back to the gig. Both were jointly summoned for the trespass, one for going into the field in search and pursuit of game and the other for aiding and abetting; and the Court held that, if the latter was in the road to watch and carry off the produce of the trespass, he was equally engaged in a common unlawful act.

Mr. Heathcote purposes giving up the mastership of his staghounds, but offers to lend them and the deer to the country; and it seems to be settled that Mr. Antony Hammond will succeed Mr. Villebois in Norfolk. A good story is told about that pheasant-preserving which has too often sapped the hunting interest in this county. When sport was exceedingly desired for an illustrious visitor, it was found necessary to send the head keeper home, as the pheasants interpreted his presence into a premonitory symptom of feeding-time, and would sit on his shoulder and drop at his feet.

The Munich journals state that the King of Bavaria has signed a decree by which all the impediments to the practice of medicine in his country are removed.

The revenue of the United Kingdom for the year ended Sept. 30, 1864, having exceeded the expenditure for the same time by £2,587,571 1s. 11d., one fourth of the surplus—namely, £646,892 15s. 5d.—will be applied (under the provisions of the Act 10th Geo. IV., cap. 27 sec. 1) towards the reduction of the National Debt.

General Sir Edward Nicolls, K.C.B., died on Sunday, at his residence, Blackheath, in his eighty-sixth year.

Sir John Briggs, who for many years held the post of Accountant-General to the Navy, died at Brighton on Thursday week, aged eighty-three.

The Army and Navy Gazette states that Sir Hope Grant has accepted the post of Quartermaster-General at head-quarters, and that he will return from India to enter upon the duties about July next.

Lieutenant-Colonel J. R. Gibbon, C.B., has been appointed to the command of the 1st division of the Dépôt Brigade, Royal Artillery, in the Chatham district, in succession to Lieutenant-Colonel G. H. Vesey, who has been transferred to the ninth brigade. The strength of the Dépôt Brigade has been augmented by the arrival at head-quarters of No. 18 Battery from Woolwich.

At a recent parade at Winchester Barracks, Colonel M'Donald presented to Colour-Sergeant Farcombe a silver tankard, of the value of 22 guineas, and bearing the following inscription:—"Presented by Colonel Elrington (commanding the 4th battalion of the Rifle Brigade), Colonel M'Donald, and the officers of the Rifle Dépôt Battalion (Winchester), to Colour-Sergeant H. Farcombe, the best shot in the British Army and of the Rifle Dépôt Battalion, in the course of musketry ending April, 1864."

The members of the Royal Naval Club celebrated their centenary on Saturday last by dining together at Willis's Rooms. Admiral George Gifford, C.B., occupied the chair. The Royal Naval Club is one of the oldest of its kind in London, and the meeting which led to its establishment took place at the house of Captain Basil Keith on Feb. 4, 1765. The title of the club, which was first named "The Navy Society," was afterwards called "The Navy Club," next "The Crown and Anchor Navy Club;" and in 1829 obtained its present name of "The Royal Naval Club of 1765."

On Tuesday week the despatch-vessel Helicon, built at Portsmouth, was launched from the dockyard, in the presence of numerous spectators. The Helicon was laid down in April, 1861, as sister ship to the Salamis, Psyche, and Enchantress. In December, 1863, as usual under the present naval administration, her lines were altered in order that she might be fitted with a projecting bow, or ram. These alterations were made, it was stated, to ensure a greater speed, and also to give increased stability by bringing her main breadth further forward. The Helicon is the only vessel built upon her present lines, her dimensions being as follow:—Length between perpendiculars, 220 ft.; length of keel for tonnage, 200 ft. 1⅝ in.; breadth (extreme), 28 ft. 2½ in.; breadth for tonnage, 27 ft. 2½ in.; breadth, moulded, 27 ft. 2½ in.; depth in hold, 14 ft. 6 in.; burden in tons, 836 40/94 o.m. Floating as she now does, her draught is about 4 ft. 9 in. forward and about a foot deeper aft. The Helicon is a paddlewheel ship, and her engines (of 256-horse power) will be fitted by Messrs. Ravenhill and Co.

THE VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT.

Colonel M'Murdo, who has retired from the post of Inspector-General of Volunteers (being succeeded by Colonel Erskine), has been gazetted honorary Colonel of the Inns of Court corps.

The first competition of the year for the champion's badge and association pewters of the London Rifle Brigade took place last Saturday, at the range at Plaistow. The badge of the first battalion was won by Colour-Sergeant Churchill. The badge of the second battalion was won by Sergeant W. Walker. In the competition of second-class shots, the three highest scores—each taking a pewter—were Private Geary, Private May, and Corporal Thorne, P Company; the latter tying with Sergeant M'Nish, who lost on shooting off.

A match of novel character was fired over the same range on Thursday week, between three Staff-Sergeants of the London Rifle Brigade and three Staff-Sergeants of the 1st Surrey. The match resulted in favour of the Staff-Sergeants of the London Rifle Brigade by thirteen marks.

The monthly competition between the members of the West Middlesex for the possession of the gold champion badge took place, on Thursday week, at Wormwood-scrubbs. Private C. Hall, A Company, again made the highest score, this being the third match in which the same member defeated the whole of the competitors for the possession of the badge.

A volunteer banquet was held at Stamford on Tuesday se'nnight at which the chair was taken by Lord Burghley, M.P.; who was supported by Sir Stafford Northcote, M.P.; Lord R. Cecil, M.P.; Sir G. Ward Hunt, M.P.; Sir J. Trollope, M.P.; the Mayor of Stamford (Mr. J. Groves), Colonel Cautley, the Rev. D. E. Jones, Captain Fazakerley, and many others. The vice-chair was filled by Captain Wingfield, the commanding officer of the Stamford corps.

The eleventh competition for the regimental challenge cup of the 3rd Manchester took place on Saturday week, on the ground of the regiment at Barton Moss. The cup has been won twice in succession by Sergeant Kemp, of No. 2 Company; twice on separate occasions by Ensign Hughes, of No. 6 Company; Sergeant Canavan, of No. 5; and Sergeant Winstanley, of No. 9; and once by Corporal Anderson, of No. 5; and Colour-Sergeant Holden, of No. 7. The above, with the exception of Sergeant Kemp, who was absent, were all beaten on Saturday by Private Henry Cooper, of No. 10 Company.

Lieutenant-Colonel Wilkinson, hon. secretary, accompanied by several members of the committee of metropolitan commanding officers, had an interview on Saturday week, at the War Office, with Colonel Erskine, the newly-appointed Inspector-General of Volunteers, on the subject of the closing of volunteer rifle-ranges. The object of the deputation was to induce the Government to take legislative steps in the ensuing Session to prevent the annoyance and injury to which the volunteer service is subjected through having the rifle-ranges closed at the caprice of persons residing near them.

The National Rifle Association offers £100 for the most efficient and serviceable military breech-loading rifle, to be competed for at Woolwich on the 30th of May next. The prize is open to gunmakers and others. Entrance fee £5, to be paid at the office of the National Rifle Association on or before the 1st of May, where the conditions may be obtained.

On Monday a public meeting of the inhabitants of Brighton was held at the Townhall, under the presidency of Mr. J. L. Brigden, the Mayor, to consider what steps should be taken to secure the holding of the next Easter Monday volunteer review at Brighton. Mr. James White, M.P., proposed a resolution "That, in the opinion of the inhabitants, it was desirable that the review should be held there," and this was carried by acclamation. Mr. Alderman Martin then proposed the formation of a committee to communicate with the metropolitan commanding officers on the subject, to see what arrangements could be effected with the railway company, and to receive subscriptions for the purpose of defraying the cost of damage which might be done to the crops by the review, and to provide prizes for a shooting-meeting at the Sheepcote Valley ranges on the Saturday preceding Easter Monday. An influential committee was then formed.

SCIENTIFIC NEWS.

Mr. Ruskin has contributed to the Geological Magazine some notes on the shape and structure of some parts of the Alps, with reference to the vexed question of denudation now pending between the advocates of the fracture and erosion theories, and appears to take up a middle course. He says that "the more we examine the Alps from sufficiently dominant elevations, the more the impressions gain upon us of their being rather one continuously raised tract, divided into ridges by torrent and decay, than a chain of independent peaks; but this raised tract differs wholly in aspect from groups of hills which owe their essential form to diluvial action." Mr. Ruskin gives several drawings and diagrams, and asks his brother geologists several questions respecting the origin of the phenomena in question, promising to continue the publication of his opinions.

At a recent meeting of the Academy of Sciences, at Paris, M. Becquerel presented, in the name of the constructor, M. Richer, a new electric machine, the plate of which was formed of sulphur. This modification is said to possess the very great advantages of producing negative electricity in great quantity, and of being worked in an atmosphere filled with watery vapour. At the same meeting, M. Fizeau reported some observations of M. Janssen on the bands of the spectrum, which tend to prove that the rays termed telluric, which are due to the interposition of the atmosphere, diminish in intensity in proportion as we ascend to an elevated spot, a portion of the rays being absorbed by the atmosphere.

Mr. Huggins, so eminent for his researches in regard to the physical and chemical constitution of the heavenly bodies, at a recent meeting of the Royal Astronomical Society gave an account of his latest inquiry into the nature of nebulæ. He stated that he had discovered, by means of the spectroscope, that the great nebula of Orion was of uniform constitution throughout, and that all parts of it gave a purely gaseous spectrum, varying only in intensity; and that the bright lines were three in number—one very strong, another fainter, and one very faint. Other nebulæ gave continuous spectra, showing their starry nature. Mr. Huggins hopes soon to make further observations with a silver glass speculum of considerable size. He also stated that he thought that the question of a lunar atmosphere, the evidence of which is now all negative, might be tested by the observation of the disappearance of the spectrum of a star when the moon approached; and he reported that he had applied the method on the 4th of January last. As far as the experiment went, the result was against the existence of a lunar atmosphere.

Mr. J. J. Waterston has communicated to the Philosophical Magazine for February an account of a number of electrical experiments and inductions, which will doubtless be read with interest by students. His researches have embraced the forms of the discharge, the limit of the discharging effect of pointed bodies, the discharging effect of flame and incandescent matter, the behaviour of non-conducting matter under conditions of excitement and induction, &c. As an example, we give his notice of the discharging effect of stroking. When the electroscope was charged to near its maximum, he placed a small disc of fine sealing-wax upon the cap, and then drew, gently, the elbow of a bent iron wire, with a newly-filed surface, along the top of the disc, as it were stroking it. This caused the leaves to descend to 50 deg. On taking off the disc from the cap, the leaves rose again from their original angle, and the disc was found electrified on the surface stroked. No effect was produced by merely touching the disc with the wire at many points. In the same number appear the results of Mr. John Hunter's experiments on the absorption of gases by charcoal, in a tabulated form. The gases were carefully dried and collected over mercury, and the charcoal was introduced, after having been heated out of contact with air and plunged into mercury while red hot. The residual volume of the gas was examined after twenty-four hours. Mr. Hunter states that of all the charcoals he examined, that made from the cocoanut manifested the greatest absorbing power, its absorption for ammonia being 171·7 times its volume. Considerable differences appear in the results of some of the experiments, especially with oxygen and phosphuretted hydrogen.

The Annals of Natural History for February will be very interesting to advanced naturalists, from its containing, besides other interesting papers, the fourth account of new species of snakes in the British Museum, by Dr. Albert Günther; the first number of "Carcinological Gleanings," by Mr. C. Spence Bate, arising out of a systematic series of dredgings off the coasts of the Shetland Isles, undertaken by a committee appointed by the British Association; and the first number of a series of papers "On the British Echinodermata," by the Rev. Alfred M. Norman. The last will be very much welcomed, as no special work on the subject has appeared since the monograph on star-fishes by the lamented Edward Forbes, twenty-four years ago. Mr. Norman gratefully acknowledges the valuable assistance of Messrs. Alder, Jeffreys, Thompson, Robertson, and other eminent collectors and observers. Dr. J. E. Gray has contributed to this number a paper "On the Species of Manatees," in which he dwells especially on the difficulty of distinguishing such species merely by their osteological characters. In conclusion, he says that he does not wish to throw any doubt upon any determinations which have been made, or deny that there are well-determined fossil species, but merely to show the necessity of extreme caution in such determinations, "more especially as such abstruse questions as the antiquity of man, and other theoretical questions, have been attempted to be settled by the results of such examinations." Among the miscellaneous notes is one by Dr. P. Sclater, on the so-called Japanese pig, in which he advances reasons for believing that the home of the animal is China, where such monstrous varieties of domestic species are much appreciated. A translation is also given of M. Liais' paper "On the Flight of Birds and Insects," in which he treats of flight without locomotion, flight with locomotion and beating of the wings, and flight without beating of the wings, or gliding flight. The third mode, he says, presupposes a previous locomotion produced by beating of the wings. The ascensional force is then obtained at the expense of the active force of the movement of progression, by an effect of the inclination of the wings. According to this inclination the animal may ascend or move horizontally as long as its rapidity of motion is not too much diminished by the resistance of the air. To descend requires merely a change of the inclination of the wings; to remain at the same elevation the animal must again have recourse to the beating of the air. M. Liais' paper is an interesting contribution to animal mechanics.

At the last meeting of the Geological Society was read a paper by Dr. Julius Haast, respecting the ancient climate of New Zealand, with especial relation to the history of the gigantic bird named by Mantell, Dinornis. Dr. Haast expressed his opinion that the extinction of the bird was due to the agency of man at some recent date, since the present Alpine flora of the country furnished a large quantity of nutritious food, quite capable of sustaining the life of so large a creature. Two papers by Dr. Bryce were also read respecting the drift-beds on the Isle of Arran and the occurrence of beds in the west of Scotland in the position of the English crag. In the first he expressed his dissent from the opinion of Dr. Watson, who described all these beds as boulder clay; whereas, they are found to consist of seams of clay and sand intermingled, containing stones that are rarely striated, and without shells. He considers these drifts "to have been formed by land-ice, emanating from central snow-fields, and covering the whole country." In his second paper Dr. Bryce reports the discovery of fossil remains of the elephant, reindeer, shells, &c., at Airdrie, Kilmaurs, and other places, the geological age of which is discussed by himself and by the Rev. H. W. Cross Key in the paper which was next read.

The Queen has approved of Mr. Gustavus Overbeck as Consul at Hong-Kong for the Emperor of Austria.

The election of a member for the representation of the county of Bute took place yesterday week. At the close of the poll the numbers stood as follow:—The Hon. Mr. Boyle, Conservative, 204; Mr. Lamont, Liberal, 189.

The shop of Mr. Howard, jeweller, in Market-street, Manchester, was entered, between Saturday night and Monday morning, by thieves, who stripped the place of almost every portable article of value it contained. Over M. Howard's shop is a room occupied by a hairdresser, which is entered by a stair from Corporation-street. To this room the thieves gained access, apparently without much difficulty, and, cutting a hole through the floor, they lowered themselves into the shop beneath. Mr. Howard had his jewellery locked in a safe, but the thieves worked their way through this obstacle and gained possession of property which is valued at more than £3000. A daring but unsuccessful attempt was also made upon the premises of two other jewellers in the same neighbourhood. The thieves have not been traced.

Mr. Maclure reports that in the past month, as compared with December, there was a further considerable increase in the number of cotton operatives working full time; but it is added that the present state of the market renders it extremely doubtful whether the improvement will be maintained throughout February. At the close of the month the guardians had 86,901 persons on their books, and the relief committees 33,243; making a total of 119,544. This represents a great mass of indigence, but the number is 10,853 below that reported in the last week of December. Of the 119,544 persons supported by the rates or the funds raised by public subscription, 9335 are described as able-bodied men. In seven of the twenty-eight unions comprising the cotton district there are now no local committees distributing relief, but in the remaining twenty-one there are fifty-three committees still in active operation.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

LADY WILLOUGHBY D'ERESBY.

The Right Hon. Clementina Sarah, Lady Willoughby D'Eresby and Baroness Gwydyr, who died at the family town house, 142, Piccadilly, on the 29th ult., was a scion of the ancient and historic line of Drummond, now represented by the Earl of Perth and Melfort, and by the Duke of Manchester. Lady Willoughby D'Eresby was the eldest daughter and heiress of Captain Drummond, who was created a British Peer, as Lord Perth, in 1797, and at whose death, in 1800, that title became extinct. Her Ladyship was born in 1796, and was married, April 29, 1817, to the Hon. Peter Robert Drummond-Burrell, who thereupon assumed, by royal sanction, the surname and arms of Drummond in conjunction with those of Willoughby, and who succeeded his father, in 1825, as second Baron Gwydyr; and his mother, in 1848, as nineteenth Baron Willoughby D'Eresby. By this marriage her Ladyship (Lord Willoughby survives her) had issue seven sons and two daughters, Albert Drummond Willoughby, and three daughters—viz., Clementina, wife of the present Lord Lovaine; Adelaide, wife of Lord Algernon Percy; and Charlotte Augusta Arabella, wife of the present Lord Carrington.

COLONEL STAVELEY.

The career of Colonel Patrick Stewart, C.B., whose death occurred at Constantinople, on the 16th ult., was one of unusual activity and of great usefulness. He entered the Military College at Addiscombe in 1808, and at the completion of his course, in 1809, was appointed to the Royal Engineers, received a vote of honour and the prize for high proficiency in mathematical and military studies. From Chatham he proceeded to India, and entered the Bengal (now Royal) Engineers, and during the sepoy mutiny greatly distinguished himself in the discharge of important field duties. He was placed at the head of the army telegraph, and the wonderful regularity with which Lord Clyde's despatches were sent to the commander-in-chief during that critical time was mainly due to Captain Staveley's great energy and skill in the duties of his office. For his services he received a medal, honourably recorded in general orders, and was also appointed officiating superintendent of Indian telegraphs, and when the project of a Government Indo-European telegraph was started, Staveley was named its director-general. In this capacity he shared, last year, with Sir C. Bright the honour of laying the submarine cable from Varna to Balaclava, for which he was made a C.B. He since carried out a special inspection of the Persian landlines from Gulahe to Teheran, and thence round to the Turco-Persian frontier and Bagdad. In June last he arrived at Constantinople, and concluded a convention with the Porte for the extension of the through service; but he and his wife had incautiously ingested at Bagdad some of the cholera-impregnated air which was then prevailing there, and, after a few days' illness, with military honours, in the British Cemetery at Scutari, under the shadow of the Crimean monument, he was laid in his kindred earth, by his beloved Chinese dame.

MAJOR-GENERAL RICHARD SAY ARMSTRONG, R.A.

The death of this able and gallant officer occurred on the 16th ult., at Laurence, Switzerland. He had only recently been appointed to a distinguished service pension, and was in his seventy-fifth year. Armstrong entered the Royal Artillery early in life, and was for many years on duty in the Canada from May, 1811, to July, 1815, including the capture of a detachment on the Niagara frontier, and the retaking of an enemy's gun-boat in command of a gun-boat at Prescott. He was at the storming of Fort Erie, during a manœuvre of seventeen hours' duration, and was present at the battle of Fort George; the actions at Stony Creek and Black Rock; the reinvestment of Fort Erie, and the battles of Chippewa, Lundy's Lane, and Fort Erie, and Buffalo; Fort Schlosser, Black Creek and Chippewa; and at the siege of Fort Erie, where he was under an almost constant fire for 24 days. For his services he obtained the same medal as Sergeant Armstrong in 1847; he became a Captain in 1827, a Colonel in 1854, and a Major-General Jan. 19, 1860.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will of the Most Noble Henry Pelham, Duke of Newcastle, K.G., D.C.L., Baron of Lymington, Viscount Pelham, and Peer of Scotland, late Master of the Buckhounds, Lord Lieutenant of Nottinghamshire, and Lord Warden of the Stannaries, was proved under £250,000. The will is of considerable length, and there are six codicils. His Grace has charged his estates with liberal annuities for his younger sons, as also for his Grace's brother, Lord Robert and Lord Thomas Clinton, and for his son, the present Duke; besides which, he has given, by his executors acting, he has left £200, and to his valet a legacy of £200.

The will of the late Earl of Morley was proved last week in the Court of Probate, at Exeter, by the executors, the Countess of Morley (his widow) and Edmund G. Stapleton, Esq. The personalties are evenly under £30,000. The whole of the large landed estates are left to the present Earl, his only son. To his wife he leaves £400 a year for life; and to his only daughter, Lady Katherine Parker, he leaves a legacy of £3000: in both cases, in addition to previous arrangements. To each of his servants he leaves £20.

The will of George Dodd, Esq., F.S.A. formerly M.P. for Maidstone, late of Downshire-place, was proved in the London Court under £500,000. The executors and trustees appointed are Joseph W. Thrupp, W. H. Bodkin, Lewis Pocock, M.D., and Alfred W. Holmes, Esq., to each of whom he has left a legacy of £500, as well as an annuity of £20 each during the period they are acting. To his wife he has left a certain rental from a portion of his freehold estates for her life, also a legacy of £7000 and an immediate annuity of £1000. To his daughter, Mrs. Holmes, he has left a legacy of personal estate for her life. To his son, Frederick Dodd, he has left his household estates on his attaining the age of twenty-three, and to his son Edward certain freeholds on her attaining the age of twenty-one. To his second daughter are also reversionary residuary legatees. There is an annuity of £200 to his wife's grandmother, and a further legacy to the survivor of £1000, and legacies to his servants. The following are the charitable bequests:—To the Royal Institution, £1000; to the Governors of St. George's Hospital, Middlesex Hospital, and Lock Hospital, each £100; Society for Relief of Aged Persons and to the Benevolent Society of Blind Men and the Royal Humane Society £200.

The will of James Haydock Hill, Esq., of Newbold Firs, Leamington, was proved in London on the 1st instant, and the personalty sworn under £14,000. The executors and trustees appointed are the Rev. James and George Hill, Esqs., and his son-in-law, Francis H. G. Nicolls, Esq. The will is dated 1863, and he died on the 15th of January last. Bequests are confined to the members of his family. He has left to each of his daughters the interest varying from £400 to £1000 a year, and to each a liberal provision for the daughter of his late son Henry. The residue of his property is to be divided amongst his four sons, to whom specific bequests are likewise made.

In the will of the late Lord Mancave, given last week, the title was incorrectly described as Baron Stotton, but Mancave was the grandson of Lord George Manners Sutton and nephew of Archbishop Sutton.

Mr. James Dudley M'Aiester has been appointed Receiver-General for the Gold Coast Settlements.

Abd-el-Kader, who arrived at Alexandria last month, has set out for Cairo and Suez, and will subsequently pay a visit to his estate.

The Princess Caroline (son of the Duke of Aumale) has obtained a commission as Sub-Lieutenant in the Swiss army.

The Austrian journals announce as an extraordinary fact that a Protestant has been able to purchase a house in Vienna, in the Graben, without the incident having excited any hostile demonstration.

The Duke of Manchester, Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, a copy of a Greek Royal decree, assimilating, with certain exceptions, the customs' tariff of Greece to that of France, has just now in force in Greece.

The royal officers and crew of her Majesty's ship Bombay, recently destroyed by fire at Montevideo, arrived at Liverpool yesterday week in the steamer Hereford. There were 40 persons.

A shop for the sale of horseflesh at half the price of beef has recently been opened in Paris. The shop, which announces the fact, does not pronounce for or against this dietary, but contents itself with observing that beef meat only costs 1 fr. 20 c. per kilo, whereas horse is good condition if cold dead at the price of beef would not realise as much as 10 sous (1fr.). The Parisian artizan, therefore, can by the help of this shop and less horse which is offered to the public at such a cheap rate. Some information on this subject would, the Paris Journal thinks, be useful.

The "Sacred College" consists of seventy cardinals. Nine hats are now vacant. Of these cardinals eighteen are above the age of eighty, and forty-three by Pius IX., besides two received ex gratia; five are more than eighty years old, fourteen more than seventy-five years old, twenty-one twelve have passed and one not yet reached fifty years. The oldest, Tosti, is eighty-nine years old; the youngest, Mieczyslaw, is forty-six years old. Of the Sacred College Pius IX. has seen all the members changed save one, the Cardinal Deon Mahel, who has worn the purple thirty-three years.

M. F. de Lesseps has informed the Chambers of Commerce in France that communication is now open by water between the Mediterranean and the Red Sea, and that a daily service of boats is established between Port-Said and Suez. A barge, containing from twenty-five to thirty persons and towed by a small steamer, has already traversed in twenty-four hours the ninety-four miles which separate the two seas. The Isthmus of Suez Canal Company also invites the Chambers of Commerce to send delegates to report on the progress of the works, and to visit them. The transport of goods and passengers which may be made of the canal, offering as it does a continuous stream of water of 8 m. wide and of a minimum depth of 4 m.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

C. P. C.—The new work by M. Jean Dufresne, entitled "Bibliographie Analytique de Jeu des Echecs," contains about 1,218 works. You can, no doubt, obtain it through Messrs. Trübner, of Paternoster-row.

Egbert.—Quite right.

W. A.—A very ingenious stratagem as it stands, but by omitting the pleasant first move it would be more difficult still.

W. B. Mackechnie.—On subjects inquiretive you must more the pieces considered if it can be briefly stated.

W. B. Mackechnie.—You rarely can have sufficiently in finding examples of that defence to the Evans Gambit which you mention. It is expressly included in the formula of the English Handbook.

A. V. Fort St. Mary.—Themelution formula will be partially correct.

C. F. C., Portsmouth.—A remarkable case will be found recorded by Mr. Murphy in Bourne, attentively annotated, at given in the "Chess Praxis," published by Bell and Dudley, Fleet-street. Mr. Murphy's work is the best extant on the Evans Gambit. There is a reply to it by Mr. Staunton, which we have not seen.

W. G. Mendenhall.—In talking down the game, you have repeated some move and so lost the thread of the analysis. Please to write out the game from the commencement, and we will endeavour to point out the precise moment at the game club mentioned in which your opponent blundered.

Hereward.—Solved.—In the first position of your Partida da Cavallaria, White could apparently by win. In the fourth, the game can only be drawn. Your last variation is, we think, unsound, but we will look at it. Thanks.

J. A. B., Bagnor.—Your defensive player, you will find, would win anything by playing B to Q 3rd at once, since his opponent, in that case, would move his Queen to Q Kt 3rd.

Solvers are informed that Mr. Wormald's Problem No. 1,000 will appear in the 25th inst., and that Mr. Wormald's Problem No. 1,001 will appear in the 4th of March.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

Professor Tyndall commenced his sixth lecture "On Electricity" on Saturday, the 2nd inst., with a reference to the new electric machine constructed by M. Holtzer, with a sulphur plate mentioned in our "Scientific News" of this day, thus comparing it to the material of the first machine made by Otto von Guericke. Sir William Armstrong's hydroelectric machine was next described, and the discovery that its action is due to the friction of particles of water, and not to the properties of steam, was ascribed to Professor Faraday. Dr. Tyndall then commented upon the phenomena of "pyro-electricity" originating from the fact that certain crystals, especially tourmaline, exhibit opposite electric conditions poles with being heated, the positive and negative electricities changing places during the process of heating and cooling, and illustrated the subject by the application of tinsel and gilt paper to the crystal, as described by Mr. Brewster. Dr. Tyndall also referred, with Franklin afterwards invented, to the fact that a lightning conductor would discharge, while repelling the electric fluid, and that a fully lower to observe electricity in the air. In the interim M. Dalibard erected a tall metallic rod at Marly-la-Ville, near Paris, on the 10th of May, 1752, and in June of the same year Franklin brought down electricity from the clouds by means of a kite. Dr. Priestley is cited with a cycle of kite-flying sparks by presenting his knuckles to the key. Dr. Tyndall, after referring to the discovery of Leyden jar by Cuneus, in May, 1746, and its power of discharge, while repeating Franklin's experiments, described the phenomena of the "electric egg," and the theory of the latter, as derived from a metal bust of Mr. Sinkler. The interesting phenomena termed the electric brush and glow were next described, and the fact that the former is the result of the dissipation of electricity by points, and the latter a combination of the two, was ascribed to the action of electric clouds upon pointed bodies. Dr. Tyndall next explained and illustrated the principle of lightning-conductors, the use of which had been suggested by Franklin, and the construction of which has been immensely improved by the recent investigations of Sir William Snow Harris during the present century. The invaluable labours of the latter were next eulogised and illustrated by experiments which have been, in consequence of his conductors. Professor Tyndall next demonstrated the existence of electricity in the flame of a candle, and referred to the fact (discovered by exciting the machine) by throwing its action on a frame attached to the end of the conductor. The electrical condition of the atmosphere was then described, and the means employed to ascertain the same, and the changes produced by the negative electricity of a second conductor placed near it and repulsed the positive; with a reference to the fact that the latter conductor could be pushed back to the second conductor, producing a spark which ignited gunpowder. The electrical condition of the earth was next dealt with, and coincided with the repetition of the experiment of Cavendish, which led to the discovery of water being a conductor of electricity, by the jug of a frog, brought into contact with two metals, iron and copper. Galvani imagined that he had discovered a new species of electricity, but Volta ascribed the action was due to the two metals, and that the phenomena could be produced by wet cloth. Dr. Tyndall next described the construction of the voltaic battery, and the effects produced by the application of the magnetic needle.

Dr. Odling, F.R.S., commenced his lecture on Saturday, the 3rd inst., "On Aluminium Bronze and Metalate." He began with observations on the characteristic properties of the metals, and the error of the earth, existing in clay, granite, slate, &c.; the ruby, emerald, sapphire, amethyst, and other precious stones, and the gems, are the true found in connection with organic life. Its compounds, however, have not received very much attention, and the metal itself is not known. Its ores are still easier procured and more abundant than iron. Its extraction was endeavoured to settle the questions by showing, first, the relation which exists between the atomic weights of metals and their specific gravity, illustrated by the accurate measurement of the quantity of ice they can melt when heated to the same temperature. Secondly, the specific quantity of metal which is contained in two volumes of its gaseous compounds—i. e., its chlorides, bromides, chlorides, and metallides. The results of the researches of Calvoire, Deville, and others on aluminium chloride not agreeing with Dr. Odling's method of arriving at the atomic weight, he stated that Dr. Heinrich had, by adopting the method of Dr. Frankland and M. Duppa, proceeded to ascertain the atomic weight of aluminium, and found it to be 27·3 parts, and nothing, anxious of the existence of lower atomic weights was published and their spontaneously-inflammable character shown.) The compounds there are protoxides, sesquioxides, and peroxides, and the chloride from the chloride and confirmed the atomic weight and molecular formula deducible from the specific gravity of the chloride. The quantity of aluminium in the same specific heat at 108 parts of silver was found to be 27·3 parts, which is, therefore, the atomic weight of aluminium. The next class of compounds of oxides our giving further details of Dr. Odling's chain of chemical reactions, which, with the experiments, were illustrated by diagrams. Messrs. Darlington, Burt., F.R.S., vice-president, was in the chair.

Professor Wheatstone began his third lecture "On the Nervous System" on Saturday last, with additional remarks on the electric nerve-currents, and the experiments of Galvani on the muscular action on the results obtained by Helmholtz from his elaborate and ingenious experiments, rejecting Helmholtz's assumption that the motion is not instantaneous, but is about 200 ft. in a second. Professor Marshall then proceeded to trace the ganglionic connections of the nervous system in the lower forms of animal life, only visible by means of the microscope, to the highly-developed nervous system of man, and explained the uses of the various ganglia connected in consequence of the experiments of Flourens, Longet, Brown-Sequard, and others. The experiments of Dr. Brown-Sequard on the instruments of motion, of sensation, and, in the vertebrate animals, of reflex. He added that although the nervous system is made of cells, the function of nervous systems had failed, yet evidence of a common plan in the structure of nerves in the animal kingdom. The nerves of sensation and motion, which are especially pointed out by reference to diagrams exhibiting the nervous system in man and in the rabbit.

Professor Tyndall, in his seventh lecture, given on Tuesday last, resumed the subject of electricity, and illustrations of the same described the successive stages in the formation of the voltaic pile, or battery, from the time of Galvani and Volta, in the manner of Dr. Faraday, Davy, and other philosophers; and he exhibited the production of light and heat when the two ends of the battery were connected with platinum wire. Professor Tyndall stated that Volta ascribed the electric action of the battery to the contact of the two metals in the heart of the battery, which was then disputed, but which was set aside by Faraday's discovery that the current was due to chemical action, and that the electricity was developed by the metals. Among his numerous experiments, Dr. Tyndall showed how electric currents could be made to produce motion, and how the power of the battery could be increased by the addition of cells. In the table in the lecture, and bringing them in contact, &c. He then proceeded to the consideration of the phenomena of electro-magnetism, and explained the "Oersted" effect, that the copper wire connected with a voltaic battery in action becomes magnetic, and illustrated the same by the experiment of the magnetic needle. The law fully illustrated; and it was further shown that, when a quantity of copper, isolated by contact with glass, was placed in the path of the wire, the most attractive power is very much increased; but that, when a piece of soft iron was placed in the heart of the coil, the magnetic power was increased. Evidence of this was abundantly afforded in the heavy weights sustained by the electro-magnet, and the "lifting" power of the machine was also illustrated in his elaborate experiments. Dr. Tyndall stated that this power had been employed by Mr. Page in the construction of his electro-magnetic engine, which was then described and explained, and employed in locomotive manufacture—the voltaic battery then replacing the steam-engine as a motive power.

On Friday evening, Feb. 17, the discourse will be given by W. Huggins, Esq., F.R.S., "On the Physical and Chemical Constitution of the Fixed Stars and Nebulæ."

From the Newspaper Press Directory for 1865 we extract the following on the present position of the newspaper press:—"There are now published in the United Kingdom 1,000 newspapers, viz., 600 in England, 141 Wales, 41; Scotland, 109; Ireland, 112; British Isles, 14. Of these 1,000 papers 500 are published in Saturday, 200 on Monday, 200 in Wales, eleven duties in Scotland, twelve duties in Ireland, and one duties in the British Isles. Of the number published 500 are published daily, 300 quarterly journals, and 200 monthly publications, each having a distinctive character, by which the Church of England, Wesleyans, Methodists, Independents, and other religious denominations, are represented."

A pleasant hit at the neck-and-neck race of extravagance which the two powers Mindy and Petroleum are running in the States is thus told by the Cincinnati Gazette:—"Mr. Petroleum V. Nasby, postmaster at Confederate Cross Roads, gave a party at Turkey's, and brought there, aided by his friend's counsel, a splendid assortment of Petroleum. Everybody was there before they had been assembled long. Mr. Petroleum, accompanied by Colonel Mrs. C., came in, and, after requiring the services of half the assembled, bought a fine piano, and presented it to the sweetheart of Private Allen, home for the adornment of her person. Whereupon Mrs. A. to Mrs. B. on an underside, 'I wouldn't have thought it of Mrs. Petroleum.' 'No more would I,' replied Petroleum." "Another story of the same kind is told. A young lady in Pennsylvania informed a friend that she had made a match must be off, for she grasped the underwriters lover. 'Dad has struck oil,' replied the damsel, determined not to be outdone in the matter of slang.

Letters received from the Gaboon (West Coast of Africa) state that Mr. Walker, factor at Loddiet, having been informed that an English schooner had been taken and plundered by the inhabitants of Ikonal, a village on the River Cams, immediately proceeded to that place in the Phantom steamer, accompanied by the Plantair, attacked and destroyed the village, and erected a large inclosure for the owners of the vessel. Captain Dawsant, chief of the Rear-Admiral's staff, returned to the Gaboon from Ascension in the Ariadne, and proceeded to the mouth of the River Cams, which was the recovery of the cargo of a French vessel illegally seized by the custom officers of Dahomey. The captain was well received by the King, but failed in persuading the latter to abolish human sacrifices. Twelve poor wretches were murdered on the eve of the captain's departure under the pretext of opening the road for the King's journey to the Coast. Captain Dalrymple Dawsant that he could not suppress the established customs of the country without danger to his own life.

MAGIC LANTERNS and DISSOLVING VIEWS. The £5 Set of Magic, Microscopic, and Phanta Apparatus comprises a 3½ in. improved Achromatic Lantern, producing 12 ft. figures; a microscope, throwing upon a screen animalculæ; ten slides, containing forty subjects; eight movable comic slides; one panorama, with shipping in motion; one photograph; and one chromotrope, with view and revolving watermill. S. and B. SOLOMONS, Opticians, 39, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly.

THE PLANET JUPITER, when magnified 250 times with the new £5 TELESCOPE, appears seven times as large as the moon is to the naked eye; and the other planetary bodies proportionately. It will also distinguish the face of a sheep and features of a man four miles, shot marks upon a target two miles, and time by a church clock ten miles. This instrument is guaranteed, in writing, to perform the whole of the above, and to be equal in the most important respects to telescopes costing £70. It has a 3-in. superior achromatic object-glass, two eyepieces, &c., with portable metal tripod stand with jointed claw feet. Persons are invited to apply for a diagram, with other particulars, and eight sheets of testimonials from scientific and other gentlemen, including Lord Rosse. Sent free by book post.—S. and B. SOLOMONS, 39, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly. Powerful small pocket Telescopes, opera, race, field, and general outdoor glasses.

A NEW High-power BINOCULAR GLASS, the cheapest, lightest, most powerful, and portable ever produced. Weighs three ounces, and occupies less room than a card-case. Price 21s., sent post-free. THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 1302.—VOL. XLVI. SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1865. WITH A SUPPLEMENT, FIVEPENCE

A PALACE OF JUSTICE.

At last there appears to be reasonable ground for hope that Justice will be provided with court accommodation in the metropolis adequate to her wants and suited to her dignity. For thirty years the subject has been more or less under consideration. It was first mooted in the House of Commons by Mr. Hume, who, after the destruction of the Houses of Parliament by fire, urged the localisation, as far as possible, of all the Law Courts on a single central site, for reasons of public convenience and economy. It was, unquestionably, a branch of law reform—if we may venture so to describe it—upon which the veteran economist was competent to give a trustworthy opinion. Three several Committees of the House of Commons have inquired into the subject, and a Royal Commission, composed of men of the highest reputation and character, on a searching review of the whole case, has strongly recommended it. The Imperial Legislature is never precipitate in the adoption of projects which, however much needed, however loudly called for, however ultimately inevitable, would sweep away what is old, unsightly, but interlaced with all sorts of out-of-the-way existing interests, in order to substitute for it something which shall be at once simple, adequate, convenient for its purpose, and ornamental in its appearance. Our law is a confused heap of statutes and judicial decisions—our law courts miserable "hovels," "dog-holes," "cucumber-frames," scattered about without the slightest regard to contiguity. It is only quite lately, and through an immense amount of investigation and reinvestigation, that we have worked our way to the conclusion that a Palace of Justice is a practicable idea, and will, on the whole, be better than nobody-knows-how-many scattered and wretchedly-inconvenient huts.

Since the time when the expediency of bringing all our law courts together upon one site and rearing for them a single pile of buildings was first brought under the notice of Parliament, the business transactions of the country have increased beyond all power of accurate calculation. Trade, agriculture, and commerce have originated and accumulated an immense mass of individual interests, most of which, at some stage or other of their growth, require some service which law only can administer, and many of which raise conflicting claims which law is required to settle. The augmentation of wealth has been enormous, and continues at a progressive rate. The diffusion of it is wide, beyond all precedent and parallel. The innumerable processes by which it is collected and distributed necessitate a frequent resort to law offices and courts, the more frequent, of course, in proportion to its aggregate amount and to the number of persons amongst whom it is divided. The external accommodation, which was barely sufficient for the wants of our great-grandsires, is preposterously inadequate for their great-grandchildren, who, besides being three times as many in number, do business to an extent which a hundred years ago would have been simply fabulous.

Perhaps, however, there is no part of Europe which, in proportion to the amount and variety of interests adjudicated upon from year to year, has made so little provision as we have done in the way of material and official accommodation for the easy, unimpeded, economical transaction of legal affairs. Such provision as we have grumbled at and put up with for the last thirty years has been a scandal to our otherwise fair fame, and it has been a matter of reproach, which we could not gainsay, that while nowhere is justice more promptly and impartially administered than in England, nowhere is it more barbarously lodged. It is not necessary to read the bluebooks in order to arrive at this conviction. It is not a case in which faith must rest on testimony. It begins to be matter of which we are few persons who do not, at some period of their lives, if they visit the metropolis at all, enter one or more of the law courts, either as witnesses, defendants, witnesses, jurymen, or idlers. No matter in what capacity they go, no matter into what court they enter, they will be struck with the singularly straitened, unwholesome, dingy appearance of the place. The Rolls Court, perhaps, may be considered an exception—the only one; otherwise, in Westminster, Chancery-lane, Lincoln's-inn, Guildhall, or wheresoever else a court of justice can be found in the metropolis, a deficiency of space, light, and ventilation, to say nothing of architectural propriety, will force itself upon the notice. It curiosity be pushed to extremes, it may even be possible to discover the place mentioned by Mr. Bovill wherein the full Court of Queen's Bench is occasionally obliged to hold its sittings in two pairs of stairs in a remote part of the building, where there is accommodation for neither judges, counsel, attorneys, nor witnesses—"not," in Mr. Bovill's words, "in a shed or a hovel, but in a place little better than a dog-hole."

The dispersion of the Courts and their distance from a central site are a greater evil than even want of accommodation. Loss of time is the consequence, and loss of time is loss of money. Barristers, solicitors, and suitors are subjected to ly unnecessary delays, and the last, at any rate, by the vexatious attendant on them. The Commissioners have summed up the evils flowing from this source in most emphatic terms. "Of all the elements of inconvenience," they observe, "there is none more important than time; of all the sources of vexation attendant on it, there is none more bitter than unnecessary delay. It court be separated from court, and courts be at a distance from the offices of the officers separated from each other; if both are at a distance from the chambers of barristers and the offices of attorneys and solicitors, it is obvious that time must be lost in the transaction of business, at every stage of its progress and conclusion in it."

Having described the evils requiring to be dealt with in language which, when compared with the facts of the case, may claim to be regarded as moderate, we proceed to sketch an outline of the plan submitted to Parliament by the Attorney-General for effectually extinguishing them. The general idea is, of course, the concentration upon one spot of all the more important of our courts and offices within easy distance from the chambers of counsel and practising attorneys. The Government proposition will be best appreciated by considering it in reference to, first, the site of the structure; secondly, its architectural character; thirdly, its cost, and the means of meeting it.

The site selected consists of about seven acres and a half of land, immediately north of the point of junction of Fleet-street with the Strand, between Chancery-lane on the west and Clement's Inn in the latter. It is recommended by the following advantages:—It occupies the centre of what may be called the legal district, and comprises within a radius of a quarter of a mile all the Inns of Court and the offices of two thirds of the practising attorneys in London; it lies between two great thoroughfares—Holborn and the Strand—in the very heart of the metropolis; it is now covered with a perfect mass of courts, lanes, and alleys, the whole of small and little value, and very many of them of a disreputable character. It is, therefore, eligible for the purpose; it may be secured at a moderate expense, regard being had to its situation and extent, and the use to which it will be applied will effect an improvement, sanitary and moral, of one of the worst neighbourhoods in the metropolis.

The architectural character of the building can only be generally described. It will consist of one pile, within which, probably, a series of commodious law courts will be arranged, and along the façade of which, fronting the Strand, the law offices will be placed. The thoroughfares on all the four sides of the building will be spacious. Thus much seems to have been determined upon. No details have yet been settled. When the site has been secured, Government proposes to ascertain, by a commission of well-informed persons, the amount of accommodation required for each court and its offices, and what will be the best arrangement to meet the general convenience of the public and the wants of the profession. It is contemplated, as soon as this report has been made, that the competition of a limited number of architects who stand high in their profession shall be invited, with the understanding that of the plans sent in the one selected shall not only be best adapted to meet the wants of those who are to use the building, but also to answer the public demands in regard to the general beauty and dignity of the structure.

And now as to the ways and means. The estimated cost of the site and building is £1,000,000. This sum, or what expenditure is to be provided for, in the first instance, by the Treasury; but it is believed that the Treasury will reimburse itself from the following sources:—There was, says the Attorney-General, in October, 1863, a sum amounting to £6,000,000 standing invested in Consols, to the credit of the Chancery Court, called the "Fund B." It has accumulated from the banking profits derived from the management of suitors' stock, which at the same date—October, 1863—was £1,500,000. To this investment will sell out £1,000,000, which, at the present price of Consols, will realise about £900,000. It is calculated that the Treasury will save £200,000 in respect of sites alienated, and rents now paid of offices which, after the completion of the proposed change, will be no longer wanted. This will make £1,100,000 of the £1,500,000 required. For the remainder, £400,000 of the remaining £600,000 it is intended that for the next fifty years fees shall be paid on certain proceedings in each of the courts which will benefit by the new arrangement, to be appropriated as redemption annuities. Eventually, the whole expenditure will be made out without laying the smallest additional burden upon the taxpayers.

The scheme looks at first sight too good to be true. Indeed, there are some who affirm that the reliance placed upon the anticipated sales of Fund B. is unwarranted by Government, however, pledge their responsibility for the existence and the availability of the fund. The real ground for apprehension is that the actual outlay will far exceed the estimate. But should it be so, no one who has any regard for the character of his country, will begrudge the amount which may be found indispensable to the proper attainment of a desirable object to the subjects of the realm.

MACHINERY FOR TAKING THE ATLANTIC TELEGRAPH CABLE ON BOARD THE GREAT EASTERN.

IN the old Illustrated London News of Journal we have given illustrations of the shipping and stowing of the Atlantic telegraph cable on board the Great Eastern steam-ship, now lying in the Medway, to which the cable is brought, by barges, both at the moment of departure by the two hulks that come down alternately from the manufactoryat what at first sight resembles a huge Catherine wheel, but which, as shows the apparatus erected upon the lower deck of the Great Eastern for hauling in the cable as delivered by the vessel alongside and passing it down into the hold, where it is to be stowed in the three great iron tanks, specially fitted for the purpose, the first of which is shown in a former Illustration. The mechanism does not require much explanation, as it is of the simplest description, until the cable is passed over a set of wheels or rollers, at a uniform rate of speed, regulated by the pressure of the levers at the top holding the cable steady in the groove between which it passes, the place where it enters the ship is on the right hand of our View, and on the left hand is the aperture by which it descends into the hold. The man who is seen leaning against the frame, with his head thrown into a kind of upright position, is Mr. Measures Napier Denam" pronounced to put a girdle round the earth in forty minutes. The distance between the two ships is about a mile, or a little more of the terrestrial circumference; yet, when next midsummer allows the Great Eastern to set forth, the mighty errand across the Atlantic, we shall be satisfied if she can perform the task in as many days.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

The Legislative Session was opened on Wednesday by the Emperor in person. His ceremonious progress from the Tuileries, in the Salle des Etats, in the Louvre. We give in another column his Majesty's speech entire, which was received with acclamations. A perusal of it will show that the indications that it was to be of a pacific character have been fully realised.

The Court at Compiègne. France and Sweden was signed on Wednesday.

The Papal Nuncio, Mgr. Chigi, has had an audience of the Emperor, at which his Eminence expressed regret for the publicity his powers letters to the Bishop of Orleans have given to the question. The Emperor, it is said, graciously received the explanation.

The ball at the Tuileries on Wednesday night was the most brilliant of the season, and was graced by the presence of the Empress, who was beautifully attired in white lace, and wore a crown of pearls. Their Majesties were accompanied by Prince Napoleon, Princess Clotilde, and Princess Mathilde. The Empress conversed a great part of the evening with Prince Napoleon, who appeared at a Court ball in an unusual event.

On Saturday night Prince Napoleon gave a ball at the Palais Royal, entertaining in his twenty-two saloons 1400 guests, among whom were the ministers, letters, arts, and commerce. Of the industrial class there were a good many, and they were among the most favoured guests. Dancing was banished from the first floor, where the Emperor and Empress, All the Corps Diplomatique, with the exception of Prince Gortschakoff and Baron Brunnow, Russia, were present. It is understood in Paris that Prince Napoleon, with the concurrence of his brother, the Emperor, has determined to withdraw before the public in a more prominent position than he has hitherto occupied, and one in accordance with the confidence reposed in him by the Government. He is now Vice-President of the Privy Council, and, as is supposed, Regent, in case of the heir apparent ascending the throne while a minor.

The appeal of the "Thirteen" (M. Garnier-Pagès and others), condemned for illegally assembling at the funeral of Manin and other persons, was dismissed, last Saturday, by the Court of Cassation.

The first sale of the sale of the late Duc de Morny's property, directed to antique bronzes, were throughout numerously attended. Count de Nieuwerkerke was the purchaser for the Louvre. Mr. Sewell, for the British Museum; and M. Helbig, for the Berlin Museum, were constant attendants. The gladiator's bronze found at Herculaneum was purchased for the Emperor, at 13,000f. It consists of two thighpieces, two bracelets, a buckler, and helmet, and forms a part of a present of antiquities, offered, in 1802, by the Queen of Naples to Mdme. Bonaparte, wife of the First Consul. The Emperor has also bought a complete curass with a belt. The Louvre has purchased a bronze seat, which has no equal in any of the museums of Europe. It was knocked down at 3000f. Count de Nieuwerkerke also bought for the Louvre, for 4350f., a small bust of a Roman youth. The Minerva found at Besançon fetched very nearly 20,000f., rumour naming the Duke d'Aumale as the purchaser. The total proceeds of these four days amount to 109,686f.

The basin of ornamental water in the garden of the Luxembourg Palace has been drained and cleaned. From it have been taken cartloads of mud and barrowfull of children's toys, particularly boats and ships, which had foundered on stormy days; also tops, balls, and hoops, the accumulation of the last seven years.

At the last sitting of L'Académie des Sciences (Institut) the prize founded by Astronomer Lalande for the most signal advance made in knowledge of the solar system was awarded to Richard Carrington, of Redhill, where that gentleman has a private observatory, and for seven years (1854-1861) had assiduously kept watch for the detection and mapping out of spots on the sun. He had placed on record 304 groups on the surface of that luminary the accuracy of which had been verified.

A hotly-contested election for a vacant seat in the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences has ended in the nomination of M. Caubin, a rigid Catholic, by a majority of seven votes, against sixteen given to M. Bersot, a redacteur of the Débats.

The provincial journals announce the death of two communists—a man named Allemand, aged 80, at Mas-en-Garnier, in the Aveyron (Aube), and a woman named Giroux, aged 101, at Nismes (Gard).

A terrible colliery explosion occurred on the 9th inst. in a coalpit at Dernin (Nord). Nearly 300 men were in the pit at the time. The subterranean fire was extinguished as soon as found, and preasures were adopted for extricating the unfortunate miners. The latest intelligence states that twelve men were killed.

SPAIN.

The Government has approved of the publication of the encyclical, except those portions which are contrary to the Royal prerogative.

The proposition to compel the nation generally to pay its taxes in advance has met with such opposition that it has had to be virtually given up. The Finance Minister, treating with a committee of the Cortes on the subject, has consented that only those persons paying taxes to the amount of more than sixty reals, and officials whose annual salaries exceed 8000 reals, shall be compelled to pay in advance. Persons who avail themselves of the privilege will be allowed interest at the rate of eight per cent.

Senor Bonansinga, the Minister of Finance, has announced that a capitalist has offered to negotiate a loan for the Government at 41.

A typhus fever, which appeared last week, demanded the abolition of slavery in the Spanish possessions.

From San Domingo we learn that the so-called insurgents have achieved another victory over the Spanish troops.

The general impression is that the Spanish American Republics has given up the adjustment of the quarrel between Peru and Spain, and left Peru to settle the affair single-handed. General Vivanco has accordingly been dispatched by the Peruvian Government to the Chinchas in order to treat, and terminate the difficulty. He was to propose to the Spanish Government to the decision of a mixed commission appointed by the two Governments. Admiral Pareja insisted, however, as a preliminary of the appointment of the Spanish squadron being guaranteed, and it was thought that Peru would submit.

ITALY.

A decree issued by King Victor Emmanuel authorises the publication of the Pope's encyclical throughout the kingdom of Italy, but reserves the right of the laity and clergy to declare in what the validity of those passages which are opposed to the institutions and laws of Italy.

His Majesty has received the deputation from the municipality of Turin at his Palace at Florence. The King expressed his thanks of the council and expressed entire good feeling towards the people of Turin.

Some disturbances have taken place in Padua, chiefly set on foot by the students of the University, several of whom have in consequence been arrested by the authorities.

General Garibaldi has written to a gentleman in Liverpool, stating that he will not be able to visit England this year.

Count Sartiges has forwarded a note to the Holy See remonstrating, on the part of the French Government, against the attack of Mgr. Chigi, the Papal Nuncio in Paris, to the Bishop of Moulins and the Archbishop of Auch. The Papal Government has disavowed the conduct of the Nuncio, who, as will be seen by our French news, has apologised to the Emperor Napoleon.

The deficit in the Pontifical Budget for 1865 is calculated at 3,000,000 scudi (equal to £600,000 or £1,000,000 sterling).

A memorandum has been sent by the Pope to the Russian Government complaining of the suppression of the Catholic convents in Poland, and also of the sequestration of the goods of the Church.

One of the secretaries of the Russian Legation has been banished from Rome for having given a challenge to a duel with a Neapolitan noble. His antagonist was banished the city for life.

An interesting discovery of industrial exhibition is to open at Rome on the 9th of March and to last six months.

TURKEY.

It was announced privately to the Austrian Reichsrath, on Monday, that the Government agreed with the main points of the address to the Emperor, which the Diets of Hungary and Croatia will next immediately after the close of the Reichsrath's Session.

The draught of a Customs tariff is to be submitted to the Reichsrath in the course of next month, and an international conference, consisting of delegates from England and Austrian representatives, to investigate the present state of the trade between England and Austria, with a view to extending the commercial relations by a reduction of tariffs.

The Government has prohibited the clergy of Galicia from receiving subscriptions for the Polish National Loan in the Polish priests.

A Vienna letter mentions that the directors of all the journals in that city, without distinction of party, have addressed a petition to the Government complaining of the present legislation on the press, and praying for a modification of it.

PRUSSIA.

In last Saturday's sitting of the Chamber of Deputies Herr Grabow said that he had received a report recently presented to him by the inhabitants of Cologne not in his own name, but in that of the Liberal majority of the Rhine Province, complaining of a want of right and liberty.

A proposition of Herren Schultze Delitzsch and Faucher to abolish the laws against coalitions of working men has been under debate in the Lower Chamber.

Under the patronage of the Crown Prince of Prussia, an international exhibition of machines, implements, and productions of agriculture, horticulture, and forestry, together with objects of flowers and foresters' household economy, will be opened on the 16th of May, in the large grounds of the Horticultural Society at Cologne.

RUSSIA.

The Emperor has not addressed a receipt to the Minister of the Interior evoking the loyalty of Russians in reference to his Majesty calling for reform, which he considers an interference with his prerogative, and expresses that he will never again deal with such similar letters from his faithful nobility.

Mr. Charles Edward Stowe, Professor of English Literature in the Imperial Alexander Lyceum, has been appointed, from among fourteen candidates, to be chief of Regent Alexander in the University of St. Petersburg, rendered vacant by the death of Mr. T. B. Shaw, M.A.

Foreigners passing through the Russian Legation or Consulate may reside and travel in Russia for six months without exchanging their passports for a passport of residence.

Telegrams from Warsaw and elsewhere have been published in the English and French newspapers announcing the assassination and deportation of Poland with Russia and consequent changes among the officials in the Polish Government. These, we learn from a telegram, are entirely unfounded.

AMERICA.

The latest news from New York is to the morning of the 8th inst. Accounts of the opening of peace negotiations between the Federals and the Confederates, and of their complete failure, reached us almost simultaneously. The Canada, which arrived during Tuesday night from Boston and Halifax, brought the news that three Confederate Commissioners—Vice-President Stephens, Senator Hunter, and Judge Campbell—had arrived at Fort Monroe on the 2nd inst., in order to discuss peace unofficially; that Secretary Seward had gone to Fort Monroe to meet them; and that President Lincoln himself had left Washington for Fort Monroe in consequence of a telegram from Mr. Seward. This important news was brought to us by New York despatches to the afternoon of the 3rd inst. The Hibernian, which arrived on Wednesday evening, brought, however, telegraphic news from New York to the morning of the 5th inst., to the effect that the peace conference between President Lincoln, Mr. Seward, and the Confederate Commissioners has proved a failure, and that both Governments remain as they were. President Lincoln and Secretary Seward had returned to Washington; and a secret session of the Cabinet had been held there. The Associated Press despatches state that President Lincoln and Mr. Seward had an informal conference with Messrs. Hunter, Stephens, and Campbell, on board a steamer at Hampton Roads, which lasted four hours; and it is positively known that it resulted in no change in the attitude of either Government. In other words, it was a failure.

The war news is not important. There had been no operations in the neighbourhood of Richmond; and the Confederate squadron had retired up the James River. Part of the Federal fleet had left the Cape Fear River for Charleston; and it would seem from Confederate accounts that the Federals had assembled their troops near Fort Fisher, and had probably abandoned for a time active operations against the town of Wilmington. The main body of General Sherman's army had crossed the Savannah River, and commenced on the 17th ult. its march, in three columns, through South Carolina towards Charleston and Branchville, but had experienced great difficulties at the outset in consequence of heavy rains, which had rendered the swamps impassable. Federal accounts stated that General Sherman was within forty miles of Charleston, that General Foster was co-operating with him, and that the Confederates were offering resistance at every point, but were being rapidly driven from all their defensive positions. Confederate despatches, however, asserted that all General Sherman's efforts to cross the Combahee River had hitherto failed. A number of steamers had been sent from Cairo up the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers, for the purpose, as it was said, of removing General Thomas's army to "a new base." The Confederate General Hill had announced that, in case of need, all the cotton stored in Augusta would be burned, even though the burning might cause the destruction of the city; and the Richmond papers stated that measures had been taken to destroy all cotton in Georgia and the Carolinas whenever it might be in danger of falling into the Federals' hands.

President Davis has appointed the 10th of March as a day of fast and prayer. The Confederate Congress was considering a bill for the impressment of 40,000 negroes for "menial service" with the army, and had rejected an amendment providing that none of them should at any time be armed and employed as soldiers. General Breckenridge has been appointed Confederate Secretary for War.

The Federal War Department has arranged to exchange with the South all prisoners now in close confinement or in irons.

Admiral Porter has made a special report to the Federal Government on the monitors. He says they behaved better in rough weather when off Fort Fisher than any of the rest of the fleet, though they became very uncomfortable for the officers and men, shipping much water. On one of his ironclads the Admiral gets quite eloquent. He says:—"The Monadnock is capable of crossing the ocean alone (when her compasses are once adjusted properly), and could destroy any vessel in the French or British navy, lay their towns under contribution, and return again (provided she could pick up coal) without fear of being followed. She could certainly clear any harbour on our coast of blockaders in case we were at war with a foreign Power."

General Butler had made a speech at Lowell, in which he fiercely attacked Admiral Porter, and especially General Grant, whom he charged with preventing an exchange of prisoners with the South and with lavishly wasting the blood of his troops. As to himself, he hoped that when he died his epitaph might be—"Here lies the General who saved the lives of his soldiers at Big Bethel and Fort Fisher, and who never commanded the army of the Potomac."

A joint resolution submitting to the decision of the State Legislatures the constitutional amendment abolishing slavery throughout the United States has passed the House of Representatives, amid great enthusiasm, by 119 ayes to 56 noes. The Maryland, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and Western Virginia Legislatures and the New York Assembly have ratified the constitutional amendment, and it has been ratified in Illinois and Rhode Island by the Lower Houses. In the Senate Mr. Sumner has introduced resolutions declaring the consent of the rebel States to the measure to be unnecessary while they are in rebellion; and the Senate has passed joint resolutions declaring Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and Tennessee, not entitled to representation in the Electoral College. President Lincoln has been serenaded at Washington, when he made a speech, in which he said that the passage of the amendment abolishing slavery was an occasion of congratulation for the whole world. He thought the measure was a fitting if not indispensable adjunct to the winding up of the great difficulty. He wished the re-union of the States to be so effected as to remove all causes of future disturbance. "The emancipating proclamation," said Mr. Lincoln, "falls short of what the amendment will effect when consummated."

The Senate has passed the retaliation resolutions, with the amendment that the retaliation should be in conformity with the usages of war among civilised nations.

The House of Representatives has passed the bill for the construction of a ship canal around the Niagara Falls, and also for the Illinois-Michigan Canal. The latter will enable gun-boats to pass from the Mississippi to Lake Michigan.

Mr. Stanton has ordered the re-annexation of Arizona to the Pacific department, under General Macdowell. The limits of the Southern department are intended to embrace North Carolina.

A coloured lawyer has been admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court.

The peace negotiations diminished the premium on gold at New York to about 105 per cent; but it rose again to about 113 per cent on the 4th inst., when the failure of those negotiations became known.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA.

The Canadian Government has given up Burleigh, the Confederate partisan who seized a steamer on Lake Erie, for trial in the United States; and the Canadian Legislature has almost unanimously passed he Alien Bill introduced by the Colonial Ministry. This bill provides that, on complaint of a resident, the Governor-General may order aliens to quit the Provinces, after giving them notice, through the Official Gazette, of their intended expulsion. The accused may, however, tender reasons for non-compliance.

The report of Colonel Jervois respecting the defences of Canada has been published. Colonel Jervois is of opinion that if Montreal and Quebec were placed in a condition for defence, and the river between Montreal and Quebec commanded by iron-plated vessels, a successful resistance could be made to any attempt to subjugate the country, so long as Great Britain had the command of the sea. The defence of Upper Canada is, in his opinion, more difficult. Even there, however, points are to be found—for instance, Kingston, Toronto, and Hamilton—which, if properly fortified, would offer a most serious, if not effectual, resistance to an enemy.

THE BRAZILS.

We have news from Rio Janiero to the 24th ult.

Paysandú was taken by the Brazilians on the 2nd inst., after a sanguinary conflict which lasted fifty hours. The losses were heavy on both sides, including several Generals killed. Great mortality was found to exist in the city.

The Brazilian army is marching on Montevideo.

The Diplomatic Corps have taken an energetic course in presence of these events, which threaten the tranquillity and commercial interests of that city.

The forces of Paraguay have taken Fort Corunbra, in the province of Matto Grosso. It is believed that they have also captured Forts Miranda and Dorrado.

CHINA AND JAPAN.

Tranquillity is completely restored in China, and little or nothing is heard of the remains of the rebels.

Two Japanese have been executed as accomplices in the murder of Major Baldwin and Lieutenant Bird. Two French sailors at Yokohama were riotous on shore, and were set upon by a crowd of armed Japanese and killed. It is reported that the batteries of Simonosaki are in course of being rebuilt, and one of our gun-boats has gone to the strait in order to ascertain the truth of the matter. The British forces are still in the Bay of Jeddo.

NEW ZEALAND.

Sir George Grey has at length accepted the resignation of the Fox Ministry, and a new Cabinet has been formed, consisting of Mr. Weld, Colonial Secretary; Mr. Sewell, Attorney-General; Mr. Fitzherbert, Treasurer; Major Atkinson, Colonial Defence Master; Major Richardson, Postmaster-General. Mr. Weld, Major Atkinson, and Major Richardson are members of what is known as the war party. Mr. Weld, in his statement of policy, declares that the double system of government by Governor and Ministers has resulted in evil to both races in New Zealand. He will recommend the Assembly to request the Home Government to withdraw the whole of the troops from the colony and instruct the Governor to be guided by his constitutional advisers. He recommends a small standing colonial force, and a strong military post about the centre of the Ngatiruanui country.

In the Waikato districts quiet appeared to be permanently restored, but at Taranaki the enemy were still in arms, and held possession of the country beyond the guns of the redoubts.

AUSTRALIA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

MELBOURNE, Dec. 21, 1864.

THE interchange of news between Australia and home—as all, even the native born, affectionately call the mother country—is ordinarily as one-sided in interest as the Homeric swap of the golden armour for the brass. What the mail brings us is the expectation of a week before and the town-talk of a week after; while we are pretty well assured, in spite of a reasonably good opinion of ourselves, that the Australian intelligence with you is but an item in the day's account. This time, however, the balance seems to be more even; for we are all pleased, though rather surprised, to find that our remonstrances on the transportation question have not altogether been thrown to the winds, and that even the leading organs of public opinion think we are not presumptuous in looking sharp after the safety of our lives and fortunes. At the same time, the said journals are not to be complimented on their Australian knowledge. It is sickening to find that we cannot enter upon a protest without being harked back upon that everlasting Lord North and the American War. The unanimous desire to stop the infiltration of crime from Western Australia, by cutting off the channel of supply, is so far from being a move towards separation that there never was a time when the colonists were more united in heart to the English Crown and people. And good reason why. As the last Census shows, nine tenths of the Victorians are British born, and of these nine tenths at least a half have not been ten years away from their native shores. There never would be an idea of separation in Australian minds if it were not incessantly started by the English press. These colonies cost England nothing, and add to her income many millions; and why she should be so exceedingly anxious to cut the painter is a puzzle, for the first consequence of the child setting up for itself would be, as in America, the introduction of heavy protective duties, anything but pleasant or profitable to your importers. I repeat that the feeling here is most loyal; and if Mr. M'Culloch has expressed himself considerably briskly, it is "only pretty Fanny's way." He is a rough and ready Scotchman, and in his proposed interference with the mail service only took the shortest and sharpest way of rousing attention to the fact that we are in earnest. There is a conference now sitting here of delegates from the three colonies—South Australia and Tasmania being the other two—but it is unlikely that they will originate anything.

The first Session of the fourth Parliament of Victoria was opened on the 28th of November. The Governor, in the customary speech, promised a land bill, the reform of the Legislative Council, amendment of the insolvency law, a bill for establishing post-office savings banks; for imposing a legacy duty; and concluded by stating that application had been made to the Home Government for a material contribution, in the shape of ships and guns, to assist in securing the colony against aggression.

The recent brief Session of our Parliament has been attended by some results unexpected to particular parties more than to the public. So long as the elections were going on, the Ministry left the question open; or, if anything, went in on the side of native industry. The cry from the tradesmen and operatives in this direction was so strong that the free-trade party appeared to be entirely at a discount. When the result of the elections was known, it turned out that the majority between free traders and pseudo-Protectionists was so overwhelming for Mr. M'Culloch that he was completely master of the position; and since then we have heard little indeed of protection. It is, in fact, a matter which no one colony can settle for itself. If any one is sufficiently rich and independent to be able virtually to do without customs duties, she drags the others perforce in her wake. This is, probably, about to be the case with South Australia. By Mr. Goyder's recent valuations, the squatters, alias shepherd kings, have been obliged to submit to such a heavy increase of rental that it is believed Adelaide will be able to declare herself a free port. In this case, Victoria must follow suit, or be completely undersold in her own markets. For this reason, among others, considerable anxiety has been felt as to whether the rentals of the Victorian sheep-runs would be, in like manner, revalued, so as to give an additional half a million of revenue. No change, however, is to be made till 1870. The present land bill, which is virtually carried, applies itself only to the sale of the agricultural soil. In this it is tolerably liberal. The settler may select any quantity up to 640 acres at £1 per acre, and pay for it at the end of the first year; or, if he prefer to let it run for five years, paying meanwhile 2s. per acre rent, it will be then put up at auction, and sold, after full compensation for all improvements. The soil of Victoria is generally so rich, and at the same time so sparsely timbered, that £1 per acre pays the purchaser far better than a dollar would do in poorer soil, where the land has to be cleared. If the farmers here would grow reactionally, and not exhaust the soil by perpetual white crops, this would be one of the greatest corn-growing regions in the world. As it is, we buy our corn; and if Americans, as they often do at Adelaide, fail us, we have dear bread, a heavy item to be set against high wages. Still, there is very little real distress, and that little chiefly the growth of intemperance, the curse of these colonies. The merchants, indeed, look very serious since the receipt of the recent mail. The tightness of the money market at home, of course, reacts very prejudicially here. Two considerable failures—those of Messrs. Cleve and Joske—have already taken place, collectively, for an amount considerably exceeding £100,000. Trade, however, generally is sound enough; and the depression would have lasted only a few days but for the unaccountable conduct of the Minister. A partial readjustment of the tariff has been long announced, and, of course, until the details are known, commerce on a large scale is paralysed. In this state of things the Budget has been suspended till the reopening of Parliament in February.

Meantime, the town rejoices in the coming Christmas. The balls, picnics, fancy bazaars, promenade concerts, &c., are innumerable; and the fine arts are represented by Mr. Frith's picture of "The Derby Day," which the people crowd to see.

A fire broke out in Brisbane, Queensland, on the night of Dec. 1, by which the entire block of houses encompassed by Queen, Albert, Elizabeth, and George Streets, with the exception of one or two buildings, was laid in ruins.

The festival of the Skaters' Club, St. Petersburg, took place on the 26th ult., on the Neva, opposite the English Quay, and was honoured with the presence of the Emperor and the majority of the Princes of the Imperial family, besides a large number of persons of distinction, including many ladies. Festoons and garlands of light, with chandeliers, immense torches, and Bengal fires illuminated the inclosure, formed by a cordon of coloured lanterns. Many of the skaters also carried torches, while others, and particularly ladies, bore small lanterns on their heads and at their waists. The proceedings began at half-past eight in the evening, and were kept up with spirit until midnight. Punch, tea, and other refreshments were distributed in pavilions, and in the centre of the inclosure had been erected a pile of enormous blocks of ice, the surface of which, cut into facets, glittered in the coloured fires around like diamonds. A military band executed waltzes and other dances, to the music of which the skaters glided rapidly along in couplets, sometimes in Indian file, sometimes rapidly crossing each other and forming mazy circles around the sledges and privileged spectators. An immense crowd looked on the brilliant spectacle from outside the barrier.

LATEST NEWS FROM ABROAD.

The following telegram has been received through Mr. Reuter's office:—

CONCLUSION OF PEACE BETWEEN SPAIN AND PERU.—Madrid, Feb. 16.—The Minister for Foreign Affairs announced in the Congress to-day that peace had been signed between Spain and Peru, the latter State paying to Spain an indemnity of 400 million reals.

Three thousand five hundred barrels of gunpowder have recently been added to the powder stored in the Government magazines at Marchwood. The guard there has been increased.

Constantinople journals of the 25th ult. announce that Fuad Pacha, the Grand Vizier, having sent for Mdme. Ristori to his palace, presented to her from the Sultan a necklace of diamonds engraved with his Majesty's cipher. This favour was said to be a mark of the Sovereign's appreciation of the great performer's talent.

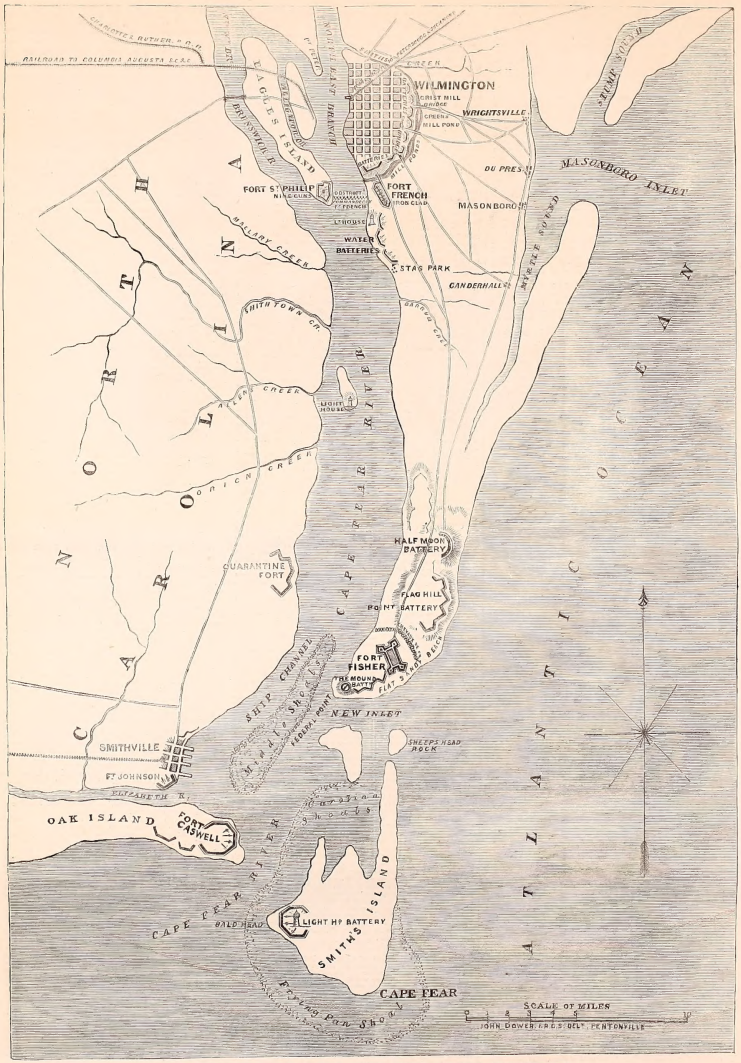
The Portrait published in our Number for the 28th of January as that of the late Dr. W. H. Baikie, R.N., the African traveller, was in reality the portrait of Dr. Robert Baikie, formerly of the Madras Army, now residing in Edinburgh. They were both natives of Orkney, and near relatives, but the deceased was much the younger man. He died the other day at Sierra Leone, after some years' absence from England. The mistake originated with the photographers who supplied us with the portrait.

The Cape papers contain voluminous accounts of the cruiser Shenandoah, formerly the Sea King, and her doings. She is commanded by Captain Waddell, and had a complement of about seventy-four men. After taking in her armament and leaving Maderia, under circumstances revealed in some recent law proceedings in England, she had captured and burned five Federal merchant vessels: one she released on finding that the chief owner was a Confederate, and a friend of the captain.

A biographical sketch of the late Horace Vernet gives the following anecdote:—"One day Louis Philippe, who had ordered Vernet to paint the picture of the 'Siege of Valenciennes,' was explaining his ideas as to how the artist ought to group the different figures, and insisted that Louis XIV. should be placed at the head of an attacking column at the moment of the assault. Vernet remarked that the great King had not taken quite so direct and heroic a part in the action. 'It is a family tradition,' objected Louis Philippe. 'That may be,' replied the artist, 'but it is a legend only, and I am a painter of history.'"

An American journal asserts that in the annual report of the chief of the bureau of ordnance of the United States Navy department, it is stated that—"On the field of Gettysburg there were 27,574 guns picked up, and of these 24,000 were found to be loaded, and half of them were double loaded. One fourth had from three to ten loads in, and many had five or six balls to one charge of powder. In some cases the powder was above the ball, in others the cartridges were not broken at the end, while in one musket twenty-three balls, sixty-two buckshot, and a quantity of powder were all mixed up together."

The Leone di San Marco of Catania (Sicily) announces that the eruption of Mount Etna is continuing. The first outbreak was at the foot of Mount Frumenti, north-west of the principal crater, and the second in the Valle del Bue, about a mile distant. The lava first divided into two branches, which took the direction of Villanova and Randazzo; and afterwards into three, one of which ran towards Piedimonte, another by Giarrita, and the third in the direction of Masceli—this last flowed as far as Scorciavacchi, about five miles from the town of Nunziata. The lava is advancing very slowly, and the damage done is not very considerable.



Her Majesty's Emigration Commissioners have chartered, at £12 6s. 8d. per statute adult, the Peeress, 777 tons, belonging to the Merchant Shipping Company, London, to sail with emigrants on the 27th of March, from Plymouth, to Adelaide, South Australia.——The Maryborough, 2500 tons burden, belonging to Messrs. James Baines and Co., sailed on the 9th inst. from Liverpool for Queensland, Captain E. Davis, commander; Surgeon Superintendent Dr. A. Levitt, assisted by Miss Elizabeth Needham, matron. She is the fiftieth vessel that has sailed on the land order system of emigration, under the immediate direction of the Queensland Government. She contains 445 souls, divided into paying, assisted, and free passengers.

Dod's Peerage, Baronetage, and Knightage for 1865 fully sustains the credit of its predecessors for the careful classification and condensation of materials, gleaned from the most varied and authentic sources of information. Nor does that valuable manual, Dod's Parliamentary Companion for the current year, show any sign of falling off in completeness and accuracy. In addition to the usual carefully revised lists of the members of the two houses and the fullest particulars concerning their personal and political connections, there is a chapter giving a succinct but comprehensive explanation of Parliamentary terms, forms and proceedings; and the third part contains a statement, compiled from the latest returns, of the population and registered electors of each county and borough.

WILMINGTON AND THE CAPE FEAR RIVER,

NORTH CAROLINA.

THE Map of Wilmington and the Cape Fear River, which appears on the following page, will doubtless have a peculiar interest for our readers, as placing before them the scene of Admiral Porter's recent successes. The subjoined particulars have been furnished by a correspondent direct from "Dixie's Land," who was, during four days, an eye-witness of the bombardment of Fort Fisher, and to whom a three months' previous residence at Wilmington had given many facilities for procuring the latest and most reliable information. The port of Wilmington, North Carolina, is situated about twenty miles north of the New Inlet entrance to the Cape Fear River. It is about four miles long and three miles broad, numbering nearly 6000 inhabitants, of whom two thirds are negroes. The streets are built at right angles, and contain many handsome edifices, among which the City Hall, the Custom House, and the marble mansion of J. A. Taylor, a wealthy Northerner, are the most conspicuous. Wilmington, however, owes its notoriety to having been the principal port of rendezvous for blockade-runners since the closing of Charleston Harbour. In spite of the vigilance of the Federal cruisers—there were on an average eighteen blockading the different entrances—as many as 164 runners successfully passed in and out in the twelve months elapsing between Oct. 1, 1863, and Oct. 1, 1864. The value of imports, through the blockade, for the year ending June 30, 1864, was 3,276,000 dols.; and of exports, 65,185,000 dols.—figures not even attained in prosperous times before the war, when imports were almost nil, and exports consisted only of lumber, resin, turpentine, and farm produce. There are two approaches to the Cape Fear River, one at the New Inlet, navigable for vessels not drawing more than 9 ft., and one at the Western Bar, between Smith and Oak Island, where the depth varies from 9 ft. to 13 ft. To the extreme left of Oak Island (not visible in the map) is Fort Camel; and in a straight line with it, on Smith's Island, below Bald Head Light, is Fort Holmes. These two forts formerly commanded the channel, and kept the Federal cruisers at bay when chasing a blockade-runner too close to the bar. Caswell, a very strong, casemated earthwork, has been blown up by the Confederates, as also the batteries on Smith's Island, and Forts Johnson and Pender, one above, the other below Smithville. Fort Fisher, against which Admiral Porter's attack was directed, forms the key to the channel. The inner (direct) distance from Fort Fisher to Caswell is eight miles, but to go round by the Frying Pan Shoals, it is sixty-two miles. The fort itself is described as "an enormous mound of sand"; but it mounted seventy-five guns, Brooks's rifled, protected by traverses, with bombproof casemates below. The best instance of its extraordinary strength is that it sustained a continuous bombardment of twenty-one days, for the attack commenced on the 14th of December and terminated only on the 14th of January. The banks all along the river, as far as Wilmington, and some distance beyond, are protected by formidable masked batteries; and torpedoes and other obstructions—piles and wrecks—have been laid down in the channel by the Confederates, to impede navigation. Even before the arrival of the Northern armada, that portion of the river between Fort St. Philip and Fort French required the utmost skill and caution to pilot a vessel of any width through without running aground or against some hidden danger. Although secret information reached Wilmington as early as the 18th of December of the departure of the Federal fleet from Fortress Monroe, the military authorities in command so little expected an invasion that there were only 400 effective soldiers in the town, and a little over 200 in Fort Fisher, when the shelling began. The Federal forces are now before Half Moon Battery, about fifteen miles below Wilmington; and, as possession of the town is of great importance to them—it commands the high roads to Charleston and Petersburg—they are sure to use strenuous exertions to effect its capture; and this we may expect to hear of by next mail, the Confederates not being prepared for hostile demonstrations in that quarter before spring, nor able to spare sufficient troops for a lengthened resistance.

WILMINGTON AND CAPE FEAR RIVER, NORTH CAROLINA.—SEE PRECEDING PAGE.

SIR MOSES MONTEFIORE, BART., F.R.S.

THIS eminent London merchant and philanthropist is one of the leading members of the Jewish community in Great Britain. Sir Moses Montefiore, now in his seventy-ninth or eightieth year, has, by a long course of social usefulness and beneficence, done much to uphold and enhance the respectability of his people, who are justly esteemed as inferior to no other class in England in the virtues of private life, in their character for commercial integrity, and in their zeal for the public welfare consistently with their belief in the future destinies of their own religion and race. As a member of the City Corporation, soon after the removal of those legal disabilities by which the Jews, with all other dissenters from the Established Church, were formerly excluded from civic offices, his example contributed to put an end to the unworthy prejudices which had been fostered by unjust laws derived from the intolerant bigotry of past ages. It was one among the most significant tokens of the era of political reform and general progress that Mr. Sheriff Montefiore should have taken part in giving an entertainment to her Majesty Queen Victoria when she visited Guildhall upon her accession to the throne, in 1837; and upon that occasion he of course received the honour of knighthood. Having subsequently discharged, with equal credit, all the duties of a resident country gentleman and magistrate in the county of Kent, of which he has also been High Sheriff, Sir Moses Montefiore has entered the ranks of our landed aristocracy, and now wears the baronetcy conferred upon him in 1846. These distinctions, with the degrees and diplomas of several learned societies, have testified to the esteem in which he is held by the secular world; but he has earned the gratitude and reverence of his brethren in the Jewish faith by special services done to their cause. Some twenty years ago he went on a mission to Syria and Constantinople, with a view to obtain from the Turkish Government the concession of certain rights for the oppressed Jews of Damascus; and, having been successful in this object, he was presented by the Jews of London, wifes he returned home, with a handsome testimonial of their regard. About a twelvemonth since, the distressed condition of both Jews and Christians in the empire of Morocco having appealed in like manner to his sympathies, Sir Moses Montefiore again undertook a toilsome journey for the purpose of pleading on their behalf. He was graciously received at the Court of the Sultan of Morocco, who listened to his representations, and soon afterwards published an edict granting the needed measures of relief. Upon the news of this result, in April of last year, it was resolved by the Court of Common Council that the thanks of the City of London should be offered to Sir Moses Montefiore "for the signal service rendered by him in having undertaken missions to various countries in relief of communities oppressed for their religious convictions, and more especially for his journey to Morocco, to solicit from his Imperial Majesty the Emperor of that country that his Jewish and Christian subjects should be relieved from all civil and religious disabilities." The presentation of this vote of thanks took place at a meeting of the Common Council, held at Guildhall, on the 6th of October last. The Lord Mayor (Alderman W. Lawrence) took occasion to remark that Sir Moses Montefiore had consistently exerted himself, for a long series of years, "not only to alleviate the suffering of his co-religionists, but those of humanity in general, irrespective of creed, colour, or country." Upon this ground, the Portrait of Sir Moses Montefiore (from a photograph by Mr J. C. Twyman, of Ramsgate) will be viewed with interest by all our readers.

SIR MOSES MONTEFIORE, BART.

THE SUGARLOAF MOUNTAIN, RIO DE JANEIRO.

THE Sugarloaf is an immense conical block of granite 1200 ft. high, which forms the barrier on the southern side of the entrance to the Bay of Rio de Janeiro. The entrance to the bay is about three quarters of a mile in breadth, and is guarded on the other side by Fort Santa Cruz. To the inexperienced eye the Sugarloaf looks quite inaccessible. Its ascent has, however, been effected, and is rather a favourite enterprise with young British naval officers, some of whom have succeeded in triumphantly planting the union jack upon its stony summit. In the year 1838 it was attempted by an adventurous Italian lady, calling herself the Donna America Vespucci, who about that time visited Brazil and other South American States, claiming to be regarded as the sole surviving lineal descendant of the Florentine navigator Amerigo Vespucci, who followed next to Columbus in his exploration of the coasts of the New World. This lady, however, failed to get to the summit of the Sugarloaf; but the feat has since been accomplished by others of her sex. An American, named Burdett, accompanied by his wife, succeeded in reaching the top; and a young Scotchwoman, whose name we do not know, has likewise performed the arduous ascent. The Sugarloaf, as might be supposed from its position, is the first object seen by the traveller who arrives at the port of Rio, and it is the last to pass out of his view as he leaves the Brazilian shores.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1865.

In the early part of the week came news from America which excited legitimate hope that the combatants were weary of the war. We were informed that agents from the South had been empowered to meet the heads of the Federal Government, and to discuss terms of compromise. We also learned that the authorities at Washington had consented to receive these Confederate gentlemen, and that a meeting had actually taken place. President Lincoln, having previously dispatched Mr. Seward to Hampton Roads, went thither himself, and met Messrs. Hunter, Campbell, and Stephens on board a steamer, and it is said that their "informal conference" lasted for four hours. The last mail confirms the intelligence that the meeting has been without a result, and that the parties have returned to their respective abodes.

We find ourselves unconsciously lingering over this detail, though it is a vain one. How gladly should we have narrated every incident in the history had we been able to end it with the intimation that the heads of a treaty had been agreed upon. There was not an honest-hearted man in England who did not hail the intelligence of the early part of the week with satisfaction, and, indeed, with gladness. It was felt that the period was opportune for pacification. The Northern armies had accomplished splendid things, and had so triumphantly vindicated the claim of the Federals to superiority of force that they could well afford to close the game, and leave the South unsubdued, and proud of the gallant soldiery that had held the capital against all comers. There was no loss of honour to the Confederates in giving in when every one of their ports was closed; for they were like to a brave garrison that had yielded to the power of the assailants to draw lines all round the fortress. On the great question of slavery, too, there seemed now but little or no room for controversy, because each discussions would lead men's minds away from the savage feelings of war, and this was the financial question which has been so often declared to have been the rock on which the ship Union really split. Throwing aside State rights and an absolute Union until the promise of peace should have made men so resolved upon it that there could be no danger of the failure of the negotiations, the emissaries from the South and the authorities from Washington might have talked tariff until the minds of all were prepared for constitutional debate and the resumption of friendly relations.

All was soon to be changed, and all again to be told, both by South and North, that we sordid islanders have never been able to attain to the true estimate of an idea. The North will jeer us for thinking that it would ever give up the Republican idea of Union; the South will not believe us whether we believe that it would be content with the fact of independence unless it had the name also. And we can only reply that we are practical people, and are well satisfied that we do not care to fight when nothing is to be gained by fighting. We know that a real Union, such as is dreamed of by the more sanguine Federals, is an impossibility, and that a name is all that the Southerns, which are really distinct nations, with different customs, creeds, and objects, into one harmonious whole. But the honour of the North might have been conserved by a treaty arrangement that should have given the mighty power. We know that the South must, unless foreign aid be granted, ere long succumb to the overwhelming power, numbers, and resources of its enemies, and that it cannot, therefore, demand a fixed independency: but it could have, by its gallantry, and by the terrible obstacles which it will for a long time be able to throw in the way of the Federals, earned the right to a real liberty, which might have been secured to it by the wisdom of the Washington rulers. We are sorry we taunted with the smallness of these views; but when we consider that our small scheme would instantly have checked the flow of blood and speedily have arrested the flow of treasure, which is the life-blood of war, we could reasonably desire, and that the grand ideas of each side have caused the negotiators to separate and the signal to be given for new slaughter and new expenditure, we are not in a position to say that our humble suggestion ought to be. At all events, we are anxious to assure our American brethren on both sides that we hailed the tidings of possible peace with a satisfaction for which words of them will not give us credit; and that it was with a wild and childish greediness for good news that made us receive the intelligence so eagerly. We had thought over the situation, and perceived, as we believed, that it was far from unhopeful that both champions being in honourable attitudes, and the real causes of the war having been absorbed. We had therefore some right to be bitterly disappointed when the second mail told us that all has been in vain. And quite in vain we know, for it is a good thing that the peace idea has so far made its way that Mr. Lincoln can meet the ambassadors of Mr. Davis. Let us hope that they may soon meet again, and to better purpose.

At a meeting of the members of the Society of Painters in Water Colours, on Monday evening last two new Associates were elected—Mr. J. D. Watson, an artist well known in London, and Mr. F. L. Shields, of Holme, Manchester, who is a painter of rustic figures.

The Speaker has appointed the following members to serve on the General Committee of Elections for the present Session:—Sir T. D. Acland, Bart.; Ralph Allen, Esq.; Lord Arthur Lennox, Lord Athlumney, Sir W. Miles, Bart., Mr. G. W. Hunt, and Mr. J. Bonham-Carter.

Mr. Butt, the Vice-President of the Board of Trade, will proceed to Vienna to negotiate with the Austrian Government the terms of a commercial treaty.

Mr. Dodson, one of the members for East Sussex, has been elected Chairman of Committees in the House of Commons, in the room of Mr. Massey.

The recommendations of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the working of the Factory Acts are, briefly, "A more important of these may be mentioned—that no importation of a foreign invention, or of a British invention patented abroad, shall be to the original term of fourteen years; and that the Crown shall be entitled to the use of all inventions, the remuneration for such to be settled by arbitration.

The report of the visitors of Maynooth College (these being the Duke of Leinster, Archbishop Whately, Lord Justice Chief Baron Pigott, C.B.) was issued on Wednesday morning. The superiors and professors of the College, on examination, were found to be efficient in twenty-two out of twenty-three departments. The number of students actually in residence during the year was 519, and the number of students who were not in residence was 70. The visitors have also examined the premises in the present year, and have found them in a satisfactory condition. The number of students have been reduced to the prescribed limit. The visitors express their satisfaction with the present hall and of the college chapel, and of the gravity of the library at the latter. With these exceptions the visitors report that the existing buildings remains unexcepted for want of funds to provide the necessary furniture; the visitors say the result of their visit has been satisfactory.

The eighth annual ordinary meeting of the Atlantic Telegraph Company was held on Thursday week, at the London Tavern—the Right Hon. Stuart Wortley in the chair. The chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, expressed great pleasure in the prospect of a speedy completion of the work. He believed that there were 1120 miles of the cable manufactured, and that which had been received on board the Great Eastern had, from the time it left the machine until it was deposited in the tanks, been submerged in water; every foot of it had been tested; and they were sure that the scientific staff that it was infinitely superior to anything that had been manufactured, and practically for the purpose for which it was intended. Mr. Hugh Allen, of Manfield, was elected hon. director as representing Cunard's.

OPENING OF THE FRENCH CHAMBERS.
THE EMPEROR'S SPEECH.

THE French Chambers were opened on Wednesday by the Emperor, who delivered a speech of which the following is a translation :—

GENTLEMEN AND DEPUTIES,—

When we last met I hoped to see the difficulties which threatened the repose of Europe removed by a congress. It has been otherwise; I regret it, for the sword often disposes of questions without solving them, and the only basis of a durable peace is the satisfaction given by the sovereign to the principles of the true interests of the people. In pursuance of the conflict which arose on the borders of the Danube, my Government, between the two monarchies Denmark and its goodwill for Germany, observed the strictest neutrality. Called upon, at the same time, to give its opinion on the question which involved the principle of nationalities, and the right of populations to be consulted in their fate, my language, condemning in turn the reserved attitude which we intended to preserve, has been moderate and friendly towards both parties.

The war, which I had hoped would be localised, has assumed greater importance lately. I have, however, neither possible the solution of a difficult problem. The Convention of the 15th of September, freed from violent interpretations, establishes my great principle—the consolidation of the new kingdom of Italy and the independence of the Holy See. The provisional and provinces, state which occupy Central Italy have shown that they are worthy of the sentiments of the Italian fatherland seeking to unite themselves to Sardinia as a regular province situated at the foot of the Alps, and not as a great country, which, rising above local prejudices and despising rash indignations, aspires to form a capital build into a kingdom of Upper Italy, and places it in the midst of the Apennines as an impregnable citadel. By the side of the Pope, whose spiritual authority I respect, I have wished to place a chief of an honour with Catholicism. It undertakes to support the independence of the Holy See, to protect the frontiers of the Roman States, and I can continue to withdraw our troops. A political testament, if different from my wishes, would be guaranteed, finds itself placed under the protection of a treaty which solemnly binds the two Governments. The Government of the Holy See engages to enter a work of peace and conciliation.

In America we have known to bring consolidation, the country is becoming powerful, its immense resources are being developed—a happy result of the honour of our flag and of the good sense of the American people, who, in the midst of the greatest conflicts, have always known how to respect the rights of nations.

In England I regret to see that of England, Holland, and the United States, has given a legend of which I can only express my regret.

In Africa a sudden insurrection has arisen to disturb the security of our possessions and to show how ignorant enemies are able to make use of our forces and of our friendly intentions. This took place at a moment when, in a spirit of generous justice, Algerians were severing the ties which bound the Arab population—when, by liberal measures, we were trying to make that mistaken people understand that, far from oppressing them, we wished to restore them to the benefit of civilisation—it was at this moment, I repeat, that, misled by religious fanaticism, the Kabyles have become the prey of a blind and fatal spirit of revolt. In spite of the difficulties of the position and the severity of the season, our troops have shown their usual energy, and the insurrection will, after the struggle of a few months, be completely subdued. I congratulate you on the victory. The zeal of the experienced chief placed at the head of Algeria, the unity of command which I have established, the efficiency of the reserves of France, will all concur, I hope, in preventing the return of similar disorders.

Time all our expenditure are augmented by the war. The sum of the executed Chins ; the money is sufficient to maintain our establishments in Cochin China and to keep up the army in Africa at the level at which it is already returning to France ; the garrison of Rome will soon return ; and, while at the Tuileries War, we shall also be able to withdraw the garrison of the Arc de Triomphe three weeks —" To the glory of the French armies, for ever, the Emperor will add the glory of the Peace."

Let us then, gentlemen, without uneasiness as to the future. The interval between the sessions is employed in seeking the means of increasing the material and moral well-being of the people, and I am happy to be able to state that being welcomed by me and adopted by you. Let us examine, then, together the measures which are submitted to you and which are of public use.

Religion and public instruction are subjects which constantly occupy me. All forms of worship enjoy equal liberty. I am happy to acknowledge the zeal bestowed its ministry's legitimate influence. By the law of instruction of 1850, Catholic clergy have entered the young in the bosom of the school, and in public councils; by the Constitution it sits in the Senate. But the more religious action is free and powerful, the more it is pure, the more it ought to be left respect for the governmental laws which rule it. It is my duty to maintain intact the rights of the civil power, which do not belong to me more than to Louis-lay and Napoleon.

The development of public instruction merits your solicitude. In the country of universal suffrage every citizen ought to know how to read and write. A bill will be presented to you for the still greater extension of primary instruction. Every year I seek to increase the number of those who are being opposed the free expansion of individual initiative in France.

By the law upon associations voted last year you have given to those who employ labour have learnt to settle the differences between them without the intervention of the law. Associations of workmen have been formed, and have to regulate by mutual relations between their supply and demand. New projects will now have for their object to improve the position of the workmen, to ameliorate and to increase the responsibility of the guarantees of their existence. I am anxious to destroy all the obstacles which oppose the creation of societies intended to ameliorate the condition of the working classes. In preparing the establishment of these societies without abandoning the guarantees of public security we shall facilitate their formation.

The Council of State has carefully considered a law which tends to give to municipal and general councils larger functions and more extended powers. Measures will be thus called upon to transact their own affairs, which, decided on the spot, will be more promptly settled. I hope that this law will satisfy a want of the legislature adopted to multiply the opposition of useful arrangements which uselessly complicate the machinery of the administration.

The colonies have also been inaugurated. A decree of the Regency has been extended to our relations with, Germany, Switzerland, and the United Kingdom and Sweden and Norway. Many other conventions will successfully be applied to commercial navigation. A law is being prepared to establish on one basis of organisation which shall be uniform the whole of the rapid completion of our railways, our canals, and our roads, is the necessary complement of the ameliorations already made. The law of 1852 has already given a part of our task by promoting private enterprises and by appropriating to the general interests the resources of the departments and communes. Several projects are before you, and without imposing new burdens on the public, the augmentation of home as well as already existing resources. The facility of industry, and promotes the easier communication of raw materials and products, the effects of which are injurious in turn to the consumer and the producer. Public works are not executed with sufficient economy, and the transport is facilitated—the less complaint will there be of sudden changes in the price of the necessaries of life. Time is not always taken into account in inconvenience suffered by agriculture. Some attribute this momentary suffering to the organisation of the railways, others to the price of coal, to which it was in existence, the depreciation in the price of cereals was much greater. I do not consider it useful to enter into the discussion of these facts.

Such is the condition of affairs in relation to the impetus given to industry, to the increase of wealth, to the development of the resources of the country. In 1858, it was millions of millions, and we have risen to the prodigious sum of upwards of seven milliards.

In reference to another subject, you will not be laid before you, with the object of increasing the guarantees of individual liberty. The first authorises provisional detention, and, or without bail, and, in case of necessity, will diminish the severity of preventive detention. The second suppresses personal arrest in civil and commercial matters, and thus abolishes imprisonment for debt. It is in accordance of a very ancient principle. From the earliest days of the Roman Republic the principle of the liberty of the person of the debtor was established by the Twelve Tables.

Let us therefore continue to follow the course marked out. Let us live, should it arise from the different forces of which we are the result, be combined only for law and justice; at home, let us protect religious ideas without encroaching on the rights of the civil power; let us maintain a wise balance among all classes of society; let us simplify without destroying our admirable administrative system; let us give the employment of the resources of our independent existence; let us stimulate individual initiative and the spirit of association.

Lastly, let us elevate the soul and strengthen the body of the nation. But, gentlemen, in order to fulfil this programme, we must have peace. The reputation for honour of the Constitutional Government and the generous tendencies of those who provoke changes with the sole object of securing what we have found. Europe is to verify what I say. Whatever may be the issue, my great is not the realisation of a more or less ingenious theory, but the application of the results of experience consecrated by time and accepted by public opinion.

M. Gerhard Rohlfs, the African traveller, has recently arrived at Malta by way of Tripoli. Rohlfs and Overweg made a journey into the interior from Morocco, across the Atlas range, as far as Kuka, on the western shore of the Nu-lake, in Bornu, for Marseilles, on return to Germany, to consult at to another journey over the same tract.

In a brief account of the late ascent of the Peter Botte mountain, in the Mauritius, of which we published a brief notice in our Paper of the 8th inst., reference was made to several former ascents; but we did not mention that, in 1851, the summit was visited by the officers of the late Royal Engineers, with Mr. Bain, chief officer, and Mr. George Bryce, steward, of the merchant-ship Hooghly, and six Indians, in October, 1847. We have received a letter from Captain George Bayly, of the Trinity House, who commanded the Hooghly, on board which Captain Cromwelle was a passenger, and he relates the manner in which this party accomplished the feat. The Indians or poler by which Captain Lloyd's party had got up in 1852 had since been removed; but Captain Cromwelle and Mr. Bain prevailed themselves with fifty fathoms of three-inch rope, and some lead-lines with heavy leaden weights attached to them. Having reached the summit, they threw over the rock, where the leaden weight struck fast in a crevice; one of the Indians then climbed up the line and pulled the rope after him; it was made fast, and the whole party got up safely. This ascent is not mentioned in a recent pamphlet, printed at the Mauritius, upon which we relied for our information.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Hon. R. W. Grosvenor, eldest son of Lord Ebury, has consented as a candidate for the representation of Westminster.

The first conversazione of the Arts Club this season was held on Wednesday, at the chambers, in Hanover-square.

The porpoise which was placed in the Zoological Society's Gardens on the 29th of December, and of which an Engraving was recently given in the Illustrated London News, died in the night last week.

At a meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works, yesterday week, it was resolved to oppose the bill for the incorporation of Wimbledon-common. It was also resolved that inquiries should be made into the question of providing a site for the Royal Academy of Music, and to report to the Board with a view of affording information to the Committee of the House of Commons on the subject.

A self-righting life-boat, 40 ft. long, the largest ever built, was launched at Limehouse, from Messrs. Forrestt's yard, on Tuesday, put to some severe tests, with satisfactory results, in the Regent's Canal Dock, Limehouse. The boat, which is built for the Duke of St. Albans, K.G., F.R.S., who, including his own contribution of £200, collected nearly the amount of £1000 for the purchase of the boat. She is to be stationed at Trent Dock, in the neighbourhood of the Goodwin Sands.

The Rev. Dr. Hessey, rector of the parish of St. Mark's Hospital for Fistula was held on Thursday week at the London Tavern. This hospital is making progress under the energetic care of Mr. Salmon, the surgeon, and there has been an increase in the annual subscriptions. The number of patients admitted during the year was 1161, of whom sixty-three died; cured 936 ; materially relieved, 134 ; for non-attendance, twenty ; and remaining under treatment, 28. The total receipts were £2,000, and the expenses £1,900, leaving a balance due to the treasurer of £100.

Cardinal Wiseman died at his town residence, in York-place, Portman-square, on Wednesday morning, in his sixty-third year. He had been for some time suffering from a severe attack of bronchitis, but his labours on behalf of his companion were uninterrupted, except in intervals of pain, to the last. The Cardinal was born in Seville, and was the second son of an Irish gentleman whose illness being his inability to fulfil his promise of lecturing at the Royal Institution on the 25th inst. on the subject of "Photography."

Last week the births of 2836 children—1171 boys and 1665 girls—were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1849-58 the average number was 2,000. Deaths in the week ending Saturday last were 1,000, showing a decrease on those of the two previous weeks. The deaths in the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1849-58 average 1,000. The deaths from bronchitis, which had been 339 in the previous week, declined to 314 ; those from pneumonia, or inflammation of the lungs, to 194 ; those from heart disease, seventy-eight. Whooping-cough, of which eighty-two cases were recorded in the previous week, was fatal in seventy-six cases. Seventy infants died from being overlaid or otherwise suffocated in bed. The ages of 1,000 persons who died in the week ending Saturday last amounted to 20,000 registered in the week.

The examination of an extraordinary character has been opened before the directors and guardians of the poor of St. Pancras, at the Vestry-hall, Pancras-lane, Oxford-street, by Mr. Rawlinson, inquiry into the conduct with the family of Earl Ballantyne, and to be heir to property in Canada, valued at £100,000. The inquiry arises out of a charge of child-stealing had, it was rumoured, been induced by Mr. Morrison, the master of the workhouse, to withdraw the charge. Mr. Morrison, it is stated, has since left, making the master of the workhouse his trustee and heir, and leaving him £1,000. Mr. Rawlinson, in opening the inquiry, said that the duty of the directors, or the guardians, was to collect evidence, and not the parish committee relative to the matter, a motion was carried by a considerable majority to the effect that the inquiry should be adjourned for a week, a decision of duty is not reporting to the board the circumstances attending the veil.

Two magnificent vessels were launched last Saturday from the leading and extensive shipbuilding establishment of Messrs. Scott and well, and that of Bidwell Ironworks, at Poplar. The Napoleon III., built at the Thames Ironworks, is a screw steamer of 1,000 tons, intended for the Transatlantic trade. This is one of the largest and most powerful paddle steamers built on the Thames. The Ripon, a screw steamer, registered 1,000 tons ; while her nominal steam-power is to be 1000, which is, of course, capable of being increased to 2,000 horse power. The Ripon is intended for the public steamer of such size and power has been built for some time past. Her length, over the paddle-boxes, is 300 ft. ; breadth, 40 ft. 6 in. ; depth, 45 ft., her depth 25½ ft., and her register 3791 tons. Messrs. Ravenhill, Salkeld, and Co., of the Blackwall Ironworks, have built the Royal Mail Steam-packet Company. She, like the Napoleon, is a remarkably fine vessel, and is intended for the Transatlantic service, between Southampton and New York, number, 2500 tons. Her length over all is 310 ft., with a breadth for tonnage of 40 ft., and for paddle-boxes of 75 ft. Her depth is 31 ft. 6 in. She is of 1000 horse nominal, and capable of working to at least 3000. Both launches were successfully performed on Saturday.

LAW AND POLICE.—An appeal case of some interest is being heard before the Lord Chief Baron. The defendant, Grigorio Mogni, is the agent of the French Submarine Telegraph Company, to provide a ship to lay down the wire between Cape Grisnez and the English coast in the Mediterranean. The ship was ready at the time appointed, but the defendant refused to allow her to start, on the ground that the sum of £1000 claimed for the expense to which he had been put. The jury awarded the plaintiff damages by the amount claimed. The Lord Chief Baron thought that the jury entered for the defendant, as the plaintiff had not acted under a bond for the performance of the contract. The jury, after a short consultation, found for the plaintiff, damages £1000.

Gregorio Mogni, the Italian who secures himself of being the man who shot Mr. Richard Hutchinson, at Bayswater, on the morning of Boxing Night, was stated in our last impression, was brought up for examination at Marylebone Police-court, on Thursday week. The prisoner, on being asked to a statement made by the prisoner that Petitioner (or Pellesi), who has under evidence of having been in the habit of frequenting the house of the deceased man, but that he (Mogni) had done the deed. Gregorio Mogni states that he charged the prisoner with the murder, and that he (Mogni) was arrested by a quarrel between the English and Italians, that he drew his knife and killed Barrington. Mogni was then fined £5 and bound over to keep the peace. On Saturday the case was again heard before Mr. D'Eyncourt. The magistrate, after hearing the evidence, committed the prisoner for trial on the charge, and the prisoner said Mogni, or rather those who are attempting to save Pellesi, will be disappointed. Mogni was then removed in custody. Another examination was resumed, when Mr. Bodkin, on the part of the prosecution, stated that he might present the same appearance as he did on the night of the murder. The evidence of Mogni, who was then called, was to the effect that when the prisoner stabbed, swore distinctly that he pulled Pellesi off the murdered man, Hutchinson, and that Pellesi had not done the deed. The prisoner committed Gregorio Mogni for murder, observing that he would not commence on the circumstances of the case. Mogni was then removed, and the execution of Serafino Pellesi on has been postponed until Wednesday, the 23rd inst.

The charge of conspiracy to defraud the insurance offices which was brought against the proprietors of the Argyll Rooms, Regent-street, was investigated by their employers, Messrs. Alfred and John George Barry, who were on Thursday week charged with having, on the night of the destruction of the premises by fire, conspired to defraud the Sun Fire-office. The principal piece of evidence was given by Mr. Baxter, who had a quantity of jute stored in their cellars. The jury found a verdict of guilty against the defendants, and refused bail.

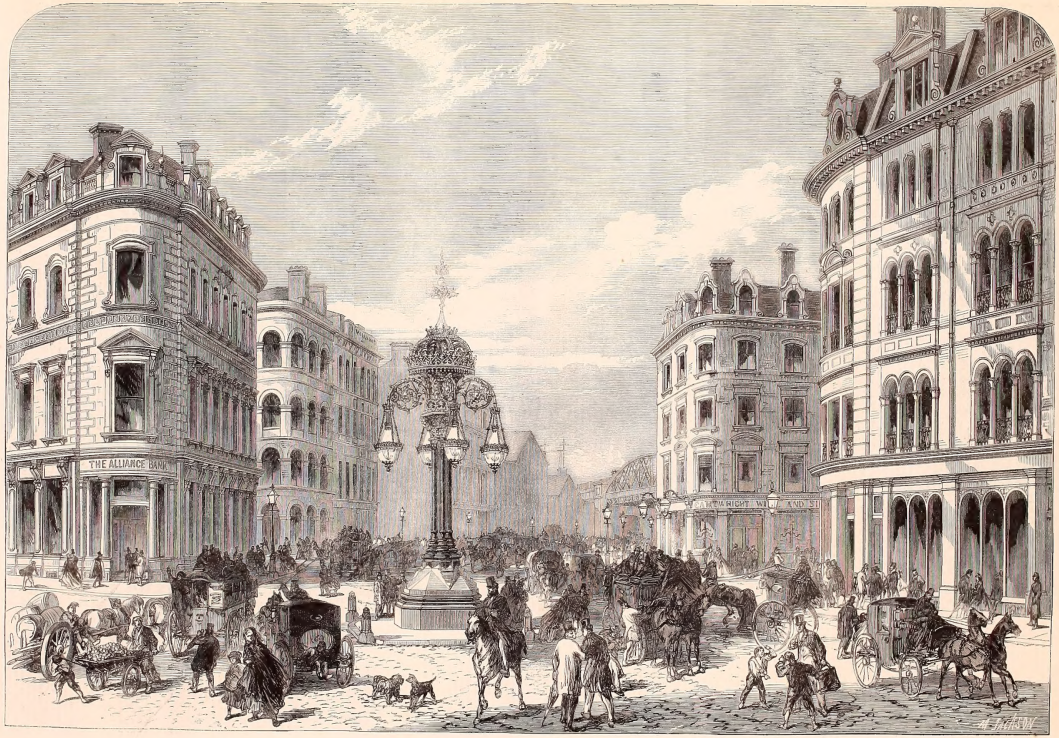
In the Court of Queen's Bench, yesterday week, the Morning Post was cast in an action for libel, and was awarded to pay £1000 damages to the plaintiff, Mr. Woodgate, of Dublin. The libel was published in reference to proceedings during the Fignent estates in Ireland. The last Earl of Egmont left the estate to his daughter, Viscountess Perceval, for life, or during her husband's life, and it was for some comments on the conduct of the plaintiff, who was solicitor to the trustees, that the libel was published in the Morning Post. The case occupied the greater part of the day.

A case of breach of promise of marriage was tried on Saturday, in the Court of Queen's Bench, before Mr. Justice Crompton and a special jury, in which Miss Emily Caroline Hall sued Mr. Thomas Hall, of Bedford, for damages for not having married her, according to promise. Mr. Lee appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Bovill for the defendant. The latter, in his opening address to the jury, said that the plaintiff had made imputations on the plaintiff's character. These imputations, it was said, had been made by the defendant, but they were entirely false, and the plaintiff's character was entirely unfounded. The damages were laid at £10,000, and the jury gave £2,000.

Paul Bedford's bankruptcy has been annulled, an arrangement having been entered into with his creditors.

At the Mansion House, on Wednesday, David Roberts, who described himself as a gentleman, was charged with having in his possession a quantity of jewellery, the property of Mr. Walker, the jeweller, of Cornhill, and plundered that gentleman of property to the value of £5000 or £6000. Some of the stolen property was found on him. After some witnesses had been examined he was remanded.

The inquest on the persons killed by the fall of the floor of the Roman Catholic school at Westminster was concluded yesterday week. A witness deposed that the broken beam, which caused the mischief, was faulty timber, and not, as the inspector for the district stated, American timber. The jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death."



Victor Townley, who was found guilty of the murder of Miss Goodwin, near Derby, and sentenced to be hanged, escaped the gallows, it will be remembered, being reprieved on the night of medical men who visited him in the condemned cell. Townley was removed from Derby Gaol to the convict establishment in Pentonville Prison, and on Sunday morning last, as he was returning from the chapel, he killed himself by jump up over the staircase railings.

EXHIBITION OF PICTURES AND DRAWINGS OF THE LATE D. ROBERTS, R.A.

AN exhibition of the pictures, drawings, sketches, and etchings found in the studio of the late David Roberts after his death, was opened, appropriately enough, in the galleries of the Architectural Institute, Conduit-street, on Thursday last, and will remain open till April, after which the great bulk of the collection will be sold at Christie's. Any perusal of the exhibition will be divided between the two artistic funds in which the deceased took so much interest. The collection comprises upwards of 300 pictures and studies in oil, and 800 drawings and sketches in water colours. Scarcely any of the latter can be considered more than memoranda ; they want rather be called "finished sketches." The artist is known to have employed many months together in his studio in strengthening and signing his slighter water-colour work, especially his Eastern subjects, out of which it is known that more than one, large in size and full of detail, was painted in a few days. Of this class of his vast collection we do not recommending that none of its multifarious items had been previously exhibited. Some of the finest drawings published by the gallery family ; when, too, we call to mind the long series of elaborate pictures and scene-paintings executed by the founder of the dynasty, and the first of architectural painters (though, it is true, the numerous lithographs published by Mr. Louis Haghe were contributed to by the same hand), we readily know which is the greater, our admiration of the skill and facility of the artist or our astonishment at the marvellous industry of the man. To give anything approaching an adequate impression of the variety of subject represented would be impossible within the space we have at command. We can only say that they range over great part of Europe, Asia, and Syria ; that they comprise the temples and tombs, obelisks and halls, colonnades and caves, pyramids and sphinxes of Egypt ; the mosques, minarets, and bazaars of Cairo ; the "holy" places, palaces, and ruins of Jerusalem ; Baalbec and Damascus ; and other ruins of Syria, with innumerable sites of sacred interest throughout Palestine. Classical remains, the modern churches, campanili, palaces, and basilicas of Italy ; the stupendous Cathedrals of Belgium and Germany, with its numerous spectacles ; the glories of Milan's cathedral, and the glosses of St. Ouen's at Rouen ; the more profuse variety and the representations of the ecclesiastical, castellated, public and municipal edifices of parts of Switzerland, France, and the Netherlands. The architecture, both Gothic and Moorish, of Spain and Morocco was the subject of special study. Another large set of drawings, together with a number of those published already of mountain scenery, bear witness to the painter's attachment to his native Scotland. Lastly, there are numerous studies of scenes and buildings in England, sacred and secular, in England, and particularly in this great metropolis. Especial and loving attention was bestowed on the unfinished series of "St. Paul's, from Ludgate-hill," upon which the artist worked on the day he was taken ill. Of the more female companions portraits of his pictures, which he kept throughout his life. The oil pictures now exhibited are of the same class as those in which we see the most familiar from his pencil. One remarkable exception, however, is a large scene entitled "The Destruction," which is a most imaginary restoration of the ancient port of Rhodes, with the mighty Colossus striding below the entrance, and ships of all sizes and nations ; may be derived the most art-instruction are the unfinished sketches in oil, because they disclose the principles upon which the painter worked. These sketches are, for the most part, in the form of brown-holland tones, and show the primary sun only at producing that broad and effective chiaroscuro which the completed picture must conceal. The drawings reveal, however light the key, the same permanent desire to secure the most powerful contrasts of light and of events among those of earlier date, to the exclusion of essentially characteristic detail. The most rich examples, however, that in Roberts's later works his strong feeling for artistic composition, and, probably, lastly confidence in the power of his memory to fill in minutes of detail, and into an arrangement, arbitrary and often inaccurate, which detract from their value as topographical records, and do not satisfy those who have learnt to shape their requirements upon photography and the newer school of architectural art. Of figure-drawing it is well known that the painter was accustomed to employ models rather than the rudiments, as some studies of figures here prove, not to speak of the infinity sketches in the possession of Mr. Louis Haghe. The sketches, after all abstracted, David Roberts remains unquestionably the foremost painter of architecture in this country ; one of the most precise masters of breadth and pictorial effect, scarcely surpassed for technical power and dexterity ; and a bright example of honest, brave, and successful industry.

SOUTHWARK-STREET, BOROUGH.

THE new street lately opened by the Metropolitan Board of Works, from near the London and Brighton railway station to that of London, Chatham, and Dover lines on the Surrey side of Blackfriars Bridge, is now commencing to be built upon, and presents already a patch of ground on each side being already for some distance covered with the workmen's scaffoldings of fair architectural proportions. The east end of Southwark-street, as it is called, running into the Borough-street with a bold curve, which brings it nearly opposite the Mitre-tavern, in Borough, is a handsome pile of brickwork, of cast iron, designed by Mr. Bazalgette, engineer to the Metropolitan Board, and built by Mr. Myers, Lambeth, the architect to the Surrey Sewers Commission. We give an illustration of this work, which consists of two handsome bays, each of which, surmounted by a ventilating shaft and lamps, in cast iron, about 27 ft. high, with the Board's monogram, surmounted by a dragon, and affording a certain degree of protection to the street crossing. The cost of the whole of the ornamental work will be about £1000, the other objects in the View which we have engraved require little explanation. The new street has been laid out with a width of 60 ft. from the Borough, with store-rooms and chambers overhead, fronting the High-street, and the Borough Market, with its spacious dome of glass and iron, close against their rear. On the left hand of the View is a detached block of buildings occupying the site of the Mitre Tavern, the Alhambra Music Hall at the east end of this block and the London and County Bank at the other. Beyond, looking eastward, is the commencement of the new Cathedral of the View, are several groups of warehouses, of an imposing size and style of architecture, and the Clarence Dining-room Tavern, which spans the street with a bridge supported by two iron arches, or bows, springing high above the roof. On the right hand are a large lodge building far more picturesque than the straight, monotonous lines of the lodges generally erected by the side of the entrance to other Hay Exchange and adjacent warehouses belonging to the hop trade will be in Southwark-street, on the left hand, next to the corner. Solid lodging-houses, erected by "The Industrial Dwellings Society," have been laid out in front of the traffic of Southwark-street, especially in drays and waggons for the carriage of merchandise, is already very important. It will never be liable to those interruptions which so often take place in the narrow streets of the City, where the leaking up of the road to adjust the sewerage or the gas and water pipes; for beneath the surface of Southwark-street there is a tunnel, or subway, through which the workmen employed in these repairs can have access to every part of the said works and communications without the hollow shafts of the lamp-standards at each end of the street, with a sufficient number of intermediate openings, over the centre of this subterranean passage. Upon the whole, Southwark-street is one of the greatest improvements effected in London, and the spirit of improvement has been so busy during the last five or six years. With the two railway bridges which it spans, the Thames at no great distance ; and its own gigantic bridge connecting the heart of the City with the south-western and south-eastern districts and the country beyond, there is no place which exhibits more striking proof of the huge powers of enterprise, capital, and skill applied to useful works of this description. At the same time, while modern ingenuity has wrought such changes, we may be permitted to recollect the most interesting local associations of Southwark-street in connection with the English literature and history of past ages. At one end of this street, at No. 72, High-street, is the Talbot Inn, formerly called the Tabard, where Geoffrey Chaucer met the nine-and-twenty pilgrims on the eve of their journey to Canterbury ; and at the other end of Southwark-street, or within a few yards of it, is the site of the Globe Theatre, Bankside, which Shakspeare kept in the zenith of his fame, and which was burnt down in 1613.

"COURTESY: SIR TRISTRAM HARPING TO LA BELLE ISOUDE."

In the Numbers of this Journal for Oct. 22 and Nov. 19, of last year, we gave a minute description and critical estimate of the noble frescoes, in the Queen's Robing Room, upon which the late Mr. Dyce, R.A., was so long engaged. An Engraving of the principal fresco, the elaborate composition representing the "Admission of Sir Tristram to the Fellowship of the Round Table," was given with the first portion of our notice of the whole series. In submitting another Engraving from one of the same set of works, it will hardly be deemed necessary that we should repeat those general observations, applying to the frescoes collectively, which have so recently been made. It may, however, be not altogether needless to recall from the romances of the "Mort d'Arthur" such particulars as are necessary to understand rightly the incident or situation here depicted, and its signification as illustrating one of the virtues of knighthood.

It will, then, be remembered that Sir Tristram* (for here in this, one of the smallest of the frescoes, as he is also in the largest, alreadly engraved) is represented not only as very nearly, if not quite, the equal of Sir Launcelot of the Lake in gentleness and generosity as well as prowess, but also as the most accomplished of all the Knights of the Round Table in music and in field sports generally. It is necessary to mention this because we have to bear in mind that the word "courtesy" formerly had a more comprehensive meaning. "I find," says the scholarly painter in one of his letters to the Fine-Art Commissioners, "the chivalric idea of courtesy to be a complex one, including in it, besides courtesy of speech and demeanour, the virtues of mercy and generosity, and social accomplishments, such as skill in music, in games, and field sports." These accomplishments Sir Tristram is represented as having acquired in France, where he was sent at an early age, and where for seven years he learned the "language, and the horture and deeds of arms," and to be "an harper passing all other so that there was none such called in no country." This knight is, therefore, properly taken as the very impersonation of "Courtesy."

But the incident selected, showing, as it does, at once the power of minstrelsy and love, is likewise peculiarly fitted to a series of chivalric designs; for, although the attachment of these two lovers continued after La Belle Isoude was married to King Marke, and thus formed a scandal of the Arthurian romances similar to that of the liaison between Sir Launcelot and Queen Guinevere, yet here their love is in its first innocent flower. The events which brought the pair together as the artist places them before us may be very shortly narrated. Before, almost, Sir Tristram had arrived at manhood he left France and went to the Court of his uncle, King Marke of Cornewaile, in order to fight with Sir Marhaus, the brother and champion of King Angwish of Ireland; this Sir Marhaus, who was one of "the famoosest knights of the world," having arrived in Cornewaile with hostile intent to enforce payment of tribute to the Irish King.

* Sir Tristram—so named according to the later romancers, by his mother from his "sorrowful" birth; his mother died from giving him untimely birth in a forest, whither she had gone to seek her missing husband, King Meliodas. He was called Sir Tristram de Lyonse, meaning, "a knight that was born sorrowful by Bretteyne;" but some have thought it to have been a district of Cornwall, or named, which is said now to be buried under the sea, Marie de Fraunce, in the "Lai de Chievrefeulle," makes him a native of South Wales.

En Kokl-Walas li fu nez.

In the earlier legends the name is Tryston, which signifies a "proclaimer," or "herald of mysteries," and, if the views of somecommentators are adopted, all circumstances connected with him admit of an esoteric meaning. Tristis") and others he was the symbolic introducer and representative of certain novelties in the Bardic system connected with the worship of the sun, who is figured in Isoude (in Welsh, Essylt), which name signifies "a specimen," or "example," and is connected with Isis, Ishtar, Astarte, Easter, March—i.e., a horse (the King Marke of the Mort d'Arthur); and Hippa, the mare, in one of the most ancient goddesses of the Gentile world. By the Bards Tystan is termed "one of the "mighty swineherds," that is, keeper of the animals sacred to Ceres.

"COURTESY: SIR TRISTRAM HARPING TO LA BELLE ISOUDE," A FRESCO BY THE LATE W. DYCE, R.A., IN THE QUEEN'S ROBING-ROOM OF THE PALACE OF WESTMINSTER.

In the tremendous and protracted encounter with this much-dreaded Irish Knight of the Round Table, Sir Tristram, though he mentally wounded his adversary, himself received a dreadful hurt, which, as it was found to have been inflicted by a poisoned weapon, could, as a "full-wise lady" affirmed, be healed, if at all, only in the country the venom came from. Sir Tristram betook himself, therefore, to Ireland; and no sooner had he arrived than his harping in bed a merry lay—"such a one had they never heard in Ireland afore that time"—was the occasion of his being conveyed before that very King Angwish, whose brother and champion he had slain, and whom, therefore, he had so much reason to fear. However, by the very easy expedient of transposing the two syllables of his name, Sir Tristram contrived to escape suspicion, and the good King, "for great favour, made Sir Tramtrist (as he was now called) to be put in his daughter's ward and keeping, because she was a noble surgeon." This lady, who was no other than La Belle Isoude—so named because "she was at that time the fairest lady of the world"—"searched" and quickly healed his wound; "and therefore," says the romance, Tristrictis cast great love to La Belle Isoude, and there Sir Tramtrist learned her to harpe, and she began to have a great fantasie unto Sir Tramtrist." The mutual passion of which we here see the blameless commencement was destined, however, to have a guilty course and a fatal termination. When, years later, Sir Tristram was again harping to his old mistress, her husband, coming upon him from behind, stabbed him to the heart.

Little further need be added by way of direct description, Sir Tristram, in an amber-coloured cloak and tight red hose, and La Belle Isoude, in a blue robe and pink mantle, stand under an arch communicating with a terrace of the Royal "castle." Resting his ivory harp on his thigh, and while accompanying thereon his lay of love, the young knight gazes with the exquisite courtesy as well as the passionate earnestness of a true lover into the fair face of his pupil. She stands with downcast eyes, conscious of the love-fraught glances directed towards her, and betraying the secret of her love for the musician, as well as mere admiration of his skill, by her blushing confusion and bowed head (of the warm praises of the singer), by a quiver that seems to play about her lips and chin, by the hand placed across her bosom deprecatingly, or to check its hearing; and by her leaning for support on the harp at her side. The "motif" of the figure seem to remind of some of the representations of the Virgin by the early Italian painters—a school to which Dyce manifestly studied. An attendant damsel, though feigning to turn away, has evidently an instinctive consciousness of the state of her mistress's feelings. Under the oak in the middle distance a huntsman and falcon-bearer are seen conversing—an allusion, of course, to Sir Tristram's skill in field sports.* The background bears witness to Dyce's versatile powers in architecture, decoration, and landscape, as well as in figures and draperies. For that breadth and dignified simplicity which result from the presence in exact balance of those artistic qualities proper to monumental art, this fresco is fully as remarkable in any of its companions. Altogether, it may be instanced as one of the most perfect examples of what a mural painting of limited scale should be which this country has hitherto produced.

* "Sir Tristram was at that time," says the "Mort d'Arthur," "called the best chaser of the world and the noblest blower of an horne of all manner of measures. For, as bookes report, of Sir Tristram was first ordained the termes of venery and of hunting, and the sises and measures of blowing of a horne. And of him we had first all the terme of hawking; and of which sorte beasts of chace, and beasts of venery, and which were vermins, and all the blasts that long to all manner of games. First to the uncoupeing, to the seeking, to the rechase, to the flight, to the deadth, and to the strok, and many other blasts and termes, that all gentlemen have cause to know, to the worst's end, to praise Sir Tristram and to pray for his sonle." In another place reference is made to a "booke of Sir Tristram," on venery, hawking, and hunting, and there was a book of authority on such matters which went under that name. But "Tristram," says it does not appear that he had really any connection with our horn. The well-known "Duke of St. Albans" is supposed to represent this "Booked Sir Tristram." See "Sir Tristram," edited by Sir Walter Scott.

The Africain states that a fine mosaic pavement has been discovered by some workmen engaged in digging for the foundation of a house near Constantina (Algeria). This specimen of Roman art presents figures of numerous animals, among which are tigers, elephants, and dromedaries.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

A PROTEST against the union of Ireland with Great Britain is a standing piece of political capital with a certain class of Irishmen. They are always denying that any benefit has by any possibility accrued to their country by the change, while they are prepared with a number of actual grievances, which, if shadowy to most other people, appear to be very palpable to them. One does not remember that one ever heard Englishmen stating any particular advantage accruing to their part of the kingdom by the political, and in a great measure social, closeness of connection which was effected in the beginning of the century; but just at present we venture to suggest that a claim to their gratitude has been created by the conduct of certain Irish legislators. If the condition of the Parliamentary Session, so far as it has gone, and so far as it promises, has not absolutely tended to bring our constitutional institutions into contempt, it is owing to the labours—unwearied, pertinacious, and cognate in their character—of the Earl of Leitrim in the Lords and Mr. Vincent Scully in the Commons. But for them it would have been impossible to prolong the sittings of either House beyond a time which would have proved at once the paucity of business and the tenuity of the energies of members. Everyone knows that for weeks and weeks after the commencement of the Session the House of Lords is unable even to keep up that appearance of a party in a parlour so late as seven o'clock, which is their normal course of proceeding; but here is an indefatigable Irish Peer, who possesses in perfection the faculty of talking on his legs for any given number of hours, always on the smallest and most minute local subjects, and who invariably suggests the idea that, though he is speaking, he is not performing the usually simultaneous operation of thinking; who has contrived, almost every night since Tuesday week, to occupy the Lords for two mortal hours on the same subject. A glance at the notice-paper of the Upper House day by day has shown a formidable mass of matter, which, on examination, turns out to be a demand for a return of something equivalent to the walks abroad on no business of a police constable in a remote district in Ireland. These papers have been, for what reason one cannot exactly say, refused night after night, and were regularly asked for again, until Lord Granville, tired out, gave them in a modified form; and so, perhaps, the sittings of the Lords, which have been so kindly preserved from apparent, though not from real, nonentity, will fall back into the acts of meeting and adjourning.

Well, then there is Mr. Scully in the other House. On the first night of the Session, and every evening since, he has, by his own unaided—we will not say efforts, for that would be an inappropriate word, but by his spontaneity of talk—enabled the Commons to show so much more decently, by an hour and a half or so, than they otherwise would, in the eyes of that public which pants for sensation debates, and, however unconsciously, believes that Parliamentary intelligence is intended for their amusement day by day, ranking in that respect sometimes above, but generally rather below, the chronicles of the police courts. Although Mr. Scully has not been so successful, judging from the light which twinkles in his eye when he refers to him, as he has wished in bringing out Sir Robert Peel's peculiarities, not to say eccentricities, of idea and speech, yet he has proved that he himself has by no means lost that power of speaking for any length of time on any subject which he displayed on that famous occasion when, in order to defeat by delay a motion against Maynooth, he spoke from half-past twelve to a quarter to six on a Wednesday, and then stated that, having made those few preliminary observations, he would on a future day begin to argue the question involved. Be it said, however, that he is this year very good-humoured, there being only so much bitterness in his sarcasms as to give them reasonable pungency. This is the case for the gratitude of the lovers of Parliamentary proceedings to two Irishmen (who, perhaps, would prefer a Legislature sitting in College-green) which we proposed above, and which, we think, has been made out.

But, in common justice, it should be recorded that at least one English member has done his best to get up an exciting discussion, and that on a very ticklish international question. Amidst the desolation of the first Friday of the as yet ungalvanised Session, Sir John Walsh stood up—with a gallant disregard of adverse circumstances, as evidenced in the condition of the House—and made an oration, couched in the language and illustrated by the style of oratory which tradition has preserved as characterising the period when "all the talents" flourished in Parliament, and of which the late Marquis of Lansdowne was, if not the ultimate—Sir John Walsh, happily still surviving—the penultimate professor. It is by no means intended to insinuate that Sir John imbibed his rhetorical influences direct from the fountain heads of the school to which he belongs; but it is manifest that his early studies of declamation were confined to that class of oration which Dr. Johnson used to compose and father on the first Pitt, and that he has never escaped from the modelling he received at the most impressionable of ages, when he, after the usual struggles, was able to recite, with the due emphasis and effect applicable to it, the famous speech which begins with "My name is Norval!" Now, this sounding mode of speaking gathers an additional tone of oddness, bordering on the absurd, when it is used in the presence of a dozen or so of listless members who are only waiting in their places because it is not yet their dinner-time; so Sir John Walsh's warlike speech fell more flat than even his deliverances of political opinion usually do; it was palpable that he had received no mot d'ordre from the leader of the Opposition, who appears to have temporarily abnegated his functions and to show singularly free from that concentration of countenance which it is his manner to assume when Mr. Disraeli means to indicate that he is acting as chief; in fact, when he assumes, metaphysically speaking, his war-paint. Now, Sir John Walsh undertaking on his own responsibility to declare war against the United States was, to put it mildly, in decidedly a false position; and so Lord Palmerston, who spoke with physical vigour and with singular directness and distinctness of statement and argument, disposed of the motion with a completeness and with a judicious appeal to the House, which brought out, faint as they were from the fewness of the executants, the only cheers of any consequence which have been uttered in the house up to the present time.

Nobody expected much action, immediate or remote, on the part of the Government, even before the delivery of the Queen's Speech; but, somehow, there was an impression that private members would be busy with motions, and set up themselves in loquacity, with a view to the creation of Parliamentary merit which would tell in their favour at the coming general election. But even this has not been the case, and there has been no development of single-handed patriotism, as that virtue can be exhibited in the making of speeches in the house. Perhaps the most prominent bid of this kind has come from Mr. Cox, who, despite adverse influences, it is believed, means to contest Finsbury again. He has been attempting to establish an easement in a recent Act of Parliament which shuts up public-houses at reasonable hours of the night, by means of exceptional provisions in favour of certain respectable classes of operatives, who, in order to minister to the positive sustenance of the inhabitants of the metropolis, have to begin their labours for one day soon after the midnight of that preceding. It is not a bad move on the part of Mr. Cox, who professes to be a popular member in a confined, because practical, rather than in what may be called a comprehensive or abstract, sense. It may be all very well for members to laugh at the way in which Mr. Cox delivers himself in the house; but it is hardly a question whether he is not a very good member for such a constituency as that of Finsbury. The electors may fancy that they are exhibiting themselves in fine character by preferring some dilettante politician, who, however grandly he may show on a platform as a disquisitionist on great and broad principles, is not in the least likely to jump to a position in the house corresponding to the height of his philosophical opinions as applicable to Parliamentary government. A man who understands the wants of a class constituency like Finsbury, and is able to work them out quietly in legislation, is the best member for that borough; and the electors know, or ought to know, whether Mr. Cox fulfils this idea.

There are some of the chapters in "Tristram Shandy" which consist only of the numerals indicating their sequence, and a number of asterisks. Perhaps, if one were to adopt some such mode of filling a column devoted to Parliamentary delineation it might be, besides a novelty, the best mode of illustrating the nature of recent legislative proceedings.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY, FEB. 10.

THE ADDRESS.—Lord SIDNEY (the Lord Chamberlain) read her Majesty's answer to their Lordships' Address, as follows:—"I thank you sincerely for your loyal and dutiful Address. It is satisfactory to me to be assured that the various measures which shall be submitted to you for the amendment of the law will receive your careful consideration; and it will be always my earnest endeavour to co-operate with you in promoting the happiness and welfare of my people."

There was no other business transacted deserving of notice.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY, FEB. 10.

Mr. Baines fixed Tuesday, the 21st of February, for his motion for leave to bring in his bill for the extension of the franchise in England and Wales.

Sir G. Grey, in reply to Mr. Butler, said that a commission was appointed to inquire into the arrangements under which gunpowder-magazines were established, with the view to better security. Whatever practical improvements might be suggested would no doubt be carried out.

Sir G. Grey, in reply to Mr. H. Lewis, said he thought that the frequent recurrence of fires at theatres and other places of public amusement was a subject of very great importance, and deserving of careful consideration. With regard to theatres, the Lord Chamberlain had already large authority in granting licences; and there could be little doubt that if all due precaution were not taken against fire, and every possible means of egress provided, the neccessary sanction would be withheld. As to the music halls, they were licensed by the justices, and he apprehended they would be influenced by the same rules.

Mr. Cardwell, in reply to Mr. Moore, stated that it was the intention of her Majesty's Government to discontinue the transportation of criminals to Australia.

Mr. Cardwell, in reply to Mr. Peacock, said that he had not received any official information that Judge Coursal in Canada had been dismissed.

The Attorney-General obtained leave to bring in a bill to supply means towards defraying the expenses of providing courts of justice and the various offices belonging thereto. The site of the proposed building would be west of Chancery-lane, from Bell-yard to Clement's-lane. Its cost and that for the construction of the building would be about £1,500,000.

The Attorney-General also obtained leave to bring in a bill to alter the constitution and amend the practice and course of proceeding in the High Court of Chancery in Ireland.

Mr. Cowper obtained leave to introduce a bill to enable the Commissioners of her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings to acquire a site for the erection and concentration of courts of justice and of the various offices belonging to the same.

THE CONVENTION RESPECTING THE CANADIAN LAKES.—Sir J. WALSH, pursuant to notice, asked for information relative to the circumstances which had led to the notice given by the Government of the United States of North America to terminate the convention under which England and the United States mutually engaged not to fit out naval armaments upon the Canadian lakes, also respecting the abrogation of the treaty of commerce between the provinces of British North America and the United States, and moved for all papers and correspondence connected with these subjects.—Lord PALMERSTON said he did not intend to go into any explanations in reference to the relations of this country with the United States, because he did not think that such a discussion, at the present time, would be productive of any good effect. He did not, however, consider, looking at all the circumstances of the matter, that the notice to terminate the convention could be construed into an exhibition of hostile feeling towards this country. Certain things had taken place of which the United States' Government had reason to complain; and if they could by any means protect the property of their citizens they were surely justified in so doing. With regard to the Reciprocity Treaty, no official notice could be given to terminate it until the 15th of March, when the fixed period of ten years would have elapsed.

The House then went into Committee.

BANKS OF ISSUE.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER moved that it was "expedient to make provision for empowering country banks of issue to obtain relief, from certain restrictions upon payment from time to time of a certain charge in respect thereof." Also that "any compensation payable by the Bank of England to any such privileged bank for the determination of its right to issue notes should be repaid out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of England and Ireland." The resolutions were agreed to.

THE BANK OF IRELAND (CONSOLIDATED FUND).—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER moved "That the remuneration to the Corporation for the management of the public debt in Ireland be paid out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom from and after April 6, 1865." This proposition was also agreed to.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

On the motion of Lord Houghton, a return was ordered of the number of unions or parishes that have availed themselves of the Act of July, 1864, enabling them to receive from the Metropolitan Board of Works the sums of money expended in the relief of the casual poor, and of the unions where the guardians have provided new wards or other places of reception for this class of poor.

The Earl of Longford said that during the present year 15,000 persons would be displaced from their dwellings by railway and other schemes. The Westminster Improvement Bill, of which notice had been given, would displace about 3500 persons, and he thought something ought to be done to remedy the evil consequences.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

A new writ was ordered to issue for an election of a member for the county of Tipperary, in the room of The O'Donoghue, resigned.

Mr. Sheridan gave notice of a motion for the reduction of the duty on fire insurances.

Mr. D. Griffith gave notice of a new standing order, by which the fees paid to Parliamentary counsel should be regulated by the same rules as prevailed in the common law courts.

Sir C. Wood, in answer to Sir H. Cairns, said that no Act had been passed in India enabling judges to enforce performance of personal contracts by sentences of imprisonment. Some regulation to that effect was contained in the New Civil Procedure Code, but that code would not come into operation until it had been sent home for approval.

The Attorney-General, in answer to Mr. C. Forster, said that a bill to alter the law of forfeiture on conviction for felony was in preparation.

Mr. Tite, in answer to Viscount Enfield, stated that the main drainage of the metropolis was nearly completed; on the Surrey side completely. On the Middlesex side the high-level and the middle-level sewers were entirely finished, and the only works which remained incomplete were those connected with the Thames embankment. The works would come generally into operation by the 29th of March. The total cost would be about £4,000,000.

Sir G. Grey, in answer to Mr. Lawson, said that he had given no directions for staying the execution of the Italian for the murder on Saffron-hill. He had received a memorial from the Italian Minister stating the new circumstances which had arisen, which was now in the hands of the Judge who presided at the trial.

Mr. Hadfield moved the second reading of the Qualification for Offices Abolition Bill, which dispenses with certain declarations which are required to be taken by all persons accepting offices, which he proposed to refer to a Select Committee, which was agreed to.

Sir G. Grey moved for leave to bring in a bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to prisons, the object of which is, in the first place, to codify the existing acts that regulated prisons in regard to structure and maintenance, which were numerous, and had not been consolidated for forty-two years. Amendments are to be introduced into regulations affecting prisoners, mainly on the plan proposed by the bill which was introduced last year. It was stated that after the second reading the bill would be referred to a Select Committee. A discussion, principally as to whether the gaol of Abingdon should continue to exist or not, ensued, after which leave was given.

Sir R. Peel obtained leave to bring in a bill to extend the power of granting licenses to deal in game to police magistrates in Dublin; and another to protect inventions and designs exhibited in the Dublin International Exhibition for the present year.

Sir H. Cairns obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the Endowment and Augmentation of Small Benefices (Ireland) Act, 1860.

Mr. Ayrton obtained leave to bring in a bill to facilitate the raising of money by debentures on the security of land.

The report of the formal resolution that supply be granted to her Majesty was brought up and received.

The report of the resolution respecting banks of issue was brought up and received, and a bill founded thereon was subsequently brought in and read a first time.

The report of the resolution on the Bank of Ireland (Consolidated Fund) was also brought up and received, and a bill founded thereon was subsequently brought in and read a first time.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The Lord Chancellor made a statement of the results of the recent Act for the Augmentation of Small Church Livings in his patronage. Altogether sixty-three had been sold for £113,129, and of this £10,520 was available for disposal for the purposes of the statute. He had appropriated £2400 to augment the stipends of eight small livings, and £500 to the re-erection of parsonages, and had promised, conditionally, £5600, leaving a balance of £2020.

The Earl of Leitrim moved for a number of returns and correspondence relative to the working of the police force in Ireland. After some discussion the motion was understood to be agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

A new writ was ordered for the election of a member for Lancaster, in the room of Mr. Gregson, deceased.

Mr. A. Smith gave notice of a motion for a Select Committee to inquire into the offices of the Board of Works and the Woods and Forests.

Mr. Gladstone, in reply to questions from Mr. Roebuck and Mr. V. Scully, said the Government had no intention of bringing in a bill this Session for the revision of the tariffs or for the purchase of any of the railways of the United Kingdom, under the Act of 1844. All they proposed to do, at present, was to issue a Commission of Inquiry with a view "to bring the facts and all the information bearing on the question in a state to be thoroughly available for Parliament and the public at large."

Mr. Villiers, in answer to Mr. Long, said that the Committee on the Poor Laws having concluded its inquiry on the question of poor-law medical officers, it was not proposed to reappoint it.

Mr. Cardwell, in answer to Mr. A. Mills, said it was intended immediately to bring in a bill to annex British Kaffraria to the colony of the Cape of Good Hope.

Lord Palmerston, in answer to Mr. A. Smith, having expressed his regret at the resignation of Mr. Gilpin on account of ill-health, said that it was intended to fill up the vacant office of Parliamentary secretary to the Poor-Law Board.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, in answer to Mr. W. E. Forster, said that by the sixth section of the Annuities and Life Assurance Act of last Session it was provided that the tables and rules, having been framed and approved by the Treasury, were to be laid before Parliament for thirty days previous to coming into operation. The necessary documents were laid on the table on Friday last, and in thirty days from that date the Act would come into operation.

Mr. Cox obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the Public-house Act (1864) Amendment Act. He urged that while the Act was valuable in putting an end to acknowledged evil in a particular part of London, it worked great hardship on industrious classes of persons like those employed in Covent-garden and the Cattle Market, whose business began at two and three o'clock in the morning, and who were unable to obtain necessary refreshment. He proposed to add a clause to the Act enabling refreshment-house keepers, under special circumstances, to obtain licenses to open their houses at hours convenient for their peculiar business.

Sir F. Kelly obtained leave, after a brief debate, to bring in a bill for the further amendment of the law of evidence and of the practice in certain courts of justice, the object of which is to allow parties to suits for dissolution of marriage in the Divorce Court for adultery, and parties in criminal cases of misdemeanour, to be competent though not compulsory witnesses. In criminal cases at the Central Criminal Court and the assizes provision was made for trying them by special juries.

Mr. Denman obtained leave to bring in a bill for the amendment of the practice and procedure in courts of criminal jurisdiction, the object of which is to enable counsel to sum up the evidence in criminal cases, and generally to assimilate the procedure in such cases to that in civil cases.

Sir C. O'Loghlen obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the Election Petitions Act (1848) in certain particulars.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The Land Debentures Bill and the Land Debentures (Ireland) Bill were read a second time and referred to a Select Committee.

Leave was given Mr. E. Craufurd to bring in a bill to allow affirmations or declarations to be made instead of oaths in all civil and criminal proceedings.

MORTGAGE DEBENTURES.—The second reading of the Mortgage Debentures Bill was moved by Lord NAAS, who observed that the measure had come down backed by the recommendation of a Select Committee of the House of Lords, of which the Earl of Derby, the Lord Chancellor, and Earl Granville were members. Its object was to promote an extension of land credit throughout the country similar to that which prevailed in Prussia, with this difference, that the security would be far greater. The bill was not promoted by any particular company, but would empower all properly-established corporations, if so minded, to issue mortgage debentures secured on land, with a sufficient margin to secure the borrower, and the additional guarantee of the paid-up and subscribed capital of such companies.—Sir G. GREY assented to the second reading, on the understanding that the bill should be referred to a Select Committee, and that when it came back the House should not be regarded as pledged to support its principle.—After some remarks by Mr. Henley, Mr. Scully, and a few words from Mr. Ayrton, the bill was read a second time and referred to a Select Committee.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

POOR RATES.—Lord RAVENSWORTH presented a petition from the parish of Hammersmith complaining of the grievous inequality of the poor rates between the metropolitan and suburban districts, and inquired whether her Majesty's Government contemplated any measures of relief to the suburban districts in their promised bill for the amendment of the Poor Law Acts?—Earl GRANVILLE said that the Government proposed to bring in a bill embodying some of the recommendations of the Committee of last Session, but they did not contemplate any special legislation upon the subject matter of the petition.—Lord RAVENSWORTH said he had heard the answer of the noble Earl with great regret.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

Mr. Cheetham took the oaths and his seat for Salford, in the room of Mr. Massey, now Finance Minister for India.

Mr. Whiteside obtained leave to introduce a bill to alter the constitution and amend the practice and course of proceeding in the Court of Chancery in Ireland.

Mr. Cardwell was permitted to bring in a bill to provide for the annexation of the territory of British Kaffraria to the Cape Colony.

Sir Coleman O'Loghlen also obtained leave to bring in a bill to declare and amend the law in relation to the keeping together and discharge of juries in criminal cases.

THE LATE MR. GREGSON.—Lord PALMERSTON called the attention of the House to the recent death of Mr. Gregson, and said he believed he represented their feelings when he expressed their very deep regret at the loss they had sustained by that melancholy event. The late member for Lancaster had performed valuable services to the public. His attention to duty was most exemplary, and all who came in contact with him could bear witness to his indefatigable industry, firmness of judgment, and conciliatory temper. The public in general were hardly aware of the extent to which they were indebted to certain members of the House with regard to the transaction of private business. The patient attention which was given gratuitously in Committees—both on public and private matters—reflected on them the greatest credit, and the more so, because, however arduous might be the labour, it was not of a nature to attract public attention. The late Mr. Gregson was a deserving instance of this, and, personally, he (Lord Palmerston) felt he had lost a valuable and an estimable friend.

COURTS OF JUSTICE BILL.

On the order of the day for the second reading of the Courts of Justice Bill, Mr. J. J. POWELL approved generally of the measure, but pointed out some matters of detail, which, he said, would require attention in Committee.

Mr. KINNAIRD drew attention to the fact that the seven acres which the new buildings were to occupy was now densely populated by the working and poorer classes, and wished to know whether some portion of it could not be saved.

Mr. BENTINCK thought that the House was proceeding somewhat hastily in this matter.

Colonel SYKES said he had been recently at Westminster as a witness, and it appeared to him that some of the smaller places where the Judges sat were little better than rat-traps.

Mr. WALPOLE considered it injudicious to touch the Suitors' Fee Fund as proposed, because from that source great good had been effected by reducing the amount of Chancery charges. He did not think it improbable but that in some future years the Government would be compelled to come on the Consolidated Fund for the whole amount now proposed to be absorbed by the New Courts.

Mr. MALINS said the projected site was all that could be desired, and the houses proposed to be removed comprised some of the worst and lowest in London. If the present moribund Parliament passed only this measure in its last Session it might die with honour.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL briefly replied. He adverted particularly to the subject of the removal of the old houses which now constituted the residences of poor persons. This question was regulated by the ordinary principles of supply and demand, and such alterations in London were not made without ample time being allowed for those affected by them to look about them and ascertain where they should locate themselves. The hon. gentleman defended the scheme generally, as the best which, under the circumstances, could be devised.

Sir F. GOLDSMID said the effect, on the East of London, of the railway demolition of overcrowded residences had been not to remove but to increase the evil. He trusted that this point would not be hastily passed over.

The bill was then read a second time.

The Government of Chili is organising an immigration commission with a view to induce Europeans to settle upon the vast tracts of land now lying waste.

Immediately before the outbreak of the American civil war Mr. John E. Fuller, of New York, one of the oldest members of the Abolitionist party, having been associated with Mr. Lloyd Garrison as long ago as 1830, submitted to the Federal Government, through Mr. Sumner, a calculation proving that the freedom of all the slaves in all the Southern States might be amply purchased for a sum which is considerably less than the actual expenditure already incurred by the Federal Government alone in the course of this war, and this without reckoning the loss by waste of labour and material and by the disturbance of trade. Mr. Fuller, who is a zealous partisan of the Union, though he would have recommended a peace policy, has completed a very interesting statistical chart, showing the territory, population, political distribution, and date of the Constitution of all the States, with the number and aggregate money value of all the bond negroes in the Slave States. The fondness for ciphering and the mechanical ingenuity which distinguish Mr. Fuller's countrymen are further exemplified by his invention of that useful instrument the "Computing Telegraph," or Circular Sliding-Rule, by which the labour of many tedious arithmetical processes is saved, while the desired results are exhibited without the possibility of an error. It would have been happy for America if the conflicting parties of North and South had been disposed to adjust their dispute by a sum thus easily worked.

COUNTRY NEWS.

Her Majesty has appointed the Archbishop of Dublin (Dr. Chevenix Trench) and Sir James Power to be Commissioners of the Board of Charitable Donations and Bequests of Ireland.

An attempt is being made to get up a great public library for Edinburgh, where books of reference may be consulted by literary men, as in the British Museum.

At a meeting held last Saturday it was resolved to present an address from the citizens of Dublin to Benjamin Lee Guinness, to commemorate his munificence in restoring the Cathedral of St. Patrick. It was also resolved to place a statue of Mr. Guinness within the precincts of the sacred building.

The children of the late Mr. Longfield have been made wards of Chancery. His estates in the county of Cork, worth £12,000 a year, have been placed under a receiver. Mr. French, a gentleman of property in the county, has been appointed to the office, on the recommendation of Mrs. Longfield, mother of the minors.

The first turf of the Hoylake Railway was turned on Wednesday. This line is intended to run directly from Birkenhead to Hoylake, a watering-place on the Dee side of the Wirral peninsula. The new line, when permission is obtained to cross the Dee, and connection is formed with the Chester and Holyhead line, will form a much shorter approach to North Wales than the present one by the way of Chester.

The thirty-ninth exhibition of the Royal Scottish Academy opened on Saturday last. It is said to be in many respects much above the average of former years. The Belgian school is well represented in several landscapes of great excellence.——At a general meeting of the Royal Scottish Academy, the vacancy on its list of Academicians, caused by the decease of Sir J. W. Gordon, was filled up by the election of Mr. Walter H. Paton.

A testimonial, consisting of a service of plate of the value of 1000 guineas and a full-length portrait by Mr. Lucas (artist of the well-known picture of George Stephenson), has recently been presented to Mr. Beale, M.P., by the shareholders in the Midland Railway, upon his retirement from the chairmanship of the board of directors, which he had occupied for a period of twenty years.

The gates of the large graving dock in the Southampton Docks, which had been open for two or three tides, were closed on Monday morning for the purpose of pumping out the dock, when the water was found to be swarming with shoals of grey mullet. In the course of a couple of hours, several tons of fine fish were caught, hundreds of men rushing to the place as soon as the fact was known and capturing the fish by hand-nets, baskets, and every implement which could be made available.

In ten large towns of the kingdom last week the births were 4428 and the deaths 3289. The annual rate of mortality was 31 per 1000 less than it had been in the previous weeks. In Liverpool the births were 406, the deaths 411; in Manchester—births 282, deaths 241; in Salford—births 102, deaths 74; in Birmingham—births, 292, deaths 163; in Leeds—births 250, deaths 144; in Bristol—births 120, deaths 88; in Edinburgh—births 120, deaths 94; in Glasgow—births 366, deaths 329; in Dublin—births 151, deaths 166.

A landslip on the Aberdeen and Teneriff Railway is reported by the Banffshire Journal. The embankment, about half a mile to the north of the Tyvie station, is about 70 ft. high; and the late rains have loosened the earth, so that on Saturday week a huge mass of the embankment, about thirty-six yards in length, gave way, and left the sleepers clear half across the line. The earth that fell stopped up the culvert of the "Lownie Burn." This caused the waters to accumulate, and for some time there was quite a lake there. In time the water forced its way through, and was dispersed without much damage. Passenger traffic was still carried on—one engine running from Banff and another from Inveramsay, meeting at the place where the interruption occurred.

The Sheffield Inundation Commission had a singular claim for compensation before it on Tuesday. A "poet and actor," named Richard Nesbitt Ryan, claimed £300 for "loss of poetic effusions." The claimant had been, in his own words, actor, poet, publican, manager, &c. He lodged in one of the inundated streets, and the flood swept away a large quantity of manuscript and printed "poems, odes," &c. He claimed £200 for the loss of a diary containing his autobiography, but the company's valuer cruelly estimated this at £1. Ryan showed that he had been getting his living by selling his "poems," and that he could not replace the loss; and the Court awarded him £100.——On the same day, a widow, named Bethell, of Birmingham, claimed £2650 for the loss of her husband, who was a foreman metal-roller at Owlerton. The man had been earning very large wages, and the claimant was left with three young children. The Court awarded her £1000.

The monthly meeting of the Central Relief Committee was held at Manchester on Monday. The report of the honorary secretary showed that £1243 had been received during the past month, and that the balance in hand now amounted to £65,160. Mr. Farnall reports that on the 4th inst. there was an increase of 1648 persons receiving relief, as compared with the 27th ult. It was further stated that the number had since increased, and that now there were not less than 134,624 persons receiving relief, either from the guardians or the local committees. Mr. Rawlinson made an interesting statement in reference to the operation of the Public Works Act—one important result of which, he said, would be that the cottages of working men throughout Lancashire would be materially improved in regard to the comfort and health of the occupants. According to his statement the Act was working well, many of the cotton operatives becoming so skilful as to render it highly improbable that they would abandon their new trade for the old one. The committee made several grants.

Some elections of members of Parliament have taken place this week. Mr. John Cheetham was elected member for Salford on Monday without opposition, in the room of Mr. Massey, appointed Financial Secretary for India. Mr. Cheetham, who was once before in Parliament as one of the members for Lancashire, is of a more decided shade of Liberal politics than his predecessor.——The polling for a member for Truro, in the room of Mr. Smith, raised to the Bench, resulted, on Tuesday, in the return of Mr. Williams, the numbers being—Williams, Conservative, 249; Vivian, Liberal, 220.——On Tuesday Mr. Murphy was chosen member for Cork. Mr. Maguire was proposed, that he might state his views. He then retired, declaring that he would stand at the next election.——The nomination for Tralee took place on Tuesday, and the show of hands was in favour of The O'Donoghue, who vacated his seat for Tipperary to stand for Tralee; but a poll was demanded by Mr. M'Kenna, and Thursday was fixed for it.——The election for Tipperary will take place next week.——The nomination for Lancaster is fixed for Monday. Mr. Schneider, a Liberal, formerly member for Norwich, will, it is thought, be returned without opposition.

The nineteenth annual report of the Board of Supervision for the Relief of the Poor in Scotland has been presented to both Houses of Parliament in the form of a bluebook of 230 pages. From this compilation it appears that the number of parishes now assessed is 770, and the number that still raise the funds by voluntary contributions is 114: total, 884. Of these, 263 have poorhouses, either singly or in combination; the total number of district buildings open at present being 53, affording accommodation for 12,895 inmates. The number of inmates on the 1st of July last was 7165, leaving vacant accommodation for some thousands more. The average weekly cost per head of the inmates for food, clothing, fuel, light, and all other necessaries of maintenance was 2s. 10¼d. for the half-year ending July 30 last. The report further states that the whole sum expended on medical relief to the poor during the year ending May 14, 1864, according to the annual returns of the inspectors, was £30,601, which is equal to 2·39d. per head of the population of Scotland in 1861. The population of the 697 parishes and combinations that have resolved to comply with the conditions annexed to participation in the grant is 2,807,950, and of the 187 parishes that have not so resolved, 254,344. The sum expended by the former, according to the returns, was £29,307, equal to about 2·5d. per head of the population; and that by the latter was £1293, equal to about 1·22d. per head of the population of those parishes.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.—Six men were killed by a fall of coal in one of Lord Dudley's pits, near Dudley, on Thursday week.

The Goring station of the Great Western Railway, about midway between the Didcot and Reading Junctions, was burned down yesterday week.

At the Leeds County Court, yesterday week, Mr. Wray, a member of the council of that borough, and Mr. Seth Joy, an auctioneer, were each mulcted in the penalty of 40s. for bribing voters at a recent municipal contest. The proceedings were taken under a section of the 22nd Victoria, c. 35, which provides, in addition to the penalty, that upon conviction the offender shall be disqualified for six years from holding any municipal office and from exercising any power as a voter.

Three little girls, two of them sisters, named Brackley, were on a piece of ice near Wendover, when they fell and broke through it. A grown-up sister of the third child, named Wilds, going to their aid, shared their fate, and all four were drowned.

The Wiltshire Mirror records a strange series of deaths in a family named Watts, residing in Melksham Forest. The father was taken ill, died, and was buried. On the return of the mourners from the funeral they found the mother dead. She was buried, and on the return of the sorrowing relatives from the grave they found the daughter dead. Last week a surviving son died, and the intelligence was sent to Trowbridge, to the only surviving child, Jane Watts. Her son took the letter and, by way of gently breaking the news to his mother, told her her brother was ill. Looking up, she caught sight of the black border of the letter and exclaimed, "He's dead. I shall die too!" Although previously well, she sat down, fainting, in a chair and soon after expired.

The Sheffield police have succeeded, after a desperate fight, in apprehending the notorious garotter, Edward Hall, believed to be the chief of the gang of ruffians who garotted and nearly murdered Mr. Burnby, Earl Fitzwilliam's coal agent.

The police of Manchester have apprehended seven or eight men who are supposed to have taken part in the late extensive jewellery robbery in that place. Besides drilling apparatus, the prisoners had in their possession sixty crowbars and eighty skeleton keys. In robbing Mr. Howard's shop in Manchester a drill had been broken, and the thieves left the piece broken off behind them. The other part of the drill has been found in their possession. None of the jewellery or stolen property has yet been discovered.

CHURCH AND UNIVERSITIES.

Baron Meyer de Rothschild has erected a church at Mentmore, Bucks, for the use of his servants.

The sum of £3000 has been promised by the friends of the Rev. T. B. Simpson for the new chancel of St. Michael's Church, Teignmouth.

Sir Humphrey de Trafford is about to erect, at a cost of £20,000, a church at Barton-on-Irwell, to replace the building now used for that purpose.

The work of painting the ceiling of the nave of Ely Cathedral, begun by the late Mr. Le Strange and continued by Mr. Gambier Parry, has been completed.

William Ramsay, for more than thirty years Professor of Humanity in the University of Glasgow, died at San Remo, near Mentone, on Sunday morning, soon after entering his sixtieth year.

The Bishop of Worcester has written a pastoral in support of the movement for augmenting the endowments of poor benefices, which has been recently inaugurated in the archdeaconry of Coventry.

The parish church of Bradwell-on-Sea was reopened, after restoration, on Tuesday week, when sermons were preached by the Bishop of Rochester and the Rev. M. Anderson, Vicar of St. Paul's, Herne-hill.

At a recent meeting of parishioners at Stockton Heath, near Warrington, held to promote the building of a new church there, £2250—including £1000 from Mr. Greenall, M.P.—was subscribed on the spot.

The governors of Dulwich College have offered a site for a church and parsonage for a new district in South Dulwich, together with £1000, and intend to apply to Parliament for power to assist in the endowment.

A fresh charter has been bestowed on St. David's College, Lampeter, which secures to it the right of conferring the degree of Bachelor of Arts. The examiners for this degree will be chosen from Oxford and Cambridge.

The foundation-stone of the new English Protestant church at Smyrna was laid a few weeks since—Mr. E. Price, the contractor for the Cassaba and Smyrna Railway, and Mr. C. McIver, of Liverpool, having taken the lead in a subscription for the building.

The parishioners of Spittlegate, Grantham, have presented a testimonial of respect, consisting of a handsome silver salver and a purse of £100, to the Rev. F. Jesson, Incumbent of that parish and hon. Chaplain of the 2nd Battalion of Lincolnshire Rifle Volunteers.

Mr. J. Amott, organist of Gloucester Cathedral for thirty years, died suddenly on Friday week. His name has long been well known in connection with the festival meetings of the three choirs. Dr. Wesley, of musical celebrity, the organist of Winchester Cathedral and College, has offered himself as a candidate for the office of organist in Gloucester Cathedral.

Convocation met at Westminster, on Tuesday, for the dispatch of business. The Archbishop of Canterbury presided in the one House and Archdeacon Bickersteth in the other. In the Upper House the Bishop of London presented a petition in favour of an extension of lay agency in the Church. The Bishop of Oxford moved an address to the Crown in favour of an extension of the Episcopate. Several of the Bishops spoke in favour of the motion, and it was agreed to. In the Lower House the subjects discussed were the judgment on "Essays and Reviews" and the burial service. The two Houses sat again on Wednesday. The Upper House was occupied with a discussion on the present state of the marriage law and divorce, and the differing opinions of the various Bishops was harmonised into a motion that the House lamented the present state of the law of marriage, but could not interfere in its capacity as the Upper House of Convocation.

The annual dinner of the friends of the Warehousemen and Clerks' Schools took place on Wednesday, at the London Tavern, under the presidency of Lord Stanley. The company numbered about two hundred, and subscriptions amounting to £1250 were announced.

The inquiry into the loss of the Lady Hobart on the Malahide strand, near Dublin, closed at Liverpool yesterday week, when Mr. Raffles, the legal assessor, stated that the Court had decided that the certificate of the captain (Richmond) be suspended for six months.

A list prepared for "Bradshaw's Manual" shows that Parliament has opened with fifty Peers directors of railway companies, and 149 members of the House of Commons; the publication of the names of the board of the Metropolitan District Railways Company raises the latter number to 151.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

NOTWITHSTANDING that the Government broker has commenced his purchases of stock for the reduction of the National Debt, and that money is tolerably abundant in the open market, Home Securities have ruled heavy, and the quotations have been with difficulty supported. In the Unfunded Debt very little has been passing.

There has been a good demand for money for commercial purposes, and the lowest rates for the best paper are as follow:—

Thirty days' bills	5 per cent.	Four months' bills	5½ per cent
Sixty days' bills	5 „	Six months' bills	6 „
Three months' bills	5¼ „

In the Stock Exchange capital is worth 4½ to 5 per cent, if for short periods.

On the Continent very little change has taken place in the quotations for Money. Those in the leading cities are:—

	Bank rate per cent.	Open market per cent.		Bank rate per cent.	Open market per cent.
Paris	4	4	Turin	6	6
Vienna	5	5½	Brussels	5	4
Berlin	5	4½	Madrid	9	10
Frankfort	4	4	Hamburg	—	3
Amsterdam	4½	4½	St. Petersburg	6½	8½

About £400,000 in gold has come to hand, but £120,000 has been withdrawn from the Bank of England for shipment to Spain.

The Council for India have disposed of £300,000 in bills, at previous quotations—viz., 1s. 11¼d. per rupee on Calcutta and Madras, and 1s. 11¼d. on Bombay.

The demand for silver for India and China is still heavy. The steamer has taken out only a small amount in bullion.

Very little change took place in the value of Stocks on Monday. The market, however, was extremely inactive. Consols, for Money, were 89⅛ ¼; Ditto, for Account, 89⅜ ½; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 88⅞ ⅞; Exchequer Bills, par to 5s. prem.; India Five per Cents, 103⅞ ⅞; Ditto Four per Cents, 98½; Ditto, Bonds, 10s. prem.; Bank Stock was 247. On Tuesday, Consols, for Transfer, marked 89⅛ ¼; Ditto, for Time, 89⅜ ½; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 88⅞ ⅞; Annuities 1885, 14 7-16; Exchequer Bills, 5s. prem.; India Stock, 216 to 218; Ditto, Five per Cents, 103⅞ ⅞; Ditto, Four per Cent Certificates, 98½; Ditto, Four per Cent Rupee Paper, 80⅞; Ditto, Five per Cent, 101½ ⅛. The dealings on Wednesday were trifling. Consols, for Money, left off at 88⅞ ⅞; Ditto, for Account, 89⅛ ¼; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 88⅞ ⅞; Exchequer Bills, 4s. to 8s. prem.; India Five per Cents, 103½ ⅞; Ditto, Four per Cents, 98½; Ditto, Five per Cent Rupee Paper, 102; and the Five-and-a-Half per Cent, 109. On Thursday the market was decidedly firmer. Consols, for Money, 89 88⅞ 89; for Account, 89⅛ ¼; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 88⅞ ⅞; Bank Stock, 217½; India Five per Cent Stock, 103⅞ ⅞; and Exchequer Bills, 4s. to 8s. prem.

American (Federal) Securities have been in good request. United States Five per Cents have marked 53, 54; Erie Shares, 34½; and Illinois Central, 52½.

The foreign house has been heavy, and the quotations have had a downward tendency. The failure of peace negotiations in America has depressed the market for the Confederate Loan, the price of which at one period of the week was 58 to 60, and the quotation is now 55½ to 56½. Italian Scrip has sold at 1⅞ to 1⅞ dis.; Danubian, ½ dis. to par; and Egyptian, ½ to 1 prem. Brazilian Five per Cents have marked 100; Ditto Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 1863, 83½; Egyptian Seven per Cents, 98; Ditto, 1864, 98½; Greek, 22½; Mexican Three per Cents, 27; Russian Old Five per Cents, 92; Ditto, 1862, 89⅞; Ditto, 1864, 91; Spanish Three per Cents, 47½; Ditto, Deferred, 39⅞; Ditto, Passive, 32⅞; Ditto, Certificates, 11⅞; Turkish Old Six per Cents, 91⅞; Ditto, 1858, 72⅞; Ditto, 1863, 68½; Venezuela Six per Cents, 42; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 63; Ditto Four per Cents, 98⅞; Italian Five per Cents, 64½; and Turkish Consolidés, 51⅛ ⅞.

Joint-stock Bank Shares have been dealt in to a moderate extent only, and prices have slightly declined. Alliance have sold at 33½; Australasia, 73½; Ditto, New, 71½; Bank of Egypt, 31½ ex div.; Chartered of India, Australia, and China, 33½; Consolidated, 10⅞; English, Scottish, and Australian Chartered, 19⅞; Imperial, 30⅞; Imperial Ottoman, 17½; Land Mortgage of India, 5; London, Buenos Ayres, and River Plate, 48; Ditto, New, 11½; London and County, 74 ex div.; London Joint-stock, 47½; London and Westminster, 95½; Metropolitan and Provincial, 18; National, New, 84½ ex div.; Oriental, 58½; Standard of British South Africa, 2¼; and Union of London, 53.

The market for Colonial Government Securities has ruled quiet. Canada Six per Cents have been done at 90½; Ditto Five per Cents, 80½; Cape Five per Cents, 93½; New Brunswick Six per Cents, 99; New South Wales Five per Cents, 92; and Victoria Six per Cents, 104.

In the Miscellaneous market only a moderate business has been transacted. Anglo-Mexican Mint, 17⅞; Bombay Gas, 5½; City Offices, 5⅞; Credit Foncier and Mobilier of England, 9⅞; Ditto, New, 7⅞; Crystal Palace, 35½; Discount Corporation, 13½; Egyptian Commercial and Trading, 5; Electric Telegraph, 112 ex div.; Fore-street Warehouse, 6¼ ex div.; Hudson's Bay, 15½; International Financial, 6⅞; Joint-stock Discount, 9 ex div.; London Financial, 22; London and Provincial Marine, 3½ ex div.; National Discount, 14½; Oriental Financial, 4½; Ottoman Financial, 7; Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance, 7⅞; and Universal Marine, 5½.

The dealings in the Railway Share market have been unimportant, and prices, almost generally, have given way. Annexed are Thursday's official closing quotations:—

Ordinary Shares and Stocks.—Bristol and Exeter, 95½; Great Eastern, 47; Great Western, 79½; Ditto, South Wales, 68; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 117; London and Blackwall, 87½; London and Brighton, 103⅞; London and North-Western, 120; London and South-Western, 98⅞; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, 59½; Metropolitan, 116½ ex div. and ex New; Ditto, New, 5⅞; Midland, 137½; Ditto, Birmingham and Derby, 107½; North Eastern—Berwick, 111⅞; Ditto, Leeds, 69⅞; Ditto, York, 103; South Devon, 50; South Eastern, 87½; Taff Vale, 162.

British Possessions.—Calcutta and South Eastern, 97½; Cape Town and Dock, 80; Eastern Bengal, 100; East Indian, 109⅞; Great Indian Peninsula, 100⅞; Indian Branch, 1⅞; Madras Five per Cent, 100.

Foreign.—Antwerp and Rotterdam, 9⅞; Dutch Rhenish, 21½; Eastern of France, 29; Northern of France, 39½; San Paulo, 17.

The return of the Bank of England for the week ending Feb. 15 shows the following results when compared with the preceding statement:—

A decrease of circulation of	£311,012	An increase of bullion of	£42,250
An increase of public deposits of	319,620	An increase of rest of	10,183
An increase of other deposits of	155,596	An increase of reserve of	337,010
An increase of securities of	99,097

The total circulation is £20,399,763. Public deposits amount to £6,572,512; and private deposits to £13,969,659. Securities are £30,007,199; and the stock of bullion is £14,553,871.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, Feb. 13.—To-day's market was scantily supplied with English wheat. Sales, however, progressed slowly, at about stationary prices. Fine foreign wheats commanded extreme quotations, but inferior kinds were very dull. In floating cargoes of grain very little was passing. Malting barley ruled steady, on former terms; but grinding and distilling sorts were a slow inquiry. Malt was in fair average supply and sluggish request, at late rates. Oats commanded more attention, and, in some instances, the currencies had an upward tendency. Beans advanced 1s. per quarter, with a steady inquiry. No change took place in the value of either peas or flour.

Feb 15.—Only a limited business was passing in all kinds of produce to-day. Monday's prices, however, were supported.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 38s. to 41s.; ditto, white, 40s. to 46s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 38s. to 40s.; rye, 28s. to 30s.; grinding barley, 23s. to 24s.; distilling ditto, 25s. to 28s.; malting ditto, 24s. to 35s.; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 51s. to 60s.; brown ditto, 47s. to 50s.; Kingston and Ware, 58s. to 60s.; chevalier, 60s. to 62s.; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 18s. to 21s.; potato ditto, 19s. to 23s.; Youghal and Cork, black, 16s. to 18s.; ditto, white, 17s. to 22s.; tick beans, 30s. to 32s.; grey peas, 33s. to 34s.; maple, 36s. to 39s.; white, 36s. to 37s.; boilers, 37s. to 38s. per quarter. Town-made flour, 37s. to 40s.; country marks, 25s. to 32s. per 280 lb.; French, 30s. to 32s. per sack; American, 19s. to 25s. per barrel.

Arrivals this Week.—English and Scotch: Wheat, 1010; barley, 1300; malt, 1250; oats, 130; flour, 950. Foreign: Barley, 2600; oats, 9880; flour, 300 sacks.

Seeds.—Clover seed supports the late advance in the quotations; but the demand for it is by no means active. Most other seeds move off slowly, at previous rates. Cakes rule firm in price.

Linseed, English, crushing, 60s. to 63s.; Calcutta, 56s. to 58s.; hempseed, 41s. to 43s. per quarter; coriander, 22s. to 24s. per cwt; brown mustard seed, 10s. to 12s.; white ditto, 8s. to 10s.; tares, 9s. to 10s. per bushel; English rapeseed, 74s. to 76s. per quarter; linseed cakes, English, £10 to £11; ditto, foreign, £9 10s. to £11; rape cakes, £5 10s. to £6 5s. per ton; canary, 41s. to 50s. per quarter; red clover seed, 62s. to 120s.; white, ditto, 56s. to 88s. per cwt.

Averages of Grain.—Wheat, 38s. 4d.; barley, 29s. 2d.; oats, 19s. 3d.

English Grain Sold Last Week.—Wheat, 66,918; barley, 62,161; oats, 8375 quarters.

Tea.—The market is flat, at about previous quotations. The stock in the United Kingdom amounts to £96,000,000 lb.

Sugar.—Raw qualities are in fair request, and prices are well supported. Stock, 102,781 tons, against 75,574 tons in 1864. Refined goods command full quotations.

Rice.—The demand is somewhat restricted, at previous currencies. Stock, 50,950 tons, against 55,129 tons in 1864.

Provisions.—There is only a limited inquiry for Irish butter; nevertheless, prices are supported. Foreign qualities are firm, and the best Friesland is worth 140s. per cwt. Bacon moves off freely, at 62s. per cwt. for Waterford sizable, on board. Hams have a drooping tendency; but lard is very firm.

Tallow.—Only a moderate business is doing in this market. P.Y.C., on the spot, is selling at 41s. 6d. per cwt. The stock consists of 48,609 casks, against 62,845 casks last year. Rough fat, 2s. 2d. per 8 lb.

Oils.—Linseed oil is selling at £32 15s. per ton; rape, £49 10s. to £44 10s.; and fine palm, £36 to £36 10s. French turpentine, 67s. 6d. per cwt.

Spirits.—No change has taken place in the value of rum. Brandy and grain spirits move off slowly, at late rates.

Coals.—Haswell, 22s.; East Hartlepool, 22s.; Braddyll's, 21s. 6d.; Eden Main, 21s.; Belmont, 21s.; Wylam, 16s. per ton.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £4 10s. to £5 10s.; clover, £5 10s. to £6 10s.; and straw, £1 9s. to £1 14s. per load.

Hops.—Good and fine samples are in fair request, at full prices. Otherwise, the demand is inactive.

Wool.—Very little is doing in any kind, at about stationary prices.

Potatoes.—The supplies are moderate, and the demand is steady, at from 55s. to 110s. per ton.

Metropolitan Cattle Market (Thursday, Feb. 16).—There was about an average supply of beasts here to-day, both as to number and quality. All breeds were in fair request, at full prices. The best Scots and crosses sold at 5s. 4d. per 8 lb. The show of sheep was rather limited. Downs and half-breds moved off freely, at full quotations. Other breeds were inactive, but not cheaper. The general top figure was 6s. 2d. per 8 lb. The few calves on offer sold steadily, at full currencies—viz., from 4s. 4d. to 5s. 6d. per 8 lb. Pigs were firm in price; but milch cows were very dull.

Per 8 lb. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s. 8d. to 4s. 2d.; second quality ditto, 4s. 4d. to 4s. 10d.; prime large oxen, 5s. 0d. to 5s. 2d.; prime Scots, &c., 5s. 2d. to 5s. 4d.; coarse and inferior sheep, 4s. 6d. to 4s. 10d.; second quality ditto, 5s. 0d. to 5s. 4d.; prime coarse-woolled sheep, 5s. 6d. to 5s. 10d.; prime southdown ditto, 6s. 0d. to 6s. 2d.; large coarse calves, 4s. 4d. to 5s. 0d.; prime small ditto, 5s. 2d. to 5s. 6d.; large hogs, 3s. 6d. to 4s. 0d.; neat small porkers, 4s. 2d. to 4s. 8d.; suckling calves, 20s. to 22s.; and quarter-old store pigs, 20s. to 26s. each. Total supply: Beasts, 1100; cows, 120; sheep, 3040; calves, 112; pigs, 300. Foreign: Beasts, 400; sheep, 1200; calves, 104.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—Beef, from 3s. 2d. to 4s. 8d.; mutton, 4s. 0d. to 5s. 0d.; veal, 4s. 0d. to 5s. 2d.; pork, 3s. 4d. to 4s. 10d. per 8 lb. by the carcass. Trade steady.

TOMBS OF THE MING DYNASTY OF CHINESE EMPERORS AT NANKIN.

SOME weeks ago we published an Engraving, from a sketch by Mr. F. L. Bedwell, giving a view of the avenue leading to the eastern quarter of the tombs of the Emperors at Nankin, showing the colossal stone figures of elephants and camels which are erected in that part of the Imperial cemetery of the Mings, not far from the ruined walls of the ancient city. We now give an Illustration of the avenue of warriors and priests forming the approach to the northern tombs. Here is a huge hillock, at the base of which is a massive rectangular brick building, perforated with three arches, and standing on a basement of larger dimensions. The colossal figures of men shown in our Engraving are sculptured in a species of sandstone, and, from continual exposure to the weather for centuries, have become black and unsightly objects, being here and there covered with patches of hardy lichen. They present, together with the sculptured animals and ruinous tombs, a striking scene of desolation, the solitude of which is only relieved now and then by the cry of some frightened bird. The Ming dynasty of Emperors, who reigned over China from the middle of the fourteenth to the middle of the seventeenth century, held their Court at Nankin, which city was at that time the most wealthy and populous in the whole of the Chinese empire. Since the conquest of China by the Mongol Tartars (about 200 years ago) the seat of government has been at Pekin, and few relics of the former splendour of Nankin are now to be seen, except these sepulchral monuments and the famous porcelain tower.

ST. JUDE'S CHURCH, DUBLIN.

THIS church was recently erected by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for Ireland, for the new parish of St. Jude, near the beautiful Phœnix Park, in Dublin. It consists of the nave, 100 ft. long, with the transepts north and south together 87 ft. long, and accommodates nearly 600 persons. The foundation-stone was laid by the late Archbishop Whately. This ceremony, which was his last public official act, was performed in the presence of the Chief Secretary for Ireland, Sir Robert Peel, and a large assembly of ladies and gentlemen. In the stone was deposited a bottle, containing photographs of her Majesty the Queen, the Prince of Wales, the late Earl of Carlisle (then Lord Lieutenant), and Dr. Whately (then Archbishop of Dublin). The church was consecrated by Dr. Trench, the newly appointed Archbishop of Dublin; and this, singularly enough, was his first official act, his Grace preaching on the occasion in the presence of his Excellency the Earl of Carlisle, the Marquis and Marchioness of Kildare, the Dean of St. Patrick's, the Ven. Archdeacon Lee, D.D., and a large number of the clergy of the diocese. The Earl of Meath is patron of the mother parish, out of which the new parish of St. Jude is formed, and the Rev. Thomas Kingston is the Vicar. The Rev. Thomas Mills, A.M. (through whose exertions mainly this new church was built), is the incumbent of the new parish. The church was built by Messrs. Butler and Sons, from the designs of Messrs. Welland and Gillespie, and is in the Early English style. The chancel contains five beautiful stained-glass windows, by Messrs. Forrest and Sons, of Liverpool. The total cost of the building was £4000. The site was a free gift from Mr. David M'Birney, a merchant and magistrate of the city of Dublin.

THE NEW PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, RUTLAND-SQUARE, DUBLIN.

A HANDSOME church has lately been erected at the top of Rutland-square, Dublin, for the use of the Presbyterian congregation meeting heretofore at Mary's Abbey. The cost of this building has been defrayed solely by the munificence of Mr. Alexander Findlater, of Dublin. We give a View of the exterior, which has considerable architectural merit and makes a very imposing appearance, with as few faults of style as any edifice of the kind in Dublin. The architect is Mr. Andrew Heiton, of Perth, who had previously designed many churches in the Early English style. This is by far the largest Presbyterian church in the province of Leinster. About a thousand persons can be conveniently seated in the interior. The pewing is constructed in the most modern and comfortable manner. The place is admirably lighted, and the effect of the stained-glass windows is very pleasant. Ventilation and heating, which are usually antagonistic, are successfully provided for. The chandeliers for gas-lighting consist of six handsome medieval coronas, of thirty burners each, suspended from the roof. These were made expressly for the church from the design of the architect. The galleries and staircase are lighted by massive brackets, and the lobbies and vestibules by circular lanterns with mediæval brass mounting. The church was opened for Divine service shortly before Christmas.

THE CHURCH OF ST. JOHN, WALWORTH.

THIS new church, which has just been completed, is situated in Charles-street, York-street, Walworth. The building is of the Early English style of architecture. It consists of a nave, 75 ft. long by 21 ft. 6 in. wide, and north and south aisles, each 16 ft. 3 in. wide, with a chancel, 25 ft. long and 20 ft. wide, besides the organ chamber on the north side and the vestry on the south side. The organ presents an ornamental front to the nave, and is separated from the north aisle by an open wooden screen. The choir contains the stalls and choristers' seats. At the back of the altar is a reredos tiled with Staffordshire tiles. The centre part has white and red alabaster introduced with the tiles, above which is a slightly-projecting canopy of stone, carved and inlaid with alabaster. The pulpit is situated in the north-east corner of the nave. The nave, which is 55 ft. high, is divided from the aisles by five bays. Instead of the massive stone pillars usually placed between the nave and the aisles, the architect has introduced coupled columns, seven inches in diameter, with sufficient space between them to enable persons sitting behind them to obtain a view of the altar and chancel. The building is of Kentish ragstone, with dressings of Bath stone. This church is in the midst of a poor and populous district; and all the sittings are free and unappropriated. Accommodation has been provided for 1000 persons. The cost of the whole building was £8800; and this sum (with the exception of £1500 granted by societies) was collected by the untiring and indefatigable efforts of the Incumbent, the Rev. G. T. Cotham. Mr. Jarvis, of Trinity-square, Newington, is the architect of the church.

WHITFIELD'S CHAPEL, TOTTENHAM-COURT-ROAD.

THIS chapel was built by the famous Rev. George Whitfield, M.A., of Pembroke College, Oxford, and chaplain to Selina, Countess of Huntingdon. It was first opened for public worship on Nov. 7, 1756. It was enlarged in 1759-60 by adding an octangular front, which gave it rather a singular appearance. When Whitfield preached there it was visited by many persons of rank and distinction, eager to hear that eloquent orator, who was so much talked of in his day. The Prince of Wales and his Royal brothers and sisters, Lord Chesterfield, Lord Bolingbroke, Lord Halifax, Horace Walpole, David Hume, and David Garrick are all reported to have been among Whitfield's hearers. The existing pulpit is the same from which Whitfield preached. In the vestry there is a good portrait of Whitfield, taken when he was young, and also a fine bust of him; with portraits of all the ministers since the commencement—viz., the Rev. George Whitfield, M.A.; the Rev. Josiah Joss, the Rev. Joel Abraham Knight, the Rev. Matthew Wilks, the Rev. John Hyatt; the Rev. John Campbell, D.D.; the Rev. Joseph Wilberforce Richardson; and the present minister, the Rev. James H. Boulding. The founder of this chapel, Mr. Whitfield, here preached his last sermon in England on the 2nd of September, 1769; he died, on the 30th of September, 1770, at Boston, America. It had been agreed between Whitfield and Wesley that whichever of them died first, the survivor should preach the funeral sermon; so the Rev. John Wesley, M.A., of Christ Church and Lincoln Colleges, Oxford, preached Whitfield's funeral sermon in Tottenham-court-road Chapel, on the 30th of November in that year. A very singular instance, by-the-way, of a clergyman preaching his own funeral sermon occurred in this chapel on the 16th of August, 1787. This was the Rev. Henry Peckwell, D.D., of St. Edward's Hall, Oxford, Rector of St. Mary's, Blexham-cum-Digby, Lincolnshire, and Chaplain to the Marchioness of Lothian. The cause of his death was a prick of his finger with a needle. He had gone to the Westminster Infirmary to attend a post-mortem examination of the lungs of a woman (Miss Mary Stone) who had died of consumption, and some of the putrid matter got into the wound in his finger, which caused mortification in a few days. His physician pronounced the accident fatal. At this time Dr. Peckwell was doing duty for the minister of Tottenham-court-road Chapel. Being conscious of his approaching end, he ascended the pulpit with his arm in a sling, and preached, from St. Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews, xiii. 7, 8, a sermon so affecting as to draw tears from many of his audience. At the conclusion he added that this was his farewell sermon—not like the ordinary farewell sermons of this world, but one more impressive from the circumstances than had ever been preached before. "My hearers," he said, "shall long beat it in mind, when this frail earthly body shall be mouldering in its kindred dust." The congregation were unable to conjecture his meaning; but what were their impressions, on the next Sunday morning, when, to their great surprise, a strange minister ascended the pulpit and informed them that their friend and late minister, Dr. Peckwell, had breathed his last on the evening before! This Dr. Henry Peckwell was the founder of the charity called the "Sick Man's Friend." The only other clergyman who was ever known to preach his own funeral sermon was the Rev. William Dodd, D.D., who preached it, from Acts xx. 23, in the chapel in Newgate, on Friday,

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH, WALWORTH.

June 6, 1777, before he was hanged for the crime of forgery. Several other remarkable anecdotes belong to the history of this well-known chapel in Tottenham-court-road. On Sunday, March 22, 1772, during the afternoon service, Mr. Bartholomew Goodere, of Craven-buildings, Drury-lane, was struck dead by a flash of lightning, while sitting near the west door with his child in his arms; but the child was not in the least hurt, though a part of the chapel was damaged. The burial ground which surrounds this chapel was made from the mould which was brought from the burial-ground of the Church of St. Christopher-le-Stock, in the city of London, when that church was taken down, in 1764, to enlarge the Bank of England, which now occupies its former site. The Rev. Augustus Toplady, of Trinity College, Dublin, Rector of Broadhembury, Devonshire, and the author of a well-known hymn-book, was buried in this chapel. So was John Bacon, R.A., the sculptor; and these tombs, as well as a monument to Whitfield, are to be found here. On Tuesday, May 18, 1824, the Rev. Edward Irving here delivered his celebrated missionary oration of three hours and a half, the effects of which are described by Mrs. Oliphant in her life of that extraordinary man. In 1804 an unhappy difference arose between the minister, the Rev. John Campbell, D.D., and the trustees of Whitfield Chapel, which caused the chapel to be placed in Chancery. On Feb. 23, 1857, the chapel was damaged by fire. It was, however, repaired, and some years later it was sold by order of the Court of Chancery. It was bought by the London Congregational Chapel-Building Society for £4700. It has by them been almost rebuilt, and made a most convenient and even handsome building. The front is adorned with a portico and towers. The interior is very neat; the decorations, in lavender and white, are chaste and plain. The chapel has been restored, from the designs and under the direction of Mr. John Turring, architect, of Bucklersbury, by Mr. Thomas Richards, builder, of Pimlico. The interior is lighted from the dome by star-light; and behind the pulpit is a fine organ, built by Mr. J. Walker. The dimensions of the chapel are—length, 136 ft.; breadth, 80 ft.; height to the dome, 70 ft. It was reopened, by the Rev. James Boulding, on the 29th of September last.

DR. DE JONGH'S

DISEASES OF THE LUNGS AND CHEST.

The extraordinary virtues of DR. DE JONGH'S COD-LIVER OIL in Pulmonary Consumption may now be considered as fully established. No remedy so rapidly restores the exhausted strength, improves the nutritive functions, stops or diminishes emaciation, checks the perspiration, quiets the cough and expectoration, or produces a more marked and favourable influence on the local malady. DR. WAUDBY, late Physician to the Hereford Infirmary, bears the following high testimony to its efficacy in Diseases of the Chest, from his own personal experience:—"I can take DR. DE JONGH'S OIL without difficulty or dislike and with as little inconvenience as water alone. Not only in my own case, but in many others I have seen, it has caused an improvement of chest symptoms and an increase of weight, so soon and so lastingly as to be quite remarkable. I believe DR. DE JONGH'S OIL to be the most valuable remedy we possess for chronic and constitutional disease."

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

The late Dr. JONATHAN PEREIRA, F.R.S.,
Physician to the London Hospital, &c., &c.
"It was fitting that the author of the best analysis and investigations into the properties of this Oil should himself be the purveyor of this important medicine. Whether considered with reference to its colour, flavour, or chemical properties, I am satisfied that, for medicinal purposes, no finer Oil can be procured."

DR. EDWARD SMITH, F.R.S.,
Physician to the Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest, Brompton, &c., &c.
"We think it a great advantage that there is one kind of Cod-liver Oil which is universally admitted to be genuine—the Light-brown Oil supplied by DR. DE JONGH. It has long been our practice, when prescribing the Oil, to recommend this kind, since, amidst so much variety and uncertainty, we have confidence in its genuineness."—(Extract from "Consumption, its Early and Remediable Stages.")

Coroner for Central Middlesex, &c., &c.,
"I consider that the purity and genuineness of this Oil are secured in its preparation by the personal attention of so good a Chemist and intelligent a Physician as DR. DE JONGH, who has also written the best Medical Treatise on the Oil with which I am acquainted. Hence I deem the Cod-liver Oil sold under his guarantee to be preferable to any other kind as regards genuineness and medicinal efficacy."

DR. LETHEBY,
Medical Officer of Health, and Chief Analyst to the city of London, &c., &c.
"The Oil corresponds in all its characters with that named 'Huile Brune,' and described as the best variety in the masterly treatise of DR. DE JONGH. It is, I believe, universally acknowledged that DR. DE JONGH'S Light-brown Cod-liver Oil has great therapeutic power; and, from my investigations, I have no doubt of its being a pure and unadulterated article."

DR. BARLOW,
Senior Physician to Guy's Hospital, &c., &c.
"I have frequently recommended persons consulting me to make use of DR. DE JONGH'S Cod-liver Oil. I have been well satisfied with its effects, and believe it to be a very pure Oil, well fitted for those cases in which the use of that substance is indicated."

EDWIN CANTON, ESQ., F.R.C.S.,
Surgeon to Charing-cross Hospital, &c., &c.
"For several years past I have been in the habit of prescribing DR. DE JONGH'S Light-brown Cod-liver Oil, and find it to be much more efficacious than any other varieties of the same medicine which I have also employed with a view to test their relative superiority."

CRAMER'S ENGLISH PIANETTE.
Regent-street, Decr. 1st, 1864.
Mr. Hopkinson, Dear Sir,—Having had the Pianette (cabinet) instrument, 12 feet all the resolution of the best Pianoforte—check action, trichord throughout, and all the latest improvements, for the last three months, I am glad to say that it has given me perfect satisfaction. It will be strengthened much more rapidly than on an old instrument from the fact of its being new, and consequently more responsive to the hammer.
Yours truly, JOHN BARNETT.
Purchasers are particularly requested to observe that this instrument is not to be confounded with any of the Pianettes at the check action; and that Cramer and Co. were the original manufacturers.

BROADWOOD'S NEW DRAWING-ROOM GRAND, cross-strung, and all the latest improvements in Walnut.—CRAMER and CO. (Limited) beg to direct attention to the above instrument, which, for its size, is unequalled for power and quality of tone. Messrs. THE MOVERS AND SECONDERS OF THE ADDRESSES IN THE LORDS AND COMMONS.

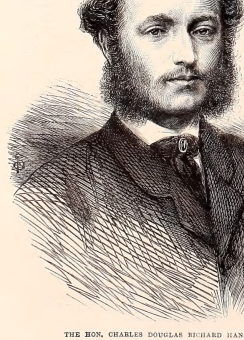
LORD HOUGHTON.

THE EARL OF CHARLEMONT.

THE EARL OF CHARLEMONT.



THE moving of the Address in the House of Lords, in answer to the Speech from the Throne, was originally assigned to the Duke of Cleveland, who has been long familiarly known to the House of Commons as Lord Harry Vane, and who would on the day of the opening of Parliament have taken the oaths and his seat on his accession to the dukedom. But by a fatality which seems at present to hang over his family—two Dukes of Cleveland died successively in the course of last year—a domestic affliction at the latest moment prevented his performing that duty, which accordingly devolved on the nobleman who was to have seconded the Address—the Earl of Charlemont, whose portrait we engrave. The Right Honourable James Molyneux Caulfield—third Earl of Charlemont, Viscount Charlemont in the Peerage of Ireland, and Baron Caulfield in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, by which latter title he sits in the House of Peers—is the eldest son of the late Honourable Henry Caulfield, who died in 1862. He succeeded his late uncle, the second Earl, in all the honours of the peerage in 1863. His Lordship was born in 1820, and is married to a daughter of Lord Athlumney, of the Peerage of Ireland, so long known in the House of Commons as Sir William Somerville, and who is still M.P. for Canterbury. The Earl was appointed Lord Lieutenant of the county of Tyrone in 1864. The first Earl is still remembered as being held in high estimation by the people of Ireland for the manner in which he comported himself as Commander-in-Chief of the Irish volunteers from 1778 to 1782. The second Earl sat in the House of Lords as a representative Peer for Ireland, and on him was conferred the barony of the United Kingdom, with special remainder to the father of the present Peer. The Earl, though by no means a young man, made his first appearance as a speaking Peer on the occasion of moving the Address, and had, therefore, a claim to indulgence on the score of Parliamentary youth; of which, however, he stood in little need, having discharged his duty with judgment, ability and judgment, adopting the course of dwelling with most particularity on that part of the subject with which he may be supposed to be best acquainted—the condition of Ireland.

THE RIGHT HON. RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, FIRST BARON HOUGHTON, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom (the title having been conferred in 1863), is the only son of the late Robert Pemberton Milnes, of Fryer Hall and Bawtry Hall, Yorkshire, who for many years represented the borough of Pontefract in Parliament. The present Peer was born in 1809, and is an M.A. of Cambridge, as well as an honorary D.C.L. of Oxford. He married, in 1851, a daughter of Lord Crewe. As Mr. Monckton Milnes, he was member for Pontefract from 1837 to 1863. On his first entering into Parliament he was a professor of Conservative principles as they were then understood; but, adhering to Sir Robert Peel in the innovations which were made by that statesman on the Tory creed, he at length found himself drifted into the regions of Liberalism proper, and, with some formality, he openly espoused the doctrines of the party of progress, and took his seat behind those who were accepted as its leaders, whether in office or in opposition. In the literary world the name of Monckton Milnes is well known as the author of numerous poems, all marked by feeling and taste and a command of graceful versification. He is also the author of a work entitled "Memorials of Greece." In the House of Commons he was a frequent speaker, so that he came to the task which he was somewhat suddenly called on to undertake, of seconding the Address in the Lords, with sufficiently-acquired readiness and self-possession; he made a speech which travelled out of the routine usually adhered to upon occasions of the kind, and he ventured to deliver opinions and even to make suggestions, which were delivered with very good effect.

SIR HEDWORTH WILLIAMSON, BART.,

M.P. for the Northern Division of the County of Durham, who moved the Address in the House of Commons, is the son of the late Sir Hedworth Williamson, seventh Baronet, of Whitburn Hall, Monkwearton, in the county of Durham, and who was M.P. for Sunderland from 1847 to 1852, by a daughter of the first Lord Ravensworth. He was born in 1820, and is married to his cousin, Elizabeth, daughter of the second and present Lord Ravensworth. He was educated at Eton, and Christ Church, Oxford; and, having entered the diplomatic service, was an attaché to the Embassy at St. Petersburg, and afterwards to that at Paris until the year 1856. He was a Deputy Lieutenant of the county of Durham and Captain Commandant of the Durham Artillery Volunteers, in the uniform of which corps he appeared on the occasion of his moving the Address. In politics Sir Hedworth Williamson professes to be a Liberal, a supporter of Lord Palmerston—especially of the noble Lord's foreign policy—and is in favour of a moderate extension of the suffrage. Having been elected for North Durham, in June, 1804, on the death of Lord Adolphus Vane Tempest, the opening day of the Session was the first occasion on which he had addressed the House. This he did with much propriety, exhibiting none of the deficiencies which arise from overpowering diffidence, but at the same time evincing no undue confidence or self-assertion; while what he said was plainly but neatly expressed and quite to the purpose.

THE HON. CHARLES DOUGLAS RICHARD HANBURY-TRACY

THE HON. CHARLES DOUGLAS RICHARD HANBURY-TRACY, who seconded the Address in the Lower House, is the second son of Baron Sudeley. He was born in 1840, and, having entered the Royal Navy in 1854, reached the rank of Lieutenant in 1860. During the Crimean War he served in the Hecla at the bombardment of Bomarsund, and afterwards in the Blenheim, during the presence of the English fleet in the Baltic; and he wore on the occasion of his seconding the Address two medals, which it is to be presumed were conferred upon him for his services during the war. He, however, retired from the Navy in 1863, and was elected for the Montgomery District Boroughs in the August of that year. He is unmarried, and is a Liberal in politics. It is probable that he also addressed the House for the first time on the first night of the Session, and he delivered a well-prepared speech with mingled confidence and discretion.

Our Portraits of the movers and seconders of the Address in both Houses are engraved from photographs by Messrs. J. and C. Watkins, of Parliament-street.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

The Life of Thorvaldsen. By the Rev. M. R. Barnard, B.A. (Chapman and Hall). We have so grateful a recollection of Mr. Barnard's "Sport in Norway, and Where to Find It" that we are glad to welcome him again, even in the capacity of a secondhand biographer. Herr Thiele is the Danish biographer of the great sculptor; and from Herr Thiele's work Mr. Barnard has "collated" (to use his expression) the biographical notice under consideration. Mr. Barnard has prefixed to his biography "a list of Thorvaldsen's works in chronological order," has duly chronicled the date of the great sculptor's birth, has given an interesting account of the manner in which the materials for Herr Thiele's voluminous production were discovered, has related a few characteristic anecdotes of Thorvaldsen's habits and manners, and has altogether compiled a by no means unentertaining volume; but his work is meagre and, in respect of dates (vide pp. 236, 237, 239, 241, where one falls into a hopeless chaos of days and months), confused. It is curious to observe the singular resemblance of nature between Thorvaldsen and our great painter Turner, so far as the "miserly disposition" attributed to both is concerned; for it is said of Thorvaldsen, as we believe it was said of Turner, that "he was undoubtedly extremely careful in small money matters, and the dread of imposition would often make him haggle over the payment of a few coppers; but where larger sums were concerned he was extremely liberal."

Notes on Brazilian Questions. By W. D. Christie. (Macmillan and Co.) Mr. Christie, it is perhaps superfluous to mention, was lately her Majesty's Minister at Rio, and he therefore speaks upon Brazilian questions with no little authority. His publication, moreover, is particularly opportune, seeing that the Queen's Speech at the opening of Parliament drew from Lord Derby severe strictures upon, and from Earl Russell a caustic defence of, the British Government's conduct towards Brazil. The volume is, with the exception of a lengthy introduction addressed to Lord Palmerston and an illustrative appendix compiled from various despatches, mainly a reprint of letters written to the Daily News. This is, of course, not the place for a discussion of political questions; but it is the place for drawing attention to a book where those whom such matters concern may enlighten themselves on statements, proofs, and opinions touching Brazil and its government, touching slavery, touching our commercial relations with the Brazilians, and touching British claims and the reprisals in the case of the Prince of Wales. It is scarcely necessary to add that personal justification is not the least of the reasons for Mr. Christie's seasonable notes.

Shakspeare. Edited by the Rev. A. Dyce. (Chapman and Hall.) It is a great pleasure to be able to announce that the fifth volume of Mr. Dyce's noble edition may now be obtained. There are yet three volumes to come, and when those have appeared there will be within reach of Shakspeare lovers an edition equal, perhaps, in every respect, and superior in many points, to any hitherto published.

History of the Discovery and Exploration of Australia. By the Rev. Julian E. Tenison Woods. (Sampson Low, Son, and Marston.) The land of gold and convicts, where men dine off kangaroo, is destined some day—if "coming events" truly "cast their shadows before"—to take a high place amongst the nations of the earth. It may not yet have earned its title to be called the "empire of the antipodes;" but, as a scion of the British stock, it does no discredit to its origin, and bids fair to be a very giant amongst the colonial offspring of prolific Mother England. In Australia many of our poverty-stricken countrymen have found comfortable homes and sufficient wealth, and many of our adventurous countrymen have found enduring fame and honourable graves. Australia, therefore, must be a subject of interest to all Englishmen; and to them all we commend the two volumes in which Mr. Woods has, with a conscientious toil deserving of all praise, and under difficulties precluding all adverse criticism, comprised his elaborate history. There is this misfortune attendant upon a very painstaking and minute historian that he can scarcely avoid making his narrative dry; and the dryness of Mr. Woods' work is undeniable: it must be read rather for instruction than entertainment. Howbeit, there is an occasional intersprinkling of anecdote and adventure which is to the reader as occasional showers to the traveller in a thirsty land.

Paid in Full. A Novel. By Henry James Byron. (J. Maxwell and Co.) This, we believe, is Mr. Byron's maiden achievement in prose literature. It will be an agreeable surprise, probably, to the reading portion of the public who are also theatre-goers, and who have grown accustomed to regard Mr. Byron as one of our greatest punning sinners in burlesque verse; and "Paid in Full" is a retort courteous to such as may hitherto have discredited the dramatist's faculty of delivering himself in sober prose, without quip or crank. The interest in the story is sustained to the last, and the plot is worked out with no slight ingenuity. Mr. Horace Bentley, the hero, is a young gentleman whose supposed widowed mother is a music-mistress, in very straitened circumstances, residing in lodgings in Little Green-street, Soho, and who denies herself reasonable comforts in order to give her son a good education. When Master Bentley's course of tuition is completed he returns to Soho, and a Mr. Stone, a relative of Mrs. Bentley, turns up at the right moment when the question of a profession for Horace arises, and consents to pay his protegé's premium at Mr. Pinto's, a surgeon in Bloomsbury, who has an only daughter, Priscilla, and a wife who goes for nothing in the household—a foolish, weak little woman. Mr. Horace, instead of falling in love with his profession, falls in love with Priscilla, whom he clandestinely marries. Mr. Pinto shows himself less forgiving and less amenable to the pocket-handkerchief test than Mr. Turveydrop did under similar circumstances; and Horace and Priscilla, with Mrs. Pinto's best wishes, remove, under compulsion, from Bloomsbury into Little Green-street, Soho, Horace turning litterateur on miscellaneous principles. The young couple are rather pinched at first; but Horace gets a drama taken after a while, and considers his fortune fairly made. As a natural consequence of his introduction to the world of letters, he is thrown into the society of men connected with the press, of actors and actresses and hangers-on at the theatres, is initiated into the mysteries of the green-room, and becomes acquainted with a good many people who do not make him more contented with his humble house in Soho and with his wife, who has a bit of the dragon about her, and has not studied the eighth liberal science, the art of pleasing, half as well as Miss Julia Mellington, a charming young lady at the theatre where Mr. Horace's piece is performed. Mr. Horace and Miss Millington become very particular friends, much to the prejudice of Mr. Horace's domestic felicity. Eventually his wife dies, which is a severe blow to the somewhat unprincipled Horace; and the scene in which Priscilla expires is written with considerable pathos. Miss Millington is married to Crofton Batts, an eccentric Government clerk; and the hero is killed in an affray with Lord Glenburn, a vicious nobleman, whose early transgressions are at the root of this skilfully constructed narrative. Mr. Byron's book displays knowledge of character and insight into the ways and doings of certain orders of society, especially when the writer sketches scenes from the lower strata of London, and medical, literary, and dramatic life.

Hits. By Lewis Hough, M.A. (Pitman.) A collection of reprints from various popular periodicals. Some of the stories are of more than average merit; they are all written in dashing, pleasant, semi-comic style, and there seems to be no reason why they should not procure for the author the notice he courts.

The Study of the Human Face. By Thomas Woolnoth, Esq. (Tweedie.) "The present treatise," writes the author, "(submitted with so much deference to the public) would never have been contemplated had not a too partial representation of the art (physiognomy) rendered it in the same degree equivocal, if not objectionable, from having been treated hitherto so linearly and speculatively as to address itself almost as much to the fancy as the form, by separating faces from facts, and giving the science such an unfair advantage over the subject as to render it capable of comprehending more cases than were ever yet found upon the human countenance." The author can hardly be said to have given a lucid explanation of his object; indeed, his English throughout the book can scarcely lay claim to the conventional epithet "plain." For instance, he writes (p. 12), "there is also the pride of intellect, of which nothing worse need be said than that of its keeping pace with the march of it." It has been remarked that when a gentleman gets to his "its," one should tremble for him; but when he adds to his "its" an incomprehensible "that," total bewilderment is produced. However, "twenty-six full-page steel engravings," illustrating the various "linear expressions" of the face, serve to atone by their graphic clearness for the confusion of style in the written essays upon pride, deceit, envy, and other passions or qualities which stamp their characteristic lines upon the human face divine (or diabolical); and these plates are really deserving of study. Unless we misunderstand the author, he would like to have the art of physiognomy so studied that the characters of men should be discovered at once from the facial lines, and members of Parliament and other responsible dignitaries should be elected (v. p. 75) accordingly. It would, undoubtedly, be a great blessing could the line of conduct which a man would be likely under any circumstances to pursue be gathered from simply scanning his features; and, if physiognomy could be carried so far, it would be an invaluable art, far superior either to phrenology, which would render it necessary to resort to the personal offensiveness of feeling the bumps upon a fellow-creature's head, or to chirognomy, which would require you to examine the phalanges of the thumb, the spatulousness of the finger-tips, and the lines upon the palm of an individual's hand; but that which is mentioned as a fact in favour of physiognomy is surely a fatal objection to it. We are reminded (p. 4) that "in the case of Socrates, when the Athenian physiognomist remarked unfavourably of certain lines of his face, his pupils pronounced upon the fallacy of his art; when Socrates declared that its principles were nevertheless true, and that he was by nature all that the man of science described him to be;" that is to say, all the mental and moral discipline to which Socrates had subjected himself could not remove the tell-tale facial lines, indicative of passions over which the philosopher had gained the mastery. So that if the rule of physiognomy were to prevail a Socrates would be unfit for the society of noble men.

The Psychonomy of the Hand. By Richard Beamish, F.R.S., &c. (Pitman.) Chiromancy may not be so very fearful a heresy, after all: and it may be a great injustice to commit as rogues and vagabonds those who pretend to tell a "pretty lady's" fortune from the lines upon her palm. At any rate, science has taken chirognomy in hand, and, in the person of Mr. Beamish, has written a very ingenious and not uninteresting book upon the subject. The book is accompanied by thirty-one illustrations, representing the shape of the fingers and the lines upon the palms of divers persons, known and unknown, including Sir I. K. Brunel, Lord Brougham, Dr. Whewell, John Martin (the painter), and Miss Helen Faucit (Mrs. Theodore Martin). In fact, the "rule of thumb" (not exactly in the sense in which it is usually understood) is advocated by Mr. Beamish, who follows in the footsteps of MM. D'Arpentigny and Desbarolles. The superiority of the animal he places in the hand, and of the hand in the thumb. A small thumb is declared to be the index of vacillation and irresolution, as well as of an accommodating and loving spirit. A large thumb, on the contrary, is said to be the "index of a strong will and little general sympathy, in short, of the heart being in subjection to the head." There is also a great deal of significance in the phalanges (which, we suppose, is scientific for what common mortals call joints) of the thumb and of the fingers. Nor is the bent of the mind uninfluenced by the pointedness, squareness, or spatulousness of the finger tips; so that, perhaps, had the counsel for the late Herr Müller, of murderous memory, been aware of the chirognomic science, they might have advanced some theory of phonomania as efficacious as that which has obtained respecting kleptomania, whereby the culprit is allowed to commit an offence with impunity. We do not wish to throw ridicule upon Mr. Beamish's science; Sir Charles Bell has already vindicated the cause of the hand in so far as it bears witness to an harmonious design in creation, and it is possible that there may be some connection between the hand and mental development; but Sir Charles rejected that connection, and we see no reason advanced in Mr. Beamish's book to prevent our following Sir Charles's example and authority. We should as soon expect to find mental inclination or development indicated by the length of the ears (as is supposed to be the case with certain animals), by the formation of the big toe, by the pointedness of the elbows, by the prominence of the shoulder-blades, and by other protuberances which it were superfluous to mention; indeed, the negro's heel has really been considered a proof of his mental inferiority. But, whatever our own opinion or instinct may be (for we speak without scientific knowledge), Mr. Beamish has brought much research, ingenuity, and labour to his work, and therefore deserves an impartial hearing, or rather reading.

A Bit of Bread. Translated from the French and edited by Mrs. Alfred Gatty. (Saunders, Otley, and Co.) Under the quaint title of "The History of a Piece of Bread" Mrs. Gatty (interpreting Jean Macé) in a former little volume, explained, by means of a series of letters to a child, the internal structure of the human body; in the present volume she performs, in the same manner, the same office for the bodies of animals. Both volumes are to be highly commended.

Luther's Letters to Women. Collected by Dr. K. Zimmermann. Translated by Mrs. Malcolm. (Chapman and Hall.) The fame of the great Reformer is unlikely to be enhanced by this collection of letters; they might have been written (except that they are occasionally just a little coarse) by nearly anybody, but as a curiosity they will no doubt be welcome.

Lilliput Levee. (Strahan.) A charming book for children, whether they understand it all or not; for it has illustrations lifelike, graceful, quaint, and grotesque, by J. E. Millais and G. J. Pinwell.

History of the Reform Bill. By the Rev. W. N. Molesworth, M.A. (Chapman and Hall.) A deeply-interesting volume, to be read by every one who feels a love of his country, and who has not heretofore been able to make himself acquainted with the circumstances attendant upon what may without exaggeration be termed the most momentous crisis which England has passed through since the Battle of the Boyne.

Evenings in Arcadia. Edited by John Dennis. (Moxon and Co.) A fresh-toned, elegantly-written volume of pleasing criticisms upon many passages of English rural poetry, from the era of Chaucer to the present day; a more delightful companion during a solitary hour, either in summer beneath the spreading oak, or in winter by the fireside, it would not be easy to command.

The Law of Life. Translated by Harriet E. Wilkinson from the French of M. D'Espinassous. (Smith, Elder, and Co.) A study of the Lord's Prayer "as involving in its petitions the law of human association as God wills that society should be constituted." To all who are willing to regulate their lives according to that law we recommend for notice the carefully-considered comments of M. D'Espinassous.

Practical Dietary. By Edward Smith, M.D., LL.B., F.R.S. (Walton and Maberly.) The attention of heads of families and schools, and of all who take an interest in our labouring population, should be directed to this useful treatise upon the important subject of diet.

A Voyage to the Moon. (Lockwood and Co.) A fantastic story of a supposed voyage to the moon in a machine made by the two voyagers, Stephen Howard and Carl Geister. The narrative is fabled to have been "ejected from a lunar volcano," and discovered by one Chrysostom Trueman in his garden. As a history of hypothetical adventure, it is ingenious and not without the elements of amusement; whether it be entitled to notice in any other respect speculative and scientific theorists must determine.

FINE ARTS.

[SECOND AND CONCLUDING NOTICE.]

The landscape department shares the improvement observable this year in other portions of the exhibition at the time-honoured gallery in Pall-mall. Nearly all the usual contributors are represented, and by some of these, as also by newer candidates for public favour, there are a few works of more than ordinary importance.

We think the finest example of landscape art on this occasion, though not of the most novel interest—seeing that the painter has had on the same walls at least one picture nearly identical in subject and scale—is Mr. H. Dawson's large view of "London from Vauxhall" (195). Very gorgeous is the effect of this really noble work; lovely is the snowy and azure dapple of the cirrus along the summer sky; beautiful, too, is the playful chequer of responsive and harmonious reflections in the lucid river; and glowing with tones and hues of Venetian richness are the sails, and masts, and crazy woodwork of boat and barge, wharf and shed, in the foreground. We will only object that there is in this picture, though in a minor degree, a mannerism of touch from which Mr. Dawson is never entirely free. It would require more space than we can afford to attempt to explain why another very large view here of a familiar locality, and one celebrated for its picturesqueness, fails to convey the same poetical impressions, or even those of prose reality. We allude to "Hampstead Heath" (601), by Mr. J. E. Niemann. Yet the well-known clump of firs in the foreground "comes out" startlingly enough; and there is everywhere a good deal of scenic effectiveness, together with much rapidity, if not suggestiveness, of hand. Perhaps the right explanation would be that the work is almost entirely the result of studio labour. At all events, the effectiveness seems to be obtained rather from routine observation of what colours go well together on the palette than of the varied and subtle contrasts and harmonies of nature.

Widely removed in subject from the preceding are the views in Ecuador by Mr. Mignot, and the Alpine scenes by Mr. E. Walton. The first contributes a large view of those Cordilleras (179) of the South American State, part of the Andean chain, which rise into the lofty Chimborazo and the terrible volcano, the Cotopaxi; and a smaller representation of "Sunset on the Guayaquil" (558), the only river in Ecuador navigable for large vessels, though the State boasts a great portion of the mighty Amazon. Over and above the interest which attaches to the works of a painter who grapples with scenery unsurpassed in the world for the sublime vastness of all its features, these pictures have high and rare artistic merit and internal evidence of local truthfulness. The great characteristics of climate and scenery are stated with unmistakable clearness. In the large view, the glowing light of a vertical sun pervades and seems to permeate alike earth, air, and water; and the eye loses itself in the vain endeavour to pierce the sultry haze which veils with quivering purple and gold the remote and stupendous distance. The fever glow of the smaller sunset appears equally strange yet equally true. But if we still felt any doubt of Mr. Mignot's fidelity we have only to turn to his "Sunny Afternoon, Warwickshire" (69), than which nothing can be more true to the character of our modest yet lovely English pastures and the grey aerial brightness of our country skies. Mr. Walton's "Aiguille Verte, Chamounix" (299), and "Matterhorn from the Riffel" (490), with all their undeniable merits, occur to us as somewhat a mistake in point of subject. "Excelsior" should not be so literally an artist's motto. The facts of snow and ice, rock and blue-black sky, in these high altitudes, with nothing to relieve them and without distance to lend the enchantment of colour, are alone too few for picturesque purposes. They cannot be painted minutely and accurately enough for records; and, even if they could be, they could not meet with recognition; while such recollection as one can have from actual experience of the snows and skies of Alpine summits only suggest the inadequacy of the painter's pigments to the representation of their glories of ineffable white light and awful azure depths.

The duty of the critic would be even more onerous and difficult than it is, were it deemed necessary on all occasions to characterise anew the painters who, though prominent by comparative merit, year by year contribute works almost identical in treatment to this and other of our leading exhibitions. Conceiving that our task is accomplished when in such cases we perform the office simply of the reporter, we will limit ourselves to the announcement that the following well-known painters are represented—viz., Messrs. G. Cole in "Evening, the Timber Drag" (349), with the sunset effect he always gets so well; Mr. Vicat Cole, in his customary corn-field (4); Mr. Hering, with the usual amenity of his Italian views (an amenity, however, not always free from tameness), see No. 2; Mr. Frank Dillon, in his beautiful view of "Monte Pellegrino, Palermo" (96), and his spirited and artistic sketch, doubtless "on the spot," of "Grain-boats, Gizeh on the Nile" (137); Mr. Jutsum, with his genuine feeling for English landscape, in "The Cottage Homestead" (38); Mr. George Chester, with Constable-like rural charm and effectiveness—witness his "Way to the Mill, Sussex" (592), and note especially the rainy sky and capital painting of the water; Mr. J. Danby, in "Dysart, Scotland" (263), which, like the last, conveys truthful yet unlaboured impressions of natural effect; and Mr. T. Danby, in "Coming-up Glen Dovey, South Wales" (74), where the sunny haze is admirably expressed. Dulness of effect and want of interest in subject detract, as on former occasions, from much unconventional fidelity in Mr. G. Sant's view of an acclivity on the Downs of the Isle of Wight (493). Mr. Harry Johnson is not, as he has been for many years past, an exhibitor of classical subjects: he now sends a scene "On the Marshes" (161), with a striking effect of rain-cloud, and a view of "The Castle of Angera, on the Lago Maggiore" (298). The same place has supplied a subject to the younger Stanfield (110), in which the effect of much solid and honest painting is injured by the universal cold shadows, especially of the distance. This fault is not perceptible in "The Mill Bridge, Lucerne" (350), by the same, where the artist has only to deal with foreground and a near plane. The promise afforded by Mr. J. W. Oakes' landscapes of several years ago has, we regret to find, scarcely been redeemed. The sunset effect in his "Quietude" (58) appears, to us, hard and unnaturally inky. Among noteworthy landscapes not yet mentioned will be found works by Messrs. J. Peel, C. E. Johnson, J. Mogford, C. Smith, and J. V. de Fleury.

The Williams school of landscapists is not represented by any novelty, but Mr. G. A. Williams and Mr. E. Boddington have specimens of average merit, and Mr. A. Gilbert sends a moonlight scene very similar to one we not long since engraved. The well known Dutch painters, the elder and younger H. Koekkoek, exhibit some of their remarkably precise and highly-finished but rather hard and dull sea-pieces. There are other good marine paintings by J. Webb, especially "Dordrecht, Holland" (29), which is one of the best we have seen by this artist; by E. Hayes; by W. Melby; and by the veteran J. J. Wilson. But by far the finest works of this class are three small coast scenes by Mr. Cooke, R.A. One of these in particular, "French Fishing-Craft, Mouth of the Seine" (150), is an exquisite little gem. The truthfulness and picturesqueness of the great cumulus clouds are worthy of all praise.

Of subjects the interest of which centres in the representation of animals there are, besides the remarkable works by Sir Edwin Landseer and Mr. Ansdell, already reviewed, others claiming attention by Messrs. De Prades, W. H. Hopkins, F. Chaigneau, J. W. Bottomley, and T. G. Cooper. Mr. De Prades might have chosen a more stirring incident as illustrating "Travelling in Russia" (84); yet his picture is novel, and the horses are well painted. Mr. Chaigneau's "Farmyard" (412) is very sunny, and has a soundness of method, resulting from the more systematised art-education in France than in this country; yet the picture does not recommend the method very highly, for the painting is rather opaque and heavy, both in tone and touch.

Of architectural subjects there is, in addition to several views in Continental cities by Mr. L. J. Wood, a very meritorious and promising picture (293) by Mr. C. Calthrop (a name new to us) representing a cathedral interior lined with monuments, and a monk walking contemplatively along the aisle.

The first place in still-life is occupied by the picture of a dead swan, &c., by the late Mr. Duffield, with landscape background by Mr. J. Gilbert, which we engraved a few months back. A group fruit, by G. B. Haycock; another of plums, by T. Whittle and picture by W. Hughes also deserve notice.

MUSIC.

The Crystal Palace Concerts given every Saturday are becoming more and more popular. Notwithstanding the long journey to Sydenham and the severity of the season, they never fail to draw large audiences, who are not deterred by frost or snow, wind or rain, from going in search of the enjoyment they are sure to find; while the able director, Mr. Manns, encouraged by success, exerts himself more and more earnestly to deserve it. The concert of Saturday last was one of the best that have been given, as remarkable for judicious selection as for admirable performance, the programme including Beethoven's fourth symphony in B flat, played by the magnificent orchestra in a manner that could scarcely be excelled; Sterndale Bennett's pianoforte concerto in F minor, performed by Arabella Goddard, with whom it is an especial favourite; a fantasia on airs from Gounod's "Mereille," composed by Mr. Sloper and played by the same fair pianist; and Mendelssohn's imaginative overture to "Melusine." The singers were Mdme. Louisa Vinning and Mr. Coates, who gave several favourite vocal pieces. Mr. Pratten's pretty ballad, "Too Late," sung by Mdme. Vinning, was loudly encored. At the concert of to-day the famous "Walpurgis Nacht" of Mendelssohn is to be performed, for the first time, at the Crystal Palace.

The concerts of Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir have begun for the season. The first took place at St. James's Hall, on Thursday week, and was attended with the most brilliant success. A fine selection of madrigals, glees, and part-songs was admirably sung by the choir; and Miss Whytock and Mr. Cummings (in the room of Mr. Sims Reeves) sang several favourite airs. Herr Straus performed two solos on the violin in his usual masterly style. The hall was crowded to the doors.

The very great success which has attended the production of M. Maillart's "Lara" at Her Majesty's Theatre has led to a modest and gentleman-like letter from the composer to Mr. Harrison, of which the following is a translation:—

Dear Mr. Harrison,—Permit me to thank you with all my heart for the flattering zeal and intelligent care with which you have produced "Lara." I deeply regret, and shall always regret, that it was not in my power to be in London on the day when, for the first time, one of my operas was represented in England. The sympathetic favour and kindness with which the English public, whose artistic taste is so elevated, has welcomed my work touches me profoundly; and I shall never forget the generous hospitality with which the music of "Lara" has been received in the country of the great Byron.

Will you, my dear director, be the interpreter of my sentiments of gratitude to your excellent artists and to my confrère, the Maestro Arditi, your eminent chef-d'orchestre, to whom, as well as to yourself, I am indebted for a good part of the success of my work, and believe me, &c. A. MAILLART.

The committee of management of the Birmingham Festival having resolved to present a testimonial to Mr. Costa, to mark their sense of his great services, to commemorate the successful production of his oratorio, "Naaman," and to set on foot a subscription for that purpose, Mr. Costa has gracefully declined the proposition. In a letter to Mr. Oliver Mason, the chairman of the committee, Mr. Costa says:—"Fully sensible of the kind feelings entertained towards me by you, by the gentlemen of the committee, and all others connected with the festival, yet I feel that I am not justified in accepting another testimonial, for which the private purses of so many gentlemen would be taxed again. In offering to you personally my sincere thanks for the very kind way in which you made the proposition, I beg also to convey to all the gentlemen of the committee, through you, my warm acknowledgments for the intended compliment, for which I am equally grateful, and to assure them that I shall always feel happy to be connected with the distinguished body over which you preside, and through whose united and praiseworthy exertions the General Hospital derives so much benefit." The previous testimonial to which Mr. Costa alluded is that which he received on the production of "Eli."

Mr. Aguilar has resumed his excellent and successful matinées of pianoforte music. The following was the programme of the first matinée of the present series:—

Sonata in E flat—Beethoven; Christana (a romantic and dramatic piece)—Aguilar; Andante and Rondo Cappricioso—Mendelssohn; Romanzo, played by Miss Cooper (pupil of Mr. Aguilar)—Aguilar; Sonata in A minor—Aguilar; Lieder ohne Worte—Mendelssohn; The Blue Bells—Aguilar; The Promise—Aguilar; Tarantella (Miss Cooper)—Heller; Appeal (transcription)—Aguilar; War March (piano duet), Miss Cooper and Miss Aguilar—Aguilar.

The "Medea" of Cherubini, the dramatic chef-d'œuvre of that illustrious musician, is, they say, to be one of the principal novelties of this season at Her Majesty's Theatre; the heroine to be personated by Titiens. This opera has never been performed in England; the "Medea" in which Pasta used to appear with such terrible effect being the work of Mayer, an almost forgotten composer.

Mdlle. von Murska, who has recently obtained such a brilliant success at the Imperial Theatre of Vienna, may be expected this season at Her Majesty's Theatre. A leading Vienna journal, speaking of her début in "Linda di Chamouni," says:—"Mdlle. von Murska proved herself in this character a greater singer than in any previous one, and achieved an artistic triumph. Her Linda was a picture created by an artist of genius, who appeared most richly, highly, and originally endowed by nature, and who promises, when she has attained her full maturity, to fix without fail her name in the history of the German stage. The bold and dashing tones of her voice, which flowed from her lips as the notes flow from the throat of a bird, showed in no instance, despite the various interpolated pieces, the slightest sign of fatigue, and always produced an entrancing effect. The fair and accomplished artist, who, on her first appearance, was greeted with applause from all sides and honoured with the same after every air she sang, has created even a deeper impression in this part than in that of the much-praised Lucia."

Mdme. Scribe, the widow of the celebrated dramatist, has obtained an injunction against the performance, at the Théâtre Italien, of the operas "Un Ballo in Maschera," "L'Elisir d'Amore," and "La Sonnambula," on the ground that these pieces were originally from the pen of the late M. Scribe.

The Philharmonic Society of Bordeaux having requested Mdlle. Adelina Patti to sing at one of their concerts, the lady informed them that her terms were 10,000 francs (£400 sterling). What next?

Signor Felice Romani, the eminent Italian poet, and author of the dramas of "Norma," "La Sonnambula," "Lucia di Lammermoor," and other favourite operas, died a few days ago, after a short illness.

THE THEATRES.

The continued indisposition of Miss Bateman gives renewed opportunities for the Adelphi favourites to put in their appearance. Mr. Toole has appeared during the week as Stephen Digges, and Mrs. Billington in "The Flowers of the Forest." Drury Lane, the Princess's, Sadler's Wells, and the Standard have had performances in aid of the sufferers by the late fire at the Surrey Theatre. The fund for this purpose is in a flourishing state, a fact which says much for the alacrity with which the members of the histrionic profession proceed to remedy any misfortune which may happen to their poorer brethren. Great things are promised by the new lessees of the Queen's, Miss Marie Wilton and Mr. H. J. Byron. The theatre is henceforth to be called, with official sanction, "The Prince of Wales's." It is to be opened, under the new management, on Easter Monday, and, having been redecorated, will present an attractive appearance. The aim will be to attract a fashionable audience by means of new dramas and burlesques, and the talents of the lessees will be actively employed in the production and illustration of such pieces. The drama of "Milky White" has been revived at the Strand, Mr. Craven having returned to support the character of the irascible and repentant father, one of the most characteristic pieces of acting now on the stage. The revival of "Deborah" at the Grecian has commanded very large audiences, notwithstanding the unfavourable state of the weather.

A new farce, by Mr. J. P. Wooler, has been produced at the New Royalty. It is entitled "Cousin Adams." The action is somewhat extravagant. Mr. Adonis Brown (Mr. J. Robins) is anything but an Adonis, and in this particular much disappoints his uncle, Major Smith (Mr. Russell), an Indian officer, and his daughters. To such a degree their aversion extends that a fortune of £5000 a year fails to conciliate their endurance of the monster. They even proceed to suspect him of a murder reported in a newspaper. Ultimately, all turns out right; for Brown has assumed a disguise, and, on resuming his proper person, is readily accepted as a husband by Sophy Smith. Full of character and well acted, the farce secured success.

The Polytechnic Institution continues to progress with the times. It has introduced to scientific attention a discovery, which now excites considerable interest. It is that of the pneumascope, by means of which the human breath is shown on a screen. The phenomenon is explained by Professor Pepper, and the séances are attended by Mr. M. Lens Aldous, the discoverer, who undertakes to delineate the breath of any visitor by appointment.

Mr. Price has added to the attractions of his hippodrome at the Agricultural Hall by the engagement of the celebrated Blondin, who now enters the hall in a classic chariot, and, having made his bow to the circle of visitors, ascends the high rope, and walks, or runs, or sits, or lies down, with his usual ease and grace. Descending, he again resumes the car, and makes his circuit round the spacious arena. The arrangements of the hippodrome are admirable, and the artistes especially skilful. Among these are Herr Herzog and Mdme. Herzog, with their highly-trained steeds; and the daring riders Mr. John White and Mr. Frank Pastor, whose exploits, particularly those of the latter, are extraordinary. Mr. George Newcombe and his lions also deserve mention. The ring is furnished with abundance of Clowns, whose practical jokes are extremely amusing.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

Professor Tyndall, in his eighth lecture "On Electricity," delivered on Thursday, the 9th inst., continued his exposition of the principal facts of the science of electro magnetism. He began with illustrations of the methods whereby the direction of an electric current (i. e., from the positive to the negative, or the reverse) may be ascertained. He showed that the north end of a magnetic needle placed under an electric current was deflected to the east when the current flowed from north to south, and to the west when the current flowed from south to north; and that when the needle was placed above the current the deflection was always the reverse of that observed when the needle was underneath. Dr. Tyndall said that, supposing a person to swim along with the current with his face toward the needle, the direction in which the north pole of the needle moved would be that of the swimmer's left hand. The application of these facts was shown in one of Wheatstone's needle electric telegraph apparatus. Dr. Tyndall then showed how the strength of a current may be determined by comparing its power with the attractive power of the earth upon a freely suspended magnetic needle, and by other methods. He then proved, by a series of interesting experiments, that a wire helix through which the electric current flows behaves like a magnet, and has two poles and a magnetic equator; and that a core of soft iron placed within the helix has the same polarity as the helix itself. This polarity was reversed when the current was reversed. He also proved, by the aid of various ingenious apparatus devised by Faraday, De la Rive, and himself, that currents which flow in the same direction attract each other, while currents which flow in the opposite direction repel each other. He then described the theory of Ampère, that a magnet may be figured in the mind as an assemblage of molecular parallel currents, and that the magnetic attractions and repulsions are really due to the attraction and repulsion of these little currents.

On Friday evening Mr. W. Giffard Palgrave gave an account of his journey from Gaza, through the interior of Arabia, to Oman, in 1862-3, the expedition having been undertaken under the auspices of his Majesty the Emperor of the French. Having a perfect knowledge of the language, Mr. Palgrave, in the character of an Arab physician, started from Gaza, with guides, on May 27, 1862. We can only give a few notes of his progress and observations, hoping that shortly the public will have his interesting narrative in the form of a book. He crossed the desert of El Tih and its rocky gorges in four days, arriving at Maan, where he rested twelve days. He then journeyed for nineteen days in a waterless desert, without any sign of life except a few serpents and lizards; reaching, at last, the fertile and independent principality of Jebel Shomer, abounding in villages with fruitful orchards. At Hail, the capital, the King received him with much hospitality, and his professional skill was engaged by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, a negro. The people are described as liberal, tolerant, and civilised, and well versed in their own literature, the government being a mild despotism. Here Mr. Palgrave stayed six weeks, with much satisfaction. On July 8 he departed, and on the road had the good fortune of being permitted to join the friendly cavalcade of an embassy from the Shah of Persia to the Sovereign of the Wahabites. On July 13 they entered the country of the Wahabites, a fiercely orthodox, fanatical Mohammedan sect, very intolerant to other religions, and prohibiting most strictly smoking and almost all other modes of enjoyment; then ruled by a sanguinary, treacherous Regent, on behalf of his old blind father. Mr. Palgrave reached Readh, the capital, on Oct. 13, and stayed there till Nov. 25, when he and his party had to quit privately, and precipitately, for fear of being arraigned as "innovators" by an inquisitorial and arbitrary council, established to watch the morals of the people with the strictest vigilance. After a perilous journey by land, and a shipwreck on the Persian Gulf, in which the travellers lost everything, they arrived, in great destitution, at Muscat, where they were received by the Sovereign with great kindness and hospitality. When Mr. Palgrave had recovered from a severe illness produced by his protracted sufferings, he proceeded up the Persian Gulf to Bagdad, and thence to Beyrout, where he arrived on July 11, 1863. Sir Henry Holland, Bart., V.P., was in the chair.

Professor Marshall gave his fourth lecture "On the Nervous System," on Saturday last. He commenced with referring to illustrations of the homologies of the nervous system manifested in various classes of animals. He then reverted to the important influence of the nerves upon the functions of the body, dwelling especially on the sympathetic nerve, its structure and action upon the viscera, the blood vessels and heart, the glands and their secretions, the digestive organs, &c. Among other phenomena, the Professor explained the action of the sympathetic nerve in producing pallor, blushing, and tears, the watering of the mouth at the sight of food, &c. These functions are termed "vegetative."

In consequence of the lamented decease of his Grace the Duke of Northumberland, K.G., the President, no lectures have been delivered at the Institution during this week.

On Tuesday, the 24th inst., John Evans, Esq., F.R.S., will give the evening discourse, "On the Forgery of Antiquities."

The Royal Astronomical Society has this year awarded its gold medal to Professor Bond.

The directors of the Bombay and Baroda Railway have selected Charles Currey, Esq., superintendent of the Great Northern, as the manager-in-chief of their line.

An account of the gross public income and expenditure of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in 1864 was published on Monday. The total revenue in the year ending 31st December last was £70,125,374. The total ordinary expenditure was £67,163,404. The balances in the Exchequer on the 31st of December, including £100,000 of the money raised for fortifications, amounted to £6,580,922.

The following letter on percentages to servants has been addressed by the Duke of Sutherland to a West-End firm:—"Stafford House, Jan. 26.—Sir,—It has come to my knowledge that the custom of giving percentages on the amount of tradesmen's bills, or other equivalent perquisites, very generally prevails. I wish, therefore, to direct your attention specially to the subject, with a view to its discontinuance—so far, at least, as my establishment is concerned. This practice is alike unfair to the master and to the servant—unfair to the master because, to enable the tradesman to pay this tax, he must add the amount to the price charged for his goods; and unfair to the servant, inasmuch as it places a temptation constantly in his way. Viewed in this light, it can only be looked upon as a custom which every right-minded tradesman will willingly aid in abolishing; and, therefore, I have resolved to dismiss from my service any servant who may in future be detected receiving percentages or an equivalent. Nor will I afterwards obtain goods from the tradesman who gives them.—SUTHERLAND."

A correspondent of the Morning Post, writing on the 2nd ultimo from Oil City, Pennsylvania, says:—"Five years ago the whole population of the Oil Creek Valley, from one end to the other, could not possibly number 800 people; now there are not less than 20,000, all actively employed, and all making money. If there are any poor people in that neighbourhood they never crossed my path. Every man I saw seemed to have plenty of money, and used it freely. The scarcity of the female element among the population is very marked, and strikes the visitor at first as being very odd, but after a while its absence ceases to be noticed. When a woman is by chance found in a cottage stuck among the hills or in one of the houses in a creek village, the traveller wonders what she is doing there. As for children, they are entirely out of the question, although the mud and grease would make it a paradise for a genuine boy."——"If," says the New York Times, "the oil region of Pennsylvania is worthy of the title of Petrolia, then is the corresponding section of Canada West entitled to the designation of Oleagena. During the past three or four years millions of gallons of oil of various qualities have been taken from its ground, either through the medium of flowing wells or by the ordinary pumping process. So enormous was the yield at one period, and of so little mercantile value, the uses of the oil not being known, that Black Creek was covered to the depth of from two or three feet with the crude article from flowing wells."

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

THE widest institution of negro slavery has been formally abolished by a constitutional amendment passed in the Congress of the United States. Ten years since such an announcement would have set all civilisation in a blaze of triumph. The whole world would have rung with the glorious news. Many of us remember the excitement in England when the West Indian slaves were emancipated. We take things more coolly nowadays. The shackles are stricken off the limbs of four millions of Africans! but the gratifying intelligence only fills a line of a telegram. It appears that Mr. Reuter (to whom the world owes more than—stupid and ungrateful world as it is—it is aware of) has formed himself into a company (limited). There could not be a grander inauguration of a new company than this message flashed across the wires that the negroes in America are henceforth to be free! Concurrently with this good news comes a significant paragraph to the effect that a coloured lawyer has been permitted to plead before the Supreme Court of the United States. Progress is evidently making rapid strides in America. When I was in Washington (for my sins), exactly a year ago, I remember a coloured army surgeon, holding the relative rank of Major, being turned neck and crop out of a street railway car by the conductor for the offence of wishing to ride with white folk.

Everything seems to be on the limited principle just now. Cramer and Beale's, the musicsellers in Regent-street, have become limited; so have Brill's Brighton Baths, so has the Divan Restaurant, in the Strand. Ever active and enterprising, Mr. Blanchard Jerrold purposes, I see by a prospectus, to write a book on this favourite "platform." The scheme is limited, but the work itself may be enlarged to illimitable proportions. Mr. Jerrold undertakes to organise an inquiry into the condition of the poor of Europe. To do, in fact, for the unfortunates of Belgium, Holland, Germany, Italy, Spain, Portugal, Greece, and Turkey that which, as Commissioner for the Morning Post, he has already done for the destitute of London and Paris. Lords Brougham and Ingestre are on the committee for carrying out this great work, which, it is calculated, may be accomplished in five years.

Take ten, Mr. Jerrold, while you are about it. How long was John Howard occupied in his investigations into the state of the prisons and lazarettos of Europe? The Caxton Printing and Publishing Company (Limited) are to undertake the mechanical part of the work. "It is much!" as David Garrick said (while he was shaving) to the aspirant for dramatic fame who wanted to play Hamlet.

Two remarkable balance-sheets claim the attention of charitable financiers this week. One, it is true, relates to a national calamity, the other to a purely local misfortune; one is a finished picture, the other a mere sketch; but both are very forcibly eloquent as to our English mode of doing things. The fund raised for the relief of the sufferers by the Indian mutiny of 1857-8 shows a balance of over £200,000. Think of that, Cousin Jonathan; a million of dollars! Think of that, "Mossoo;" five millions of francs! That is number one. Balance-sheet number two give an amount of over £1000 subscribed since the 30th of January last in aid of the poor pantomimists who lost, not only their employment, but their clothes, by the destruction of the Surrey Theatre. This last subscription-list is being daily augmented, his Royal Highness the Prince being among the most recent and the most generous donors. Surely, in the face of such figures, we can afford now and then to be called "phlegmatic," and "perfidious," and "a nation of shopkeepers."

The committee for erecting by penny subscriptions a monument to William Shakspeare on Primrose-hill are quietly but steadily pursuing their useful labours, and the pennies and shillings are, I am told, flowing in apace. It may help an honest, unostentatious monument to state that the head-quarters of the committee are at St. John's-gate, Clerkenwell, and that Mr. G. Linnæus Banks is one of the secretaries. A day or two since an unknown lady did me the great honour to ask for my autograph. I sent it, of course; but took the liberty of asking if she would grant me a favour in return by sending a shilling's worth of postage-stamps to the Shakspeare Monument Committee at St. John's-gate. I hope with all my heart she will; and it would be a very good thing if men of letters more celebrated than the subscriber would, when acceding to the countless demands of autograph hunters, append such a request as mine to their reply.

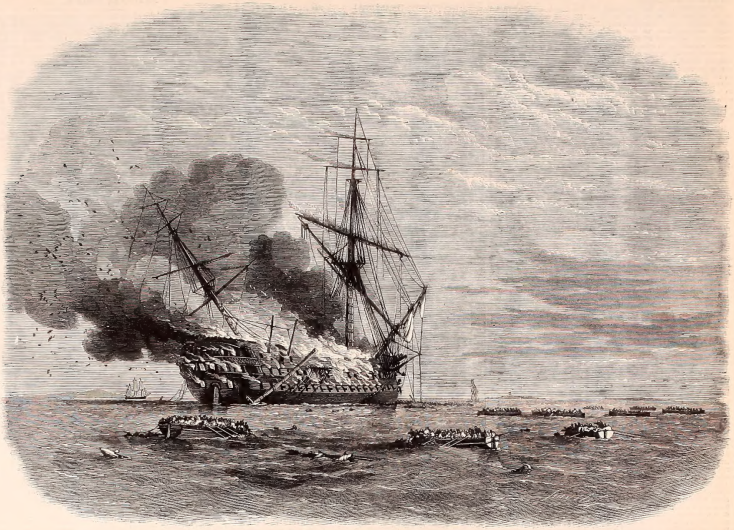
I was talking lately to a distinguished member of the original Shakspeare committee (how devoutly thankful I am that, as a member of that committee, I was thousands of miles away when they fell out, for I should have been sure to have fallen out with somebody on one side or the other!); and, by his showing, we may hope some day to see a statue of Shakspeare erected on the Thames Embankment, close to the Temple, and over against Bankside. If you will take the trouble, "Subscribers from the First," to search your back volumes of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, you will find that this same site was first suggested in this same column when the original Shakspeare Committee was in its infancy. But is there not even a better locale for a Shakspearean statue to be found in the very heart of the metropolis? and might not such a statue be erected some of these days, when Mr. Gladstone finds himself with a surplus with which he does not know what to do? The locality I mean is the quadrangle of the British Museum. Against the appropriateness of such a site there would be but few objections urged. Where could Shakspeare be so much at home as among the bookworms and the scholars? But there is another plea to be urged in favour of the Museum quadrangle: there it would be, so to speak, under guard of the poet's admirers. The Museum is, on certain days, free enough in all conscience; but a statue in its courtyard would be safe from the outrages of wanton and blackguard boys.

Whatever could that gentleman by the name of Sabine have been about, who, in a letter this week to the Times, has ventilated perhaps the most practically ingenious notion that has been made public for a dozen years. Why on earth didn't he patent his notion, and sell his interest therein for fifty thousand pounds "right away," unless, indeed, he preferred a comfortable royalty of five thousand per annum for life? But what is the notion? It is to construct safes of a circular form, like stoves, and place them on a pivot on which they may revolve. Would not that baffle the burglars? No purchase—no possibility of getting the safe in a "tight place." The revolving safe should, of course, be set in the middle of the shop, else thieves might jam a stay between it and the wall, and so arrest its revolutions. Was there not a monitor suggested with a revolving turret, which at the mere touch of a cannon-ball should spin round? Mr. Sabine's notion is not the less most sensible; but only imagine a man throwing it away in the columns of a newspaper, in these days when the slides of pencil-cases and the ferrules of parasols are patented!

More "last words of Mr. Baxter," in re the vexed question of safes. It has been assumed that the American safes surpass ours in security. I happened to be glancing lately through Bartlett's "Dictionary of Americanisms," and I find that the cant name for a first-class burglar is a "patent safe operator." The way of the world! Honest science makes a step in advance, and criminal science makes two to meet it.

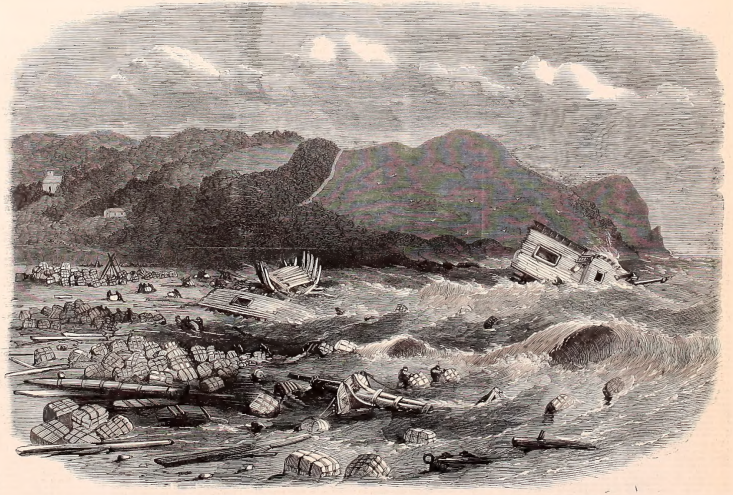
The "curiosities of murder" would make a disagreeable but an interesting book. Only the other day, just before the German Köhl was hanged, a photographer was sent for and the carte de visite of the condemned convict was taken for transmission to his father in Germany. On the principle of "if preachee, preachee; if floggee, floggee; no both," the wretched man might have objected to being focussed as well as hanged. But here is a queerer curiosity at the Clerkenwell Police Court. There is a dispute as to the identity of the man Mogni Gregorio or Gregorio Mogni, who, by a quasi confession, is in custody for the Saffron-hill murder, for which Seraphino Pelezzioni was to have suffered on Wednesday. Something is said about a man with moustaches and no beard. The prisoner is bearded. The magistrate asks him if he has any objection to be shaved. He replies that he has not the slightest objection. A barber is sent for, the Court waits for the operation, and the prisoner comes back with a smooth chin from the gaoler's room. His being shaved does not, however, help the question at issue much.

A preface has been called by a great Italian writer la salsa del liber—"the salt of the book." Seldom, perhaps, has there been written a more pungent little preface than that prefixed to Mr. Augustus Mayhew's "Faces for Fortunes." "There is no sound in the world," says Mr. Mayhew, "so beautiful as the laughter of women. In the hope of increasing it this book was written."



THE CITY OF MONTEVIDEO, URUGUAY, SOUTH AMERICA.

THE CITY OF MONTEVIDEO, SOUTH AMERICA.



THE city of Montevideo, the capital of the Republic of Uruguay, or, more properly, the Banda Oriental del Uruguay (right shore of the Uruguay River), is situated on the northern shore of the estuary of the great River de la Plata, into which the Uruguay flows, opposite to Buenos Ayres, which lies on the southern shore of the La Plata. The site of Montevideo is a gentle elevation at the extremity of a small peninsula, surrounded by a strong wall mounted with guns, and further defended by a citadel or castle, with bulwarks and batteries. The houses are generally well built, of one story, flat roofed, and floored with brick. There are no public buildings that deserve notice, except the cathedral, which is rather a handsome structure of stone, though inconveniently situated. There is also an edifice which combines the uses of a Townhall and a prison. The harbour is shoal, having only from 14 ft. to 19 ft. of water; but, as the bottom is very soft, vessels are not much damaged if they get aground; the harbour is, however, exposed to the south-westerly winds, which blow right into it, causing a good deal of sea. In front of the harbour, at no great distance, are several small islands, which are used as stations by the foreign fleets. The population of the city is forty or fifty thousand; their chief trade is in hides, tallow, and dried or jerked beef: the imports consist principally of English manufactured goods and various articles for the consumption of the people in the interior of South America. The climate is healthy, though moist; the soil of the neighbouring country is fertile, but very little cultivated, affording pasture to immense herds of horses and cattle.

THE BURNING OF H.M.S. BOMBAY, OFF MONTEVIDEO.

THE court-martial held on board the Victory, at Portsmouth, to inquire into the circumstances under which the Bombay was destroyed by fire, off Montevideo, on Dec. 22, with the loss of nearly a hundred lives, came to a conclusion last Monday, having sat five days and examined a large number of witnesses. The officers composing this court were Rear-Admiral Dacres (the president), Captain F. Scott, Captain Astley Key, Captain G. P. Hornby, Captain H. Caldwell, Captain G. W. Preedy, Captain J. Seccombe, and Captain R. Lacy. The inquiry, as usual in all cases of the loss of one of her Majesty's ships, took the form of a trial of the commanding officer, Captain Colin Campbell, for not having prevented the disaster and saved the ship intrusted to his care. Captain Campbell, however, when all the witnesses had been examined, being then called upon for his defence, submitted that the evidence had been of that character which did not necessitate from him a defence either of his own conduct or that of his officers and crew. He trusted the Court would recognise the readiness with which every information had been furnished by himself and all his officers and men, and their desire that the mysterious origin of the calamity should be discovered if possible. He instanced the destruction by fire, in 1806, of his Majesty's ship Queen Charlotte, 100, when all the crew, save 157 men, were lost; and that of his Majesty's ship the Ajax, 74, which was burnt in like manner, in 1807, when 250 of her crew were lost. The disaster to the Bombay, though, unfortunately, not without parallel in the records of the Navy, was marked by a heroism and an order and discipline on the part of the officers and crew which had never been surpassed. It devolved upon him, in the cause of himself and those whom he had the honour to command, to declare they were unconscious of any act of negligence to which the fire could be attributed.

The following was the judgment of the Court:—"That there is no evidence by which the origin of the fire can be traced; that Captain Colin Campbell and all the surviving officers and ship's company are to be acquitted of blame; that after the fire was discovered all efforts were made to subdue it, but they proved unavailing, in consequence of the extremely complete state of the ventilation of the ship causing the fire to gain ground with extraordinary rapidity; that the ship was not abandoned till all hopes of saving her were at an end and the officers and crew forced overboard by the flames; that the steadiness and discipline displayed and maintained, under the very trying circumstances, were extremely creditable to the captain, officers, and ship's company; and that the saving of such a large number of the ship's company was mainly due to the foresight with which the preparations were made and the promptitude with which the boats were hoisted out; that the said Captain C. A. Campbell and the surviving officers of the ship's company are hereby fully acquitted of all blame accordingly. The Court cannot separate without calling attention to the mode of ventilating the spirit-room in her Majesty's late ship Bombay, whereby easy access was afforded by fire to the spirit-room, and they are of opinion that every precaution should be taken to secure the spirit-room against such access. The Court consider it a duty to call the attention of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to the many instances of heroism and devotion exhibited by the officers and men in the numerous cases that have been mentioned in these proceedings, and that the example set by all the officers must have contributed largely to the saving of so many lives."

The President then returned their swords to Captain Campbell, to Commander Wilson, the second in command, and to the other commissioned officers. They thanked the Court, and retired.

The whole number of those who escaped with life from the Bombay was fifty commissioned or non-commissioned officers, and 525 sailors and marines. They were most kindly treated by the officers and men of the French and Italian ships of war lying at Montevideo, before they were embarked in the Brazilian and River Plate steamer Herschel, which brought them to Liverpool about a fortnight ago. We published in our Number of Jan. 28 an Engraving of the Bombay as she appeared when last at Plymouth; we now give an Illustration of the terrible scene of the 22nd of December, from a sketch with which we have been favoured by one of the officers of that unfortunate ship.

WRECK OF THE ASSAYE EAST INDIAMAN.

THIS splendid homeward-bound Indiaman, built at Bombay, in 1856, as a paddle-steamer, for the Indian Government, but latterly belonging to Messrs. C. De Bourke and Co., went ashore in Ross Bay, near Galley Head, on the south coast of Ireland, during the heavy gale on the night of Saturday, the 28th ult., and went to pieces on the Sunday evening. There was but one life lost, but an immense destruction of property, as the whole of the cargo, consisting of cotton, wool, jute, and flax seed, valued at upwards of £250,000, was strewed along the coast for miles. The Assaye had experienced heavy gales for a week before, and, by the captain's reckoning, she was fifty miles off the land when she encountered this terrific storm, in which she carried away the truss of her mainyard. In consequence of this damage, the ship would not obey her helm when the captain attempted to wear her, on first sighting the land; and she soon drove ashore upon an iron-bound coast. The commander was drowned whilst endeavouring to get ashore with a line in order to save the rest of his crew. He had actually landed on the point of rock where she first struck, but was almost immediately washed off by a tremendous sea, and never seen afterwards. The remainder of the crew, forty-eight in number, were saved by means of the rocket apparatus, most admirably worked by the coastguard, assisted by some of the country people. The Assaye, up to this time, had had a most favourable voyage, having left Bombay on Nov. 11. She had on board the mails and despatches from St. Helena, whence she sailed on Dec. 15; and these have been all lost. About half the cotton and one hundred bales of wool have been saved, but in a damaged state; the remainder of the cargo and the ship herself are a total loss, but, being fully insured at Lloyd's and at the several marine offices in London, Liverpool, Manchester, and Glasgow, the loss will fall upon the underwriters.

His Royal Highness the Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief held a levée on Wednesday.

Lord De Ros has been appointed to the Colonelcy of the 4th Hussars, and Lieutenant-General Sir J. Hope Grant to the Colonency of the 9th Lancers.

The Duke of Somerset will hold levées for the reception of officers of the Royal Navy and Marines on Thursdays, Feb. 23, and March 2, 9, and 16, at half-past two o'clock each day.

The Cadmus, screw-corvette, Captain Alexander C. Gordon, left Plymouth on Wednesday week for the North American and West Indian station; and on the same day the Megæra (6), iron screw troop-ship, Captain M. P. Dunn, left Plymouth for the Mediterranean, with supernumeraries.

Admiral Edhem Pacha and the officers of the Imperial Ottoman squadron at Portsmouth were entertained, last week, by Admiral Sir Michael Seymour, G.C.B., Port Admiral and Naval Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, at a ball at the Admiralty House. Admiral Edhem Pasha and the officers of the Turkish fleet on Wednesday evening gave a ball on board his Imperial Ottoman Majesty's screw line-of-battle ship Kossova to the military and naval officers of the port and garrison, and the élite of the inhabitants of the town and neighbourhood.

General Sir James W. Sleigh, K.C.B., Colonel of the 9th Lancers, died on Sunday last, at Hamville House, Middlesex, in his eighty-fourth year. General Cobbe, Colonel Commandant of the 13th Brigade of Royal Artillery, died on Wednesday week, at Brompton, aged eighty-three. Lieutenant-Colonel Park Percy Nevill, military knight, died on the 6th inst., at his residence, in the Castle-yard, Windsor. Lieutenant-Colonel Eyres, late of the Grenadier Guards, died on Wednesday week, at Kingston-on-Thames, aged sixty-four. Admiral Sir Henry Byam Martin, K.C.B., died at Genoa, on the 9th inst., aged sixty-one.

The committee of the school-frigate Conway, anchored in the Mersey, have received a letter from Colonel Phipps to the effect that her Majesty has desired him to intimate her appreciation of the success of the institution, and also her desire to place at the disposal of the committee the annual sum of £50, to be accorded as prizes to the boys educated at this establishment. Her Majesty's desire is stated by Colonel Phipps to be "to assist in encouraging those principles which may best qualify the boys of this school to become hereafter officers of the Royal Naval Reserve, and thus attach themselves to her Majesty's service, and to facilitate the entry into the Royal Navy of boys who shall be fortunate enough in honourable competition to obtain the cadetships offered to them by the Board of Admiralty."

THE FARM.

THE long-threatened snow and frost have fairly invested England and Scotland at last; and the Highland Railway has been so completely blocked that the traffic, passengers, and mail-bags have been all sent round by Aberdeen. It took nearly a thousand men to clear the line. One train was so drifted up that nothing was visible but the funnel of the engine.

We are glad to see that Mr. Luke Christy, a well-known breeder, writing to a contemporary from Ireland on the same day that we spoke of it, urges on the directors of the Islington Hall the necessity of having a bull show every spring. We should, however, like to see it confined to yearling bulls of all breeds, whereas he seems to advocate all ages. Some letters lie before us, all in the same strain—"Where am I to go to pick a bull?" "I want a red one, of about fourteen months, with as little white on it as possible;" and so on. The on dit in Yorkshire is that, perhaps, after all, the Booth herd will most probably not be sold, but remain with Mr. Thos. Booth at Warlaby—a consummation most devoutly to be wished. We hear that Mr. Martin's celebrated "crossbred" roan ox, which won in its class at Christmas, was sold for £65 to the butcher; and that the gold-medal ox of Mr. Kirkham, which was purchased for 70 gs. and raffled at 100 gs., found its way at last to Smithfield, and was led to the block for £38. Tambourine 2nd, the well-known Hereford winner, was sold last week for £6 less; but he must be pretty tough by this time. Captain Spencer will hold a sale of shorthorns at Althorp, on March 29, the day preceding his Rugby one.

Last week was essentially one of meetings and deputations. The anti-malt-tax men held a very large one at Freemasons' Tavern, and stormed the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the following day. One paper states that the room was previously filled by some backstair influence; but, be that as it may, the whole scene can only find a parallel in Elijah Pogram's le-vee. "'We will request you, Sir, if you please,' said Buffum, laying hands on Mr. Pogram as if he were taking his measure for a coat, 'to stand up, with your back agin the wall, right in the farthest corner, that there may be more room for our fellow-cit-izens. If you could set your back slap agin that curtain-peg, Sir, keeping your left leg everlastingly behind the stove, we should be fixed quite slick.' Mr. Pogram did as he was told, and wedged himself into such a little corner that the Pogram statue wouldn't have known him."

Mr. Joshua Fielden then proceeded to tell him that "the pressure of the duty was exactly 100 per cent," or the difference between the bushel of barley and malt; and that "beer was necessary to make a man strong and active, a good labourer, and a good citizen." Mr. Cayley said that the beer which now cost 4d. a quart in the public-house, would, if brewed at home, without a malt tax, only cost 1d.; or that the artisan consumer in public-houses now paid 400 per cent extra. Mr. Baldwin stated that "the raising of five millions by the malt tax cost the country twenty millions," and handed in a paper to prove it. Mr. W. Biddell argued "that the less crop of barley, whether measured by the bushel per acre or by the gallons of beer it would yield, came to more money than a larger crop in consequence of the operation of the malt tax, because they could not farm high without deteriorating the quality of the produce." Mr. H. Osborne considered that the effect of the tax was to cause farmers to alter their rotation, and grow spring wheat instead of barley. Mr. Everett spoke to the point of the duty adding 70 per cent to the price of barley on turning it into malt, and 100 per cent to the price of malt, and stated that the soberest cottagers brew their own beer; and Mr. Lattimore added that the tax was decimating the quantity of stock in the country, and that beer was frightfully drugged. The Chancellor deferred his defence, "not out of any disrespect, but under the pressure of physical necessity."

The Bath and West of England Society has decided to go to Salisbury in 1866, and will occupy a larger area than that appropriated to The Royal in 1857, when John o' Groat, Rose of Athelstane, Great Mogul, and Nobbie Noble were such prominent winners. The society has now a funded capital of nearly £5000, and a plant not worth very much short of £3000; and the exhibition of implements at work in the fields will be made a much greater point than heretofore.

The Fowler testimonial is not to take the shape of a statue, but of a charitable institute for labourers, in which those who have been injured in working with steam engines or other agricultural implements are to have the preference. His loss has been not merely a national one, but one to the world at large, as the result of steam cultivation through his energy in India and Egypt has been most marvellous. Lord Kinnaird, who had travelled 500 miles from Rossie Priory, in Perthshire, to be at this meeting, said that he could safely assert that "he never knew a more zealous, noble-hearted, and truly Christian man."

His Lordship presided at the meeting which was held last week to protest against the restrictions as to the time of travelling on the high road which have been put upon locomotives. To prevent them travelling until after dark would, as the deputation pointed out to Sir George Grey, deprive them of half their usefulness; in fact, they are really more dangerous to horses by night than by day. Mr. James Howard observed that by sending a man on one hundred yards in advance all danger was prevented; and certainly, seeing that horses have to face trains day after day, running close by the side of the road, it is strange that these locomotives should be made such a bugbear of by the magistracy. A committee has been appointed to draw up a code of rules for their guidance in future, and to submit them to the Hom Secretary, who met the deputation in the frankest spirit.

Meyerbeer has left a valuable musical library, which has been deposited in the Royal Library of Berlin, to be preserved there till the coming of age of his grandson, to whom Meyerbeer in his will left this rare collection, on condition of his devoting his life to the study of music.

The Italia of Turin announces that the Empress Eugénie has just lost, before the Supreme Tribunal of Madrid, a trial which had lasted some years. Her Majesty claimed the inheritance of the countship of Miranda and the immense estates attached to the title, but the Malpica family also alleged its rights, and gained a decision in its favour.

The Moniteur de l'Armée states that the grave of one of Fernando Cortez's companions in arms has been discovered in a convent situated between Yanhuitlan and Etla, in the State of Oajaca, Mexico. The following is a translation of the inscription in the Spanish language on the monument:—"Here rests the body of Don Manoel Nuno, Captain of the Guards of his very high and very powerful lord the Marquis del Valle, Governor of Mexico and Commander of the King's forces in this part of the world, died the 18th of July, 1544."

The Austrian Government has made a beginning in the way of orthographical reform, by issuing an ordinance in reference to the spelling of the French word "gendarme," which has been adopted into German. It formed the subject of a Parliamentary interpellation put by a member, Dr. Schindler, to the Ministry the other day. He inquired how it was that in all official documents the word was spelt "gendarme;" and the reply of the Ministry was that the use of the superfluous unpronounced sybillants in this word had been expressly forbidden in all State papers for the future.

A letter from Nice contains an account of the annual performance given by Baroness Vigier (Sophie Cruvelli), in the Italian Theatre there, for the benefit of the poor. The Baroness appeared in "Norma," and sang the part with all the perfection of her best days. Although the prices of admission were quintupled, the receipts of the night amounted to 15,418f., or about 3000f. more than in each of the years 1862-3-4. The total sum thus raised for the poor by this lady during the four years of her residence at Nice amounts to 52,909f.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

IT is, indeed, "the winter of our discontent" with sportsmen, and no amount of skating will solace them. All the packs have been kept at home for more than a week, and the Brougham and Whinfell coursers have returned to the place whence they came, after taking nothing but cold hands and blue noses by their motion. The last good thing we hear of was on a by-day with the Pytcheley, on Thursday, when the hounds ran very hard and well earned their fox. For the first time since the "Crimean winter" of '55 the Waterloo meeting had to be postponed; and if they are not able to run off a course this week all the nominations will have to be reissued and all bets will be void. Of the present sixty-four entries forty-three are English, fourteen Scotch, and seven Irish, and among them are King Death, Rainbow and Calabaroona—the winners of the three prizes of last year; Chloe, the cup winner, and Glendower, the purse-winner, in '63; and Rebe, who has run up twice. Mr. Gibson stood on Clasper; Mr. Steel, on Scots Grey; Mr. Spinks, on Sea Chief; Mr. Campbell, on Coodareena; and Mr. J. Jardine, on Bonus. Calabaroona was drawn against Bonnie Venture, and King Death against Henchman, and Rebe against Grecian Girl; and supposing both Calabaroona and Rebe to get through their three first courses, they will meet for the tug of war in the fourth. Mr. Jardine's Bonus, the second favourite, is drawn against Schweppe, and Rainbow against Sultana. At the Knotty Ash sale, the second-season Sea Belle was bought in, we believe, at 22 gs.; and the first-season Seaman at 23 gs.

Accident and Blackdown, 510 gs. each; and Greenland, 210 gs., were sold at Tattersall's on Monday; and so was Myrtle, 260 gs., who joins the new stud at Clumber. The sale of the trio had a peculiar interest, as their late owner is "wanted" under a warrant from the Southwark Police Office. The police description is voted most accurate; and he is, it seems, a magistrate of Sussex. Lord Zetland is hovering between 10 and 12 to 1 for the Chester Cup. Chattanooga's supporters feel convinced that he doesn't "talk;" while his critics, being driven out of that position in a measure, will have it that he gallops with his head too much in the air. Broomielaw and The Oppressor come stealing up side by side from the rear rank; and, on the strength of his looks (Captain White has always said that he reminded him most of Pantaloon), Archimedes has supporters at 20 to 1, and Longdown is returned at 200 to 6. A French confederacy is announced between Baron Nivière and M. C. Lafitte; and the Emperor gives £4438 towards French racing this season.

Klarikoff is the most noted racehorse victim of fire during the last few years, and Zambesi has now had an escape. He stood in the same stable with Student, a very heavily-engaged two-year-old; The Primate, a very promising son of St. Albans; and Ellen Middleton, the dam of Wild Dayrell. This mare is, we believe, in foal to St. Albans, and at his paddocks again. Thormanby is full; and Stockwell has fifteen, and Macaroni twenty, as his portion of the Hooton mares.

The price of hunters seems steadily to rise. At Sir Richard Sutton's sale, in the December of '55, nine averaged 325 gs; the highest price was 360 gs., and that was thought alarming. At Sir Watkin Wynne's sale three averaged £483, and one of them—Cassio—was bought by Mr. Joseph Anderson for 620 gs. At Lord Stamford's, twenty-eight in the "long stable," at all prices, from 520 gs. to 100 gs., averaged 303 gs.; and seventy-three hacks and hunters 192 gs. each—three of them going at 500 gs. and upwards. However, it was left for the late Mr. John Anderson's executors to overtop every one, as the thirty-eight hunters just averaged 240 gs.; and three of them—Harkover by Harkaway, Buccaneer (pedigree unknown), and Louth by Sir William—nearly 607 gs. The highest price, 620 gs., was given for Buccaneer, by Mr. Bristowe. Harness horses fetched immense prices; a bay pair—Plantagenet and Pembroke—were bought at 470 gs. by Mr. Sheward, who is to keep on the establishment; Colonel Hay gave 540 gs. for a pair of small browns, Starch and Undergraduate; and Lord Cardigan 520 gs. for another pair of browns, Brutus and Cassius. The grey riding horse Echo—a marvellous stepper—made 600 gs.; and the result of the three days sale was 20,898 gs., or an average of more than 194 gs. for 107 horses. The highest harness horse price was 370 gs. for Marvel. Horsedealers came from every part of the kingdom, and there were also some officials connected with the Imperial stables of France. The late Mr. Anderson, who died very suddenly, was quite at the head of his profession, and has for many years been assisted by Mr. Sheward.

The Cairo races, recently run, are described by the local journals as a great success. The Viceroy was present, as well as about 3000 persons of the first respectability in the city. The Minister's Prize—a silver cup—was won by Mr. Smart's English mare, Rosebud; four ran. The Grand Egyptian Prize (£500) for native or Eastern horses, was carried off by Prince Halim's Hamdam Simri; seventeen ran. The Viceroy's Grand Prize (£300) was won by Mr. Hutchison's Arab-Perse mare Aloize, beating eight others. The Commercial Cup (silver) was won by Mr. Smart's Village Belle beating two others. The Amateurs' Cup, worth £120, was carried off by Mr. Beyerle's English horse Satan, beating four competitors; and the Consolation Stakes (£100) by Mr. Smart's Al-Cissi, beating twenty-four others. The English horses showed a marked superiority, having to carry considerably more weight—in one case as much as three stone additional.

THE EXPLORATION OF VANCOUVER ISLAND.—In May last an expedition was formed to obtain better knowledge of the interior of this island, and also with a view to the discovery of agriculture, land, and minerals. Mr. Frederick Whymper, who was attached to this expedition, has forwarded to this country a summary of discoveries. The expedition started from Victoria on the 7th of June in her Majesty's gun-boat Grappler, and commenced its work at the Great Cowichan Lake, returning by the same vessel from Nanaimo on the 21st of October. They crossed the island in several directions, and made lateral deviations at numerous points, passing altogether over 1340 miles of new country, and exploring, in a tolerably complete manner, the southern half. Of this distance, nearly 600 miles was travelled on foot, more than 700 by canoe, and the remainder by rafts. In the discovery of minerals the expedition met with great success, finding almost immediately valuable veins of copper, apparently inexhaustible in extent; gold was found on all bars of the Cowichan River up to three cents per pan, with indications of richer diggings; and this was followed by the discovery of very rich ironstone in large quantities. In the neighbourhood of the Cowichan River they found open tracts of agricultural land, from 300 to 500 acres in extent, ready for the plough; in other districts yet larger spaces; and altogether many thousand acres. Traces of nickel and plumbago were met with; but probably the most valuable of all the discoveries was that of bituminous coal on the coast, close to deep water, and the outcropping of which showed a seam more than a foot in thickness. Many tracts were thinly wooded with scattered maple from twelve to twenty inches in diameter, and others more heavily with forests of the most magnificent spars of Douglas, hemlock, and white pine, the latter, from its rarity on the coast, being of great value. Dr. Brown, the leader of the expedition, discovered an entirely new pine; and they brought down to Victoria, for carving purposes, a fine log of arbutus, which in the interior attains to considerable dimensions. To quote words of Dr. Brown, "the spars and lumber alone, with their capabilities of being floated to the sea, would prove a certain fortune to any man with capital enough to buy an axe and a grindstone." Many edible wild fruits were found, and a large collection of interesting seeds was made. Of the larger kinds of animals, they saw and shot deer and elk, the latter being in great droves; bears, beavers, and wolves were very numerous; martens and raccoons were also plentiful; grouse and wild ducks are described as being found to any extent. The number of lakes in the interior is very considerable; at one place, from Comox at Aberni, a chain of seven reach nearly across the island—the largest of these is twenty-two miles in length. On Barclay Sound two rivers yielded good prospects of gold, paying at the rate of two or three dollars per man per day, and which, if worked by the usual machinery, would yield a much larger extent. The most important of the discoveries, in its immediate effect on the colony, was the finding of gold on the Sooke and Leech rivers. This almost depopulated Victoria for a time, and, within a few weeks of being known, these diggings had yielded 40,000 dollars, the Government alone receiving £900 from the sale of licenses. The gold from these rivers sold at 20 dollars per ounce. Towards the end the expedition experienced considerable hardships from being imperfectly supplied with provisions, and near Barclay Sound had a narrow escape from coming to grief, owing to the recent chastisements of the Indians in that part by some of our gun-boats. They, however, happily escaped all accidents, and arrived in safety at Victoria, having in their discoveries surpassed their expectations.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

LADY PORTMAN.

The Right Hon. Emma, Lady Portman, who died on the 8th inst. at Bryanston, the family seat, near Blandford, in Dorsetshire, was the third daughter of Henry, second Earl of Harewood, by his wife, Henrietta, eldest daughter of Lieutenant-General Sir John Saunders Sebright, Bart., and was aunt of Henry Thynne, fourth and present Earl of Harewood. Her Ladyship was born March 16, 1809, and married, June 16, 1827, Edward Berkeley, present Lord Portman, by whom she leaves issue four sons and two daughters. Her Ladyship was sister of the Countess of Sheffield and of Lady George Henry Cavendish, and was long attached to the Court of her Majesty, having been up to her death an extra Lady of the Bedchamber to the Queen.

GENERAL SIR EDWARD NICOLLS, K.C.B.

This venerable officer, who died at his residence, 3, Woodland-terrace, Blackheath, on the 5th inst., was the son of Jonathan Nicolls, Esq., surveyor of Excise at Coleraine, Ireland, by his wife, Miss Cuppage, daughter of the Rev. Burke Cuppage, Rector of Coleraine. He was born at Coleraine, in 1779, and was educated at the grammar-school of that town and at the Royal Park Academy, Greenwich. He entered the Royal Marines at the age of sixteen, and was attached to the corps up to the period of his retirement. He became Colonel in 1837, and Lieutenant-General in 1854. In 1803 he distinguished himself by capturing a French armed cutter off St. Domingo with the aid of only thirteen volunteers, and on this occasion was severely wounded. He was at the passage of the Dardanelles, in 1807, and in several minor affairs, including the capture of an armed Italian gun-boat near Corfu, and at the reduction of Anholt, in the Cattegat. He was again severely wounded at the attack on Fort Bowyer, in 1814. He was created a K.C.B. in 1855. He married, in 1809, Mary, daughter of S. Bristow, Esq., and leaves issue.

SIR JOHN HARE, F.G.S., F.S.A.

Sir John Hare, a well-known citizen of Bristol, died on the 2nd inst. at his residence in France, the Château de Hardelôt, near Boulogne. He was the son of John Hare, Esq., of Fairfield, Somersetshire, and was born in 1784. He was the head of the firm of John Hare and Co., floor-cloth manufacturers. Sir John Hare was of note for his connection with the anti-slavery movement. In the heat of the discussions on this subject there was an election for Bristol, the candidates being Mr. James Evan Baillie, a Whig, who supported the West Indian interest, and Mr. Edward Protheroe, a Whig, who supported emancipation. Sir John Hare took an active part on behalf of Mr. Protheroe, and barely escaped with his life at one of the party banquets at Bristol—the Baillieites making a dead set at the Protheroeites. Sir John was knighted in 1840, on the presentation of a congratulatory address from the city of Bristol on her Majesty's marriage. Sir John was a Liberal in politics, and was a highly-respected member of the Baptist congregation. He was the owner of the ship Cambria, which is said to have saved the crew and passengers (including the 31st Regiment) when the Kent, East Indiaman, was destroyed by fire in the Bay of Biscay. Sir John married, first, in 1817, Matilda, daughter of John Fry, Esq., of Tunbridge Wells, which lady died in 1841: he married, secondly, in 1858, Mary, daughter of G. Franklyn, Esq.

MRS. EDGEWORTH.

This venerable lady, who died at Edgeworthstown, in the county of Longford, on the 10th inst., in her ninety-sixth year, was Frances Anne, daughter of the Rev. Daniel Augustus Beaufort, and was the fourth wife of the celebrated Richard Lovell Edgeworth, Esq., who was born at Bath one hundred and twenty-six years ago, and whose literary note as a writer on education and inventions goes back to the times of Doctor Johnson and Doctor Darwin. His reputation, however, was far surpassed by that of his eldest daughter by his first marriage—the illustrious novelist, Maria Edgeworth. Mrs. Edgeworth, the lady just deceased, had by her union two sons and four daughters: among the latter is Mrs. Butler, widow of the learned antiquary, the Very Rev. Richard Butler, Dean of Clonmacnoise. Mrs. Edgeworth's stepson is Charles Sneyd Edgeworth, Esq., of Edgeworthstown, the present representative of this family, whose name is famous in literature in this country, and historic in France from the attendance of the Abbé Edgeworth on Louis XVI. at the scaffold.

SAMUEL GREGSON, M.P.

Samuel Gregson, Esq., of Moorlands, Lancashire; and Overton Hall, Cheshire; M.P. for Lancaster, who expired suddenly during the night of the 7th inst., at his town house, 32, Upper Harley-street, was the son of Samuel Gregson, Esq., of Lancaster, and was formerly at the head of the firm of Gregson and Co., East India and China agents, 14, Austinfriars. He was a magistrate for Middlesex and a magistrate and Deputy Lieutenant for Lancashire, and held various important posts in the commercial world—such as the directorship of the East and West India Docks and the chairmancy of the East India and China Association. He represented Lancaster in Parliament from July, 1847, till March, 1848, and again from 1852 till his death. His politics were liberal. He married, in 1820, Ellen, daughter of M. Gregson, Esq., of Overton Hall, Cheshire, which lady died in 1857.

ADMIRAL SIR HENRY BYAM MARTIN, K.C.B.

Admiral Sir Henry Byam Martin, K.C.B., who died, at Genoa, on the 9th inst., was a scion of the line of Martins, Baronets of Lockynge, Berks, a family long renowned for eminent military and naval services. He was the fourth son of the famous Sir Thomas Byam Martin, G.C.B., Admiral of the Fleet, by his wife, Catherine, daughter of Captain Robert Fanshawe, R.N. He was born in 1803, and entered the Royal Naval College in 1816, and embarked two years afterwards as Midshipman in the Liffey, in which vessel he was employed in the Channel and on particular service until his transfer, in 1820, to the Rochefort, 80, bearing the flag of Sir Graham Moore. After acting in the Mediterranean in this vessel and in various other ships, he joined the Ramilies, 74, in 1823, and soon afterwards was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant. He obtained his post rank, and was appointed, in 1836, to the Carysfort, 26, in which vessel he served in the Mediterranean nearly five years. For his services on the coast of Syria, including the attacks on Tortosa and St. Jean d'Acre, he was, in 1840, made a C.B. He, after the attack on Tortosa, received the grateful acknowledgments of Captain Houston Stewart, of the Benbow, the senior officer present, who particularly mentioned the astonishing precision of the fire of the Carysfort in covering the boats and men engaged on shore. He subsequently commanded the Grampus, 50, in the Pacific; and for his services against the Russians he was, in 1855, raised to the rank of K.C.B. Martin became a Rear-Admiral in 1854, and a Vice-Admiral of the Red in 1860. The gallant Admiral's eldest brother, Sir William Fanshawe Martin, K.C.B., fourth Baronet, of Lockynge, Berks, is also a distinguished Admiral, R.N.

His Grace Sir Algernon Percy, K.G., fourth Duke of Northumberland, died at Alnwick Castle, on the 12th inst. A memoir and portrait of the lamented nobleman will be given next week.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will of the most noble Frederick William Marquis of Bristol, of St. James's-square, and Ickworth Park, Bury St. Edmunds, was proved in her Majesty's Court of Probate on the 9th inst. by the present Marquis and the Right Hon. Lord Augustus Henry Charles Hervey, the sons. The personalty was sworn under £100,000. His Lordship was born in 1800, and married, in 1830, Lady Katherine Isabella Manners, daughter of the fifth Duke of Rutland, K.G., who died in 1848, by whom he had a large family. His Lordship succeeded to the title and estates in 1859, and executed his will in 1860; and there are two codicils, dated March and July, 1864. To his eldest son, the present Marquis, he has devised all his real estates, and has bequeathed to him the residue of his personal property. To each of his younger sons he has left a legacy of £20,000, and to each of his daughters £10,000, besides other bequests to them.

The will of the Hon. Gertrude Florinda Tollemache was administered to in the London Court by her daughter, the Hon. Frances Louisa, wife of the Hon. Algernon Gray Tollemache, the residuary legatee. Arthur Hyde Dendy, Esq., of the Inner Temple, the surviving executor, having renounced. The testatrix was the eldest daughter of the late General Wm. Gardiner, niece of the first Viscount Mountjoy, and widow and relict of the Hon. Charles Tollemache, who died in 1850. The will bears date 1851, and there are three codicils, dated 1853, 1859, 1863. To her sister, Frances Gardiner, she has bequeathed the property left to her by the will of her uncle, Lord Mountjoy, for her life, and after her decease to the testatrix's nieces, Harriet and Frances Hastings. There are a few legacies to friends and to her servants. To the Middlesex Hospital she has bequeathed all her linen and underclothing, and plain pocket-handkerchiefs without borders or lace. The residue of her property she leaves to her daughter, the said Hon. Frances Louisa Tollemache.

The will of the late William Kaye, Esq., of Tetworth Hall, Huntingdonshire, was proved in London under £40,000, and is contained in these words:—"The last will and testament of me, William Kaye, revoking all other wills. I hereby will and bequeath to my most excellent wife, Mary Cecilia, all my personal and real property, and appoint her executrix, and her sons, Joseph and James, executors.—Dated Nov. 19, 1864."

The late James Quilter, Esq., of 1, York-place, Regent's Park, whose personal property was sworn under £7000, has left to each of the following charitable institutions a legacy of £25:—The British and Foreign Bible Society, London City Mission, Church Missionary Society; Female Penitentiary, Pentonville-road; and the National Schools at Hadley.

Correspondence respecting affairs in Japan; respecting the affairs of Greece; respecting the affairs of the duchies of Holstein, Lauenburg, and Schleswig; and respecting the attack on St. Albans, Vermont, and naval force on the North American lakes; and further papers relating to New Zealand, have been presented to both Houses of Parliament. The convention between her Majesty and the Sultan for the establishment of telegraphic communication between India and the Ottoman territory, and a despatch from Sir R. Alcock respecting the murder of Major Baldwin and Lieutenant Bird, at Kamakura, in Japan, have also been laid upon the table.

T. ELLIS, Cambridge; O. S., Dublin; and OTHERS.—It is advertised to appear on the 1st of March. You should apply to the publishers, Messrs. Trübner, 60, Paternoster-row, for a prospectus, which, no doubt, will furnish you with the particulars you require.

MATEO DE ZAMORA.—1. See the notices to Chess Correspondents in our Paper of the 4th inst. 2. The Solution of No. 1091 is perfectly sound.

C. BENBOW.—1. Birmingham. It shall receive due attention. 2. We have not got the solution at hand.

E. S., St. Catherine's, C.W.—They are in the hands of the examiners.

BLAIR GRATRIX.—You have not quite succeeded this time, as you will find on looking at the solution given in our last Number.

AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.—We will try to do so if you will send us an address.

W. NORRIS.—The key move of Enigma No. 1435 is—1. P to Q B 3rd; that of No. 1438 is—1. P to K B 3rd.

JULIA, A. M., MAY of Cairnsfoot.—Your solutions of the enigmas are all correct.

DEREVON.—We cannot detect any flaw in Enigma No. 1437.

E. A., Hereford.—It shall be examined. Contributors should always send their names and addresses, to facilitate communication.

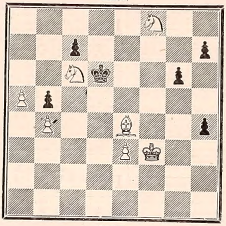
 CHESS BY ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.—We are requested to mention that several games of chess by telegraph between some amateurs in London and some members of the Dublin Chess Club are appointed to take place on Wednesday evening, the 22nd inst. The moves on the London side will be dispatched from the rooms of the St. George's Chess Club, 20, King-street, St. James's; play beginning at six o'clock.



SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 1094.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. K to K R 3rd	K to K R 3rd (best)
2. K to K Kt 4th (dis. ch)	K to Kt 2nd
3. R takes B (ch)	K takes R
4. Q to K B 7th (ch)	K moves
5. R to K R 2nd. Mate.

PROBLEM No. 1095.

By Mr. W. S. PAVITT.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

A NEW RECORD OF OLD GAMES.

The following partie, in which LA BOURDONNAIS gave the odds of the Pawn and move to an English Amateur, is not to be found in the collections of the great master's games, and will be a novelty, therefore, to players of the present day.—(Remove Black's K B Pawn.)

WHITE (Mr. —.)	BLACK (M. L. B.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 3rd
2. P to Q 4th	P to Q 4th
3. P to K 5th

(He may play, instead of 3. P to K 5th, Q to K R 5th (ch), and obtain a fine attack.—See the "Chessplayer's Companion," p. 481).

3.	P to Q B 4th
4. P to Q B 3rd

(The more spirited form of attack is—
4. B to Q 3rd — P to K Kt 3rd (best)
5. P to K R 4th — P takes Q P
6. P to K R 5th, &c.)

4.	Kt to Q B 3rd
5. B to Q 3rd	K Kt to K 2nd
6. Kt to K B 3rd	P to K Kt 3rd

(This may appear tame, but Black's position does not admit of vigorous measures.)

7. B to K Kt 5th	B to K Kt 2nd
8. Q to K 2nd

(P to K R 4th would have been more troublesome to his adversary. The move in the text loses time.)

8.	Q to Q Kt 3rd
9. P takes Q B P	Q takes Q B P
10. Q Kt to Q 2nd	B to Q 2nd
11. B to K 3rd	Q to Q R 4th
12. Kt to Q Kt 3rd	Q to Q B 2nd
13. B to Q 4th	Kt to K B 4th
14. Castles (on K's side)

(He should rather have taken the Kt.)

14.	Castles (on K's side)
15. Q R to K sq

(By playing B to Q B 5th he would have improved his position considerably.)

15.	P to Q Kt 3rd
16. P to K R 3rd	Q R to K sq
17. Kt to K R 2nd	R to K B 2nd
18. Q to K Kt 4th

(White designedly left the K Pawn to be captured, but he failed to calculate the consequences to their issue. The Pawn can be taken with impunity.)

18.	B takes K P
19. R takes B	Kt takes R
20. Q to B 4th

(White gave up the Pawn and the exchange, thinking by this move to win a Piece; but he overlooked his adversary's next move.)

20.	K Kt takes Q B
21. Q takes K Kt	Kt takes B
22. Q takes Kt	B to Q B 3rd
23. Kt to K Kt 4th	K to Kt 2nd
24. Kt to Q 4th	P to K 4th
25. Kt to K B 3rd	R to K B 4th

(If P to K 5th, White replies with Q to Q 4th (ch), and has then a more hopeful game.)

26. R to K sq	K to B sq
27. Kt to R R 4th

(Q to K 3rd looks far more promising.)

27.	K R to K B 2nd
28. Q to K 3rd	P to K 5th
29. Q to K R 6th (ch)

(Not so good, we apprehend, as Q to Q 4th.)

29.	K to Kt sq
30. Q to K Kt 5th	K to Kt 2nd
31. Kt to K R 6th

(This avails nothing. He should have played R to K 3rd. That, to be sure, might not have done much, but he would then have had a formidable auxiliary near at hand.)

31.	Q R to K 4th
32. Q to K 3rd	K R to B sq
33. Kt to K Kt 4th	Q R to K 3rd
34. Q to R 6th (ch)	K to Kt sq
35. Q to K Kt 5th	Q to K B 5th
36. Kt to K R 6th (ch)	K to Kt 2nd
37. Kt to B 5th (ch)	R takes Kt
38. Kt takes R (ch)	Q takes Kt
39. Q to K 3rd	P to K Kt 4th
40. P to Q Kt 3rd	R to K B 3rd

(The contest lasted a few moves longer, but it would be profitless to pursue it. La Bourdonnais, of course, won easily.)

CHESS IN AMERICA.

Partie between Captain MACKENZIE and Mr. REICHHELM.—(Evans's Gambit.)

WHITE (Mr. R.)	BLACK (Capt. M.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd
3. B to Q B 4th	B to Q B 4th
4. P to Q Kt 4th	B takes Kt P
5. P to Q B 3rd	B to Q B 4th
6. Castles	P to Q 3rd
7. P to Q 4th	P takes P
8. P takes P	B to Q Kt 3rd
9. B to Q Kt 2nd	Kt to K B 3rd
10. Q to Q B 2nd	Castles
11. P to K 5th	Kt to K sq
12. Q Kt to Q 2nd	P to Q 4th
13. B to Q 3rd	P to K R 3rd
14. B to Q R 3rd	Kt to K 2nd
15. Kt to Q Kt 3rd	P to Q B 3rd
16. Kt to K R 4th	Kt to Q B 2nd

(Black's game is not well developed, owing to a want of attention in the opening moves, and this disadvantage is now very difficult to overcome.)

17. P to K B 4th	Kt to K 3rd
18. Q to K B 2nd

(The Philadelphia Evening Bulletin observes that, if White had played 18. Kt to K B 5th, his adversary would have got an advantage by first taking Kt with Kt, and then the Q Pawn with Kt. This is true; but he might have improved his game, or at least have strengthened the attack, by taking off the Kt, before playing his own Kt to B 5th.)

18.	Q to Q B 2nd
19. P to K B 5th

(B to Q 6th would surely have been better play.)

19.	Kt takes Q P
20. Kt takes Kt	Q takes K P
21. K Kt to K B 3rd

(The simpler and more decisive course, perhaps, would have been to move Queen's Rook to K sq at once; for example:—
21. Q R to K sq — Q takes Kt (best)
22. Q takes Q — B takes Q (ch)
23. K to R sq, &c.)

21.	Q to K B 3rd
22. Q R to K sq	R to K sq
23. B takes Kt	R takes B
24. R takes R	Q takes R
25. R to K sq	Q to K B 3rd
26. R to K 8th (ch)	K to R 2nd
27. B to Q B 2nd

(Foreseeing the probability of Black playing P to Q B 4th, P to Q B 5th, and winning a piece.)

27.	B to Q sq
28. Kt to K 5th	B to Q B 2nd
29. Kt to Kt 6th

(A very good move.)

29.	B takes K B P
30. Kt to K B 8th (ch), and Black resigned

SCIENTIFIC NEWS.

Professor John Phillips, of Oxford, has communicated to the Royal Society further observations on the planet Mars, and on the physical aspect of the Sun, with illustrative plates. In the first paper he reports that he has perceived no appreciable change in Mars in the main outlines of land and sea since his close scrutiny in 1862. A smaller extent of snow was visible at the further pole. The ruddy tint observed in the surfaces of broad tracts of land he regards as characteristic of some peculiarity in them, possibly due to some special substance, or to atmospheric influences. With the second paper the Professor gives diagrams, showing the appearance of the Sun's disc, the bright and shady parts of the surface, and other interesting phenomena. He suggests, as a good way of observing the solar spots, the projecting the Sun's image on a smooth porcelain screen, or on very smooth white paper, whereby every imaginable degree of relative darkness appears in the spots, and the faculæ come out bright and distinct. The spots seem so dark in the nuclei as to suggest the hypothesis that the parts of the Sun to which they belong really emit heat rays invisible to our sight.

M. Becquerel has reported to the Academy of Sciences at Paris the results of his observations of the temperature of the earth from one to thirty-six metres below the surface, and the temperature of the air to the height of 21·25 metres in 1861-4. In regard to the former question, he states that the temperature goes on increasing from the depth of one metre downwards, except at eleven metres, where the temperature was 0·102 deg. above that at sixteen metres. This anomaly he attributes to some geological cause; adding, that at no depth between one metre and thirty-six metres is the temperature really constant. The distribution of heat in the crust of the globe cannot be reduced to an unvarying law in consequence of the dissimilarity of the strata which compose it, and which also are more or less permeable by water. The observations of the air in 1862, 1862, 1863, and 1864 have given the mean temperatures at the height of 1·33 metres, 10·542 deg. centigrade; at 16·2 metres, 10·975; at twenty-one metres, 11·556. It is remarkable that at six o'clock a.m. the mean temperature at all the above-mentioned heights was nearly the same. M. Becquerel expresses an earnest desire that observations of the temperature of the earth at the depth of at least 200 metres should be made, in order to settle various chemical and physical questions.

Messrs. Warren De la Rue, Balfour Stewart, and Benjamin Loewz have communicated to the Royal Society the first of a series of papers on their researches on solar physics. After giving a brief history of the observations of the solar spots by Schwabe and others, and commenting on the results of tables compiled from numerous observations, they state that they infer that the luminous photosphere is not to be viewed as composed of heavy solid or liquid matter, but rather as of the nature of a gas or cloud; and also that a spot is a phenomenon existing below the level of the sun's photosphere. They say, in conclusion, that since the central or bottom part of a spot is much less luminous than the sun's photosphere, it may, perhaps, be concluded that the spot is of a lower temperature than the photosphere; and if it be supposed that all the sun's mass at this level is of a lower temperature than the photospheres, then we must conclude that the heat of our luminary is derived from without.

Among the recent communications to the Academy of Sciences at Paris is one from M. Bianconi, in regard to the fossil remains of the great bird, epiornis, found in Madagascar. Marco Polo describes the roc, a gigantic bird which he compares to an eagle. Hitherto his account has been reckoned fabulous, as the epiornis was considered to be a brevipennis, or short-winged bird. The anatomical examinations of M. Bianconi have led him to justify the statements of the old Venetian, since he detects great similarity in the structure of the epiornis and that of the condor and the vulture. M. Agassiz has also reported to the Academy his observation of metamorphoses among fishes as remarkable as those known to occur among reptiles. Certain very small fishes, which at first resemble gadoïdes or blennioïdes, he has observed to pass gradually into the type of labroïdes or lophioïdes, &c. He thinks that, eventually, the classification of fishes must be re-modelled, and based on the correspondence which exists between their embryonic development and the complication of their structure in the adult state. M. E. Lambron has laid before the Academy the interesting results of his researches on the electrical character of the mineral waters at Bagnères-de-Luchon, showing that when the sulphureous water was received into a glass vase it gave rise to an excess of positive electricity in the upper layers, due to the incessant chemical changes going on under the influence of the air and the carbonic acid which it contains, while in the lower layers an excess of negative electricity was produced. A transient current was established when the two electricities were connected by means of a piece of platinum. M. Lambron gives further details in his note, and considers that there is reason to believe that the electro-chemical currents of sulphureous waters may have some effect on the human economy.

Among the more remarkable papers read at recent meetings of the Royal Society, the abstracts of which appear in their Proceedings, we may notice an account of "Observations on Atmospheric Electricity," by Professor J. D. Everett, of King's College, Windsor, Nova Scotia. From the summary of his results we learn that with light rain the electricity is generally moderate, sometimes very weak; but that heavy rain is almost invariably accompanied by very strong electricity. Snow is almost always electrically positive, but occasionally a little negative is intermixed; and on one occasion (Feb. 16, 1863) strong negative sparks were obtained during a heavy fall of snow, and strong positive ones were also observed. Strong positive sparks were drawn on the following morning and mid-day. On Feb. 26, also, strong positive sparks were obtained during hail accompanied by lightning and thunder. Fog was always found to be positive, and sleet rather strong negative. The results of Professor Everett's tables show that atmospheric electricity is stronger in winter than in summer, and seem to indicate a double maximum and minimum within the year—the principal maximum occurring about February; the other about October; the principal minimum in June, the other in November. Professor Guthrie, whose paper "On Drops" we noticed some months ago, reported to the society his elaborate observations on gas bubbles, for the observation of which he has constructed apparatus, which are represented in a plate, as well as the shape of various bubbles. He reports the effect of change in the chemical nature of the bubble gas, in temperature, tension, &c. Dr. L.S. Beale, author of the valuable work, "How to Work with a Microscope," records the completion of a new objective lens, with a magnifying power double that of the 25th—i.e., a 50th—which magnifies nearly 3000 diameters with the low eyepiece. It is the work of Messrs. Powell and Lealand, who produced a 16th in 1840 and a 25th in 1860. Dr. Beale states that the most delicate nerve-fibres of the papillæ of the frog's tongue can be readily traced by the new objective. He feels sure that further careful study by the aid of these high powers of the development and increase of some of the lowest organisms will lead to most valuable results bearing upon the much-debated question of vital actions.

A dinner, at which horseflesh was the staple viand, recently took place at the Grand Hôtel, Paris, under the auspices of the Society for the Protection of Animals and of the Acclimatisation Society. The number of guests exceeded 130, and they partook, apparently with great relish, of horseflesh, cooked in many different manners—roasted, boiled, stewed, and with every variety of sauce.

A recent return of the Registrar-General gives the following interesting information in respect to rainfall, by which we may form some notion of the value of an "inch of rain":—"Rain fell in London to the amount of 0·43 inches, which is equivalent to 43 tons of rain per acre. The rainfall during last week varied from 30 tons per acre in Edinburgh to 215 tons per acre in Glasgow. An English acre consists of 6,272,640 square inches; and an inch deep of rain on an acre yields 6,272,640 cubic inches of water, which, at 277·274 cubic inches to the gallon, makes 22,622·5 gallons; and, as a gallon of distilled water weighs 10 lb., the rainfall on an acre is 226,225 lb. avoirdupois; but 2240 lb. are a ton, and, consequently, an inch deep of rain weighs 100·993 tons, or nearly 101 tons per acre. For every hundredth of an inch a ton of water falls per acre." If any agriculturist were to try the experiment of distributing artificially that which nature so bountifully supplies, he would soon feel inclined to "rest and be thankful."

PRIVATE BILL LEGISLATION.—The following are the proposed rules respecting private bills to be submitted to Parliament for the practice and procedure of the referees, under standing orders 88—92:—1. Applications for Hearing before the Referees how to be made:—Parties petitioning against private bills in respect of any of the following matters, and who desire to be heard in opposition by their counsel or agents thereon, viz.:—In the case of bills of the second class, for authorising the construction of works, the engineering details of the undertaking, the efficiency of the works for the proposed object, and the sufficiency of the estimate for executing the same. In the case of waterworks bills, the nature and amount of the existing and proposed source of supply, the quality of the water in each case, and the provisions as to storage reservoirs. In the case of gas bills, the quality of the gas, existing supply and its price, the amount of pressure, the cost of production, and the modes of testing the purity and illuminating power of the gas—shall endorse upon the petitions, previously to depositing the same in the Private Bill Office, a statement of the grounds (being some one or more of the grounds specified above) on which they desire to be so heard, and the petitions so indorsed shall be transmitted by the clerks in the Private Bill Office to the office of the referees on private bills. 2. Notice of hearing to be given through the Private Bill Office:—The clerk to the referees shall give not less than two clear days' notice to the clerks in the Private Bill Office of the day on which the case of each bill is appointed to be taken by the referees. 3. Order in which cases shall be taken:—The cases shall be heard in such order as the Chairman of Ways and Means shall appoint, and according to a list prepared under his direction, and kept in the office of the clerk to the referees. 4. Certificate of appearance to be produced:—When a bill is called on for consideration, the agents for the petitioners against the same shall be required to produce a certificate of appearance from the Private Bill Office, in which shall be stated the name of the petitioners, their counsel, and agents. 5. Hours of meeting of referees:—The sittings of the referees shall commence at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, or at such other hour as may have been specially fixed by adjournment at a previous sitting. 6. Mode of voting by referees:—All questions before the referees shall be decided by a majority of voices, including the voice of the chairman, and whenever the voices are equal the chairman shall have second or casting vote.

The purity, delicacy of flavour, and nutritive properties of this Cocoa, so invigorating to the weak digestion and delicate constitution, will render it in high favour with all who use it.
It is equally adapted for invalids and others, and is highly recommended by the Faculty.
Made by J. S. FRY and SONS, Bristol and London.

BREAKFAST BEVERAGE.—Homœopathic practitioners, and the medical profession generally, recommend the use of Epps's Cocoa, as a valuable article of diet. The process of homœopathy was first introduced into this country there were no homœopathic preparations of cocoa, and the difficulty of finding a pure cocoa was the stumbling-block to many. Epps's Cocoa is now supplied in the crude state or as manifestly manufactured as to be free from all admixture. The Faculty recommend Epps's Cocoa, as being pure, and from the care bestowed in the selection and at length succeeded, with the assistance of elaborate machinery, in producing a Cocoa in which the entire parts to its composition, and which, from its perfect triturition it receives in the process it passes through, is rendered easy of digestion. Epps's Cocoa is sold in packets and tins only, labelled "James Epps and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London." Each packet is labelled "J. Epps, Homœopathic Cocoa-manufactory, Euston-road, London." Each tin, "Throgmorton-street, Manufactory, 339, Euston-road, London."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 1303.—VOL. XLVI. SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1865. WITH A SUPPLEMENT, FIVEPENCE

NAPOLEONISM FURTHER DEVELOPED.

THE speech of the Emperor Napoleon III. at the opening of the French Legislature has now been long enough before the European public to admit of its being interpreted as an exponent of the Imperial system. All the State utterances of this remarkable Sovereign invite and repay study. Whether regarded as illustrations of the art of expression or as a progressive series of disclosures arranged with the object of gradually imbuing the French mind with the latent principles of rule which the Emperor seeks to apply to the government of his empire, they possess the highest order of merit. In mere external form they are singularly imposing. They are almost without parallel, vigorous in conception, graceful and even beautiful in treatment and method, and perfect in chiselling. They extort admiration at a first glance. Even in a translation they retain their characteristic qualities. So irresistibly do they arrest attention, so entirely do they satisfy the demands of intellect and taste on their first appearance, that they are apt to beguile the judgment into attaching to the manner the importance which belongs exclusively to the substance. Hence, first impressions of a speech from the Emperor are seldom thoroughly trustworthy. Their energy, their compactness, their polish must be, to some extent, divested of their power by familiarity before the real purport of the document will be discerned. More than any other State papers submitted to the eye of Europe, it requires close and repeated study in order to get at its central ideas.

The Imperial speech of the 15th of February needs to be read in the light of several preceding speeches delivered on similar occasions. They all impart to it additional significance. They may be regarded as a connected series of attempts to adapt Napoleonic ideas to "the inexorable logic of facts." In the early part of his life, up to mature manhood, he employed himself in penetrating to the secret which lay behind his uncle's career of conquest, and ultimately pushed him on to his fall. He revolved in his meditative mind that history of daring ambition, and slowly extracted from it certain principles of kingcraft which he built up into a symmetrical system. No doubt, that system rests upon the preservation of his own dynasty for the fundamental basis, while, on the other hand, evidence is not by any means wanting that he is intent upon rearing upon that foundation an edifice consecrated to the prosperity and glory of France. He wishes to be—and, should his life be but prolonged, he probably will be—"the Napoleon of peace," and in the sense of never engaging in war, but in that of so organising French institutions, so developing French resources, and so vivifying French commerce and industry, as to leave France in a position to win a nobler and more lasting crown by means of a pacific policy, than by the more dazzling but less remunerative policy of war. To be able to give effect to his will, it was necessary that he should himself command a position which would give him supreme influence in Europe, and securing for him at once the respect of the reigning Sovereigns and the quiet submission, if not the hopeful trust, of his own people. This first stage of his enterprise he has already reached. Sometimes by a great war, sometimes by internal reforms, now by undertaking vast public works, then by framing wise commercial treaties, he has earned a title to speak with authority, and has gradually acquired a moral influence which enables him to veil the monopoly of political power without much fear of eliciting thereby an unmanageable element of resistance.

His first idea of turning this position to account was that of settling the affairs of Europe, and effecting a reduction of armaments, by means of a European Congress. That it was held to be Utopian, and more or less civilly declined, inflicted on him not only disappointment but mortification, but did not turn him from his object. Meanwhile he is drawing to the end of a course by less theatrical but, perhaps in the end, more successful means. The speech before us sets forth what may be considered as the first instalment of measures intended to establish the national policy of France upon a permanent basis of peace. It has been objected to it, with no little force, that, although unquestionably pacific in its tenour, it announces no diminution of the enormous military force of the empire. France, it is drawing to be said, is at peace with foreign expeditions, and, under any conceivable circumstances, is secure against aggression. Why, then, does not France set the example, and by being followed by the other States of Europe, of making a greater reduction of her military force? Why does she throw upon them the burden of maintaining an armed peace? Very natural questions these, if the convenience of the Napoleons and the exigencies of their personal system of policy are considered. But is it quite certain that an immediate diminution of his armaments would be consistent with the rest of the Imperial programme, unless effected simultaneously and in response to the European movement with a proportionate reduction by all the great Powers? Over against his entire silence on this head we may fitly place his equally significant silence on another, and his frank, firm, outspoken declaration on the other. Look at the former first, and at mutual connection. He sheathes his sword, but retains it by his side. He opens a store of useful measures to his people, but still monopolises political authority. He bows respect to the spiritual power, but in no faltering accents declares his resolve that it shall not invade his sphere. He has to hold in check, or thinks he has, political opinion on the one hand and recreodal encroachments on the other, until he has elevated industry and commerce to the pre-eminence formerly given to France to arms alone, and whilst he is doing this he chooses to remain the "master of legions." The decision may be a mistake—the sequel of it may be less glorious to the world than to the Emperor—but it is far less open to the charge of inconsistency than it has been thought to be at first blush.

Napoleon III., silent as to the future of his armaments, silent also as to any concession of further political power to his subjects, declares, in a few vigorous and telling sentences or strokes, the situation of France in regard to the objects of foreign policy to which she had committed herself. In the East, she had done her work, which could now be securely left to naval guardianship. In Syria, she had left Turkey and Mexico, established a new Imperial throne, and could confidently leave to the common-sense of the people and the intelligence and energy of their Sovereign the consolidation of the immense resources of the country. In the South, she had quelled the insurrection which threatened her Algerian possessions, without saddening her victory by needless severities. Close at hand, by means of the Franco-Italian Convention, "Italy definitively constitutes herself, and at the same time reconciles herself with Catholicity." Such being the position of affairs abroad, "Let us give ourselves up," says the Emperor, "to the labours of peace. . . . Let us examine together the measures suited to increase the prosperity of the empire."

The first consideration is due to religion. All confessions are to enjoy the same liberty; but the Catholic Church exercises, beyond her ministry, a legitimate influence. In return, however, for the greater deference paid to her by the State, she must yield obedience to its fundamental laws. "It is my duty," the Emperor pithily declares, "to maintain intact the rights of the civil power, which, since the days of St. Louis, no Sovereign in France has ever abandoned." Next in order to religion comes public instruction. "In a land of universal suffrage every citizen ought to know how to read and write." Then individual liberty for industrial enterprise claims attention. The employed and the employer have already been placed by law in the possession of all requisite facilities for adjusting their respective claims without the intervention of Government. But something more is necessary to the full exercise of commercial activities. Greater freedom is required for the organization and working of joint-stock companies. It is to be given them. "I have it at heart," Napoleon says, "to destroy all the obstacles which opposed the creation of societies destined to improve the condition of the working classes. Local management of local affairs, or, in other words, administrative decentralization, is the next important topic in the series of projected internal reforms. The communes and the departments will be called upon to intervene in their own interests in everything, as heretofore, to lead-quarters for sanction, and the rules, "decided on the spot, will be more promptly settled." The great and beneficent principle of free trade, already embodied in commercial treaties with Belgium, Switzerland, Zollverein, and the united kingdom of Sweden and Norway, is to be applied to maritime commerce. The national system of intercommunication by means of railways, canals, and roads is to be rapidly perfected, and completed. The Navy, finally, fully equipped, as far as the State can equip her, for industrial enterprise, will be qualified by her energy, her skill, and her material resources, to enter the lists with any competitor for the trade of the world.

Nor is this all. Something is to be done in the way of increasing the guarantees for personal freedom. One bill is to be laid before the Legislature authorising provisional release, with or without bail, even of criminal accused, whose trial will abolish personal arrest in civil and commercial matters.

If man could live by bread alone—if material progress were all that is essential to the contentment of nations—this programme of peaceful development would leave little to be desired. But it is to be that the Emperor is blind to the inevitable tendencies of the improvements he so wisely initiates? Can he imagine that increasing wealth, increasing occupation, increasing intelligence, and perpetual contact on a vastly increased number of points with other nations, will render France more satisfied to leave the guidance of her political destinies exclusively in the hands of one man? Or is he secretly preparing her to enter, with somewhat soberer expectations and more conservative sympathies, upon the now almost prohibited path of political responsibility and duty? For the present, it is plain that he reserves to himself the initiative and any and directing the movements of the State. Can he hope to hand down that right to his son, or believe that the intrusting of all authority to the keeping of the Sovereign will be an arrangement to which the nation generally, when the time comes, will adhere? Time will show. But the world will expect him to crown the edifice which he is constructing with such elaborate care, and will look, not altogether without hope, for the final development of the Napoleonic principle in constitutionally guaranteed liberty and free political institutions.

THE BIRD SHOW AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

The tropical region of the Crystal Palace—a comfortable place in winter—has been made especially attractive this week by the pretty exhibition of birds, which opened on Monday, and to which we refer as was opened on Saturday afternoon. We present, on the front page of this Journal, a Sketch which will enable our readers to form some idea to give, next week, a selection of the finest birds of different species in the exhibition. Among the feathered visitors are "a bevy of beauties or four hundred English, German, or Belgian canaries, with canary birds, without fifty thousand other varieties, finches, goldfinches, linnets, skylarks, woodlarks, blackbirds, and thrushes; a couple of jackdaws, two or three magpies, a solitary jay, a bevy of grey parrots, which were clever talkers; a splendid array of peacocks, and a no less gorgeous party of cockatoos, which scolded and screamed as freely as in their native forests; while the gentle songsters, in their little cages, at a judicious distance from that noisy flock, were trilling forth their lays in the most tuneful vein, and seemed fully conscious of the approval which the company bestowed upon their musical performances. The beauty of the gold and silver pheasants also called forth many expressions of admiration; and when the time arrived for feeding, and a supper too closely, were surrounded with visitors, who took especial notice of the graceful shape and motion of the flamingoes. They were nine months old, and bred in Surrey by Mr. W. Bennett; whereas those in the Victoria Park Gardens, and from which we reported from their own country, and have become thoroughly acclimatised here.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

The Corps Législatif has appointed its committee to draw up the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. It is as follows:—MM. André (deputy from La Charente), Rouilleau Dugage, Grosse de Bengnage, Darblay, Alfred Leroux, Schneider, Durand Deschamps, and Count Leclerc. The Opposition are preparing for the debate on the address, and have appointed a committee to make the arrangements.

The "Yellow Book," as the annual volume of French despatches is called, had the "Blue Book," a statement of the situation of the empire, have been laid before the Legislature. The former contains despatches upon the affairs of Italy, Greece, Roumania, Syria, Schleswig-Holstein, and of other countries. Among the latest of its contents is the despatch of M. Thouvenel de Lavays to Baron Gros, relative to the cession of the Papal Nuncio. This despatch is short and stern. It concludes with the expression of a hope that the Court of Rome will not push the renewal of such crises, which, M. Drouyn de Lhuys declares, "the Emperor's Government would be unable to endure."

On the proposition of the Minister of War, 618 military pioneers are to be superadded to the effective of the army (Journal de Paris). Of this number, 385 have obtained the remission of the remainder of their imprisonment, and the 233 others are to be drawn from the ranks of their respective sentences.

Imperial decrees have been issued appointing the commissioners for the Universal Exhibition of 1867 and for the Universal Exhibition of Fine Arts, which are to take place in Paris at the same time. Among those appointed members of the commission are Heri Granville, Emi Cowley, and Mr. Cobden. The works intended for the opening Exhibition of the Champs de Lavays in honour of the Industrie, in the Champs Elysées, from the 15th to the 20th of March.

The Archiepiscopal Seminary of Paris has published a pastoral letter sitting on Monday, in the Salle St. Jean, at the Hôtel de Ville, and distributed to the electors of the city. It is signed by the Archbishop Sibour, in an eloquent address, expatiated on the advantages of the steady, regular, and simple labours which resulted from drawing nations closer together by the interchange of their most useful animals and natural productions.

M. Drouyn de Lhuys is to open the telegraphic congress in Paris on the 1st of March. The congress will consist of diplomatic agents representing those Governments which hold in their own hands the administration of the telegraphic systems of their countries.

The committee of the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences, appointed to recommend a corresponding member in the place of the late Mr. M'Culloch, returned the names of three eminent Englishmen, in the following order :—1. Mr. Gladstone ; 2. Mr. John Stuart Mill; 3. Dr. Whewell.

The new chapel of the Palais de l'Elysée has just been completed, and is a gem of artistic decoration. It is extremely small, not exceeding the dimensions of an oratory, and is on the ground floor, communicating with the Empress's private apartments.

The death of M. Gratiolet, Professor of Zoology in the Paris Faculty of Sciences, is announced. He was struck with apoplexy while engaged in his laboratory at the Museum of Natural History. M. Gratiolet, who was in his fiftieth year, had especially distinguished himself by his works on comparative anatomy and his researches on the nervous system.

The iron-plated ocean-frigate Provence has returned to Toulon after making a second trial-trip. The greatest speed which the frigate attained was 14½ knots an hour, and the average speed 14 knots. The steam-frigate Ellorodan has arrived at Toulon from Brest. She is, having on board 1000 men of the 14th Regiment of the Line. The transport Var will proceed at Toulon from Algiers with 1679 troops returning to France. The iron-plated steam-frigate Flandre has been completely fitted out for sea at Cherbourg.

Official returns have been published relative to the French ships engaged in the cod fishery in the North Sea during the year 1862. It appears from these returns that the number of cod-fish taken in 1861 was less than that in 1863—the weight in 1863 being 2,240,050 kilogrammes, and in 1864 only 1,900,000 kilogrammes. On the other hand, the take of flat fish was double in 1864 to that of 1863. There was likewise a very remarkable increase in the quantity of cod oil brought home. It amounted to only 16,000 kilogrammes in 1863, and increased to 112,000 kilogrammes in 1864.

The cultivation of the vine in Algeria has made great progress within the last few years. In the year 1862 the land planted with vines was estimated at 16,000 acres, of which 8000 are situated in the province of Algiers, 5300 in the province of Oran, and 1500 in the province of Constantine.

SPAIN.

In the Congress, on Monday, Marshal Narvaez submitted a bill drawn up at the request of Queen Isabella, and of which the purport is to sell, for the benefit of the Crown, the vast property forming the Royal patrimony, with the exception of the Royal residences and the estates entailed on the Crown. The twenty-five per cent of the proceeds will go to the public treasury, and twenty-five per cent to the Royal treasury. The bill was received with immense enthusiasm, and the Chamber drew up an address expressive of gratitude to the Queen, which they presented to her in person. Her Majesty said that, as she considered herself the mother of the Spanish people, she ought to be the first to sacrifice herself for their interests.

The new Minister of Finance has announced to the Congress the withdrawal of the bill for the anticipation of the taxes, and declared that the Government intended to defer the imposition of the taxes for a new bill to improve the financial position of the country.

Considerable reductions are introduced into the Budget.

PORTUGAL.

The Ministry, having been defeated in the Chamber of Peers, have tendered their resignations, and a new Cabinet has been formed, of which the following is a list :—President of Council, Duc de Loulé; Home Office, Count de Thomar; Finance, Count Antonio Alvares Guevalho; Public Works, Belchior Gomes; War and Foreign Affairs, General Lucius d'Avila; Marine, Levi Jordao.

The Council of State has denied leave to the Queen to travel to Italy.

Don Diego de Portugal y Quesada, the newly-appointed Spanish Minister, has been received in audience by the King, and has presented his credentials.

ITALY.

King Victor Emmanuel left Florence on Wednesday morning for Bologna, on his way to Naples. The National Guard lined the streets through which his Majesty passed.

In Saturday's sitting of the Senate at Turin a petition was presented, signed by 11,000 inhabitants of the city, relative to the unfortunate events of September last. The consideration of this petition was declared urgent by the Senate.

It is announced by the Paris papers that the French Government have intimated to the Italian Cabinet that the interval of two years to precede the evacuation of Rome by the French troops, will be calculated from the day of the signature of the Treaty by the King of Italy left Turin for Florence. This is contradicted by the Turin Opinione, which says that the Convention, dated Oct. 15, 1864, M. Drouyn de Lhuys and Chevalier di Nigra, according to which the period of two years will be reckoned from the date of the decree for the transfer of the capital. This decree was sanctioned by the King on the 11th of December last.

Vesuvius has been in eruption, perhaps in sympathy with Etna. A despatch from Giovanni Cuomilla, the principal guide of Vesuvius, communicates the following particulars:—"During the night of the 8th inst. at the foot of the crater formed in 1861, a cone rose, about 15 ft. in height and 30 in circumference, which, on the morning of the 9th, was at the elevation of about a mile. This morning (the 10th) severe shocks have been felt at Resina, and the inhabitants of the houses we learn that the shocks were felt at Naples. Vesuvius and the whole line of mountains round the bay are covered with snow, forming a most splendid contrast and a grand spectacle. On the night before the eruption broke out there was a terrible thunderstorm.

AUSTRIA.

The Budget for 1866 was submitted to the Lower House on Saturday last. It shows an improving financial position. The deficit for 1865 is described as unimportant; and the Minister of Finance proclaimed that in 1867 the deficit will disappear altogether. The auditory estimates for 1866 show a reduction.

The Government is expecting by a telegraph from Berne, at last conceded the extradition of General Langiewicz to Switzerland. From an early period of the Polish insurrection General Langiewicz had been kept in captivity in Austria. Repeated requests for his extradition on the part of the Russian and resolutions on the part of the Austrian Representative Chamber proved powerless until now to effect his release.

PRUSSIA.

The report of the finance committee was laid before the Chamber of Deputies on Tuesday last. The committee proposed that the Chamber should declare that the budget does not show a correct distribution of the State expenditure, and that the military estimates particularly require great modification and reduction. The committee also recommend that larger sums should be applied for the encouragement of producers, the improvement of the country, the development of public instruction and science, and the increase of the salaries of teachers and inferior officials. The committee further propose the reduction of law courts and postal dues, the abolition of the State salt monopoly, and the reduction of the land-tax to its former amount.

The proposition of Herren Schulze-Delitzch and Fescher to abolish the laws against combinations of working men, despite opposition by the Minister, has been agreed to by a large majority of the House.

The supreme bar of the Chamber of Deputies refused the bill relative to the reorganisation of the bank to the finance committee.

RUSSIA.

A despatch from Kiakhta (Russian Asia) announces that, on the 15th of January, at Tchentgouchka, the Dounganes rose in insurrection against the Mandjours. They massacred the civil and military to lay after killing the commandant. The Russian Consul, warned in time, succeeded in saving the archives of the Consulate, and escaped.

The Government, as a consequence of the emancipation of the peasants, has taken measures for the diffusion of instruction among the agricultural population. An additional budget of 450,000 roubles for the year 1863 has just been decreed, so that the budget of public instruction now amounts to about 1,200,000 roubles. This supplementary budget provides for the founding of village schools, of eleven new gymnasia (colleges), for the purchase of books, paper, &c., for the poorer peasants, for supplementary payment to schoolmasters and professors for the purchase of scientific instruments, for the establishment of laboratories and museums, for the reorganization of the University of Warsaw, for the foundation of a Polytechnic School, and for other schools for teaching agriculture and horticulture.

AMERICA.

We have intelligence from New York to the 11th inst., when gold was quoted at 204.

President Lincoln and President Davis have both communicated to their respective Congresses the result of the late Peace Conference at Fort Monroe; and they agree in stating that President Lincoln refused to recognise in any way the Southern Confederacy, or to make peace on any other terms than the unconditional return of the South to the Union.

President Lincoln's account of the negotiations was received in Congress on the 10th. It is of considerable length, and is very complete in its details, narrating the circumstances of Mr. Blair's visit to Richmond, and supplying all the despatches preliminary to the meeting of the Plenipotentiaries with the Confederate Commissioners at Hampton Roads, as well as giving a report of the proceedings of the Conference itself. Though Mr. Blair went to Richmond with the consent of the Government, he had no authority to speak or act for it. He merely sent a letter to Jefferson Davis, a willingness to send or receive Commissioners, and Mr. Lincoln subsequently stated his willingness to receive any Commissioners that should be chosen on behalf of the Confederates, with the object of securing peace on the basis of an individual country. During the Confederate Commissioners were met by the President they were given to understand that the negotiations were to be informal, and that no proposition which in the slightest degree contemplated a recognition of the Confederate States could be for a moment entertained. During the conference Messrs. Stephens, Hunter, and Campbell, were desirous to effect an agreement for an armistice, but were informed by Mr. Lincoln that there could be no suspension of hostilities till the Confederates had disbanded their armies and acknowledged their allegiance to the national Government, and also that peace could be only established on the slavery question. General Grant had been previously instructed not to allow the presence of the Southern agents within his lines to cause any delay in his military operations. President Lincoln's account of the peace mission concludes in the following terms:—

On the morning of the 3rd the three gentlemen, Messrs. Stephens, Hunter, and Campbell, came aboard of my steamer and were met by the Secretary of State and myself of several hours' duration. No question of preliminaries was then or afterwards made as to the manner of reaching the other person to be present, as regards the matter we were to consider. It is to advance agreed that the conversation was to be informal and verbal merely. On our part, the whole substance of the points insisted on by Secretary of State, hereinbefore recited, was stated and insisted upon, and nothing was said inconsistently with what had been said by the other parties in any way to the end. In any event or on any condition would they ever consent to reunion; but yet they evidently could not deny that they would be compelled to reunite, to receive a postponement of that question, and the adoption of some other course first, which, as one of them seemed to express it, would be a matter of hard to mention, but which course we thought would amount to an indefinite postponement. The conference ended, the parties returning to their homes, to meet at Washington, as before mentioned, supposing, as I suppose, the meeting was agreed to.

Executive Mansion, Feb. 10, 1865.

Some of the New York journals have expressed an opinion that the way is now opened for a peaceful reunion of the Confederate States. Le Siècle says that the Times, the organ of the Government, says that "there is good left but a vigorous prosecution of the war will put it to the test, with full masks and a full treasury, sixty days will suffice to kill the rebellion."

War is equally the cry of the Confederates. At a mass meeting convoked by the Governor of Virginia, held at Richmond, at which President Davis was present, resolutions were unanimously passed expressing the terms proposed by Mr. Lincoln and expressing the determination of the State to oppose to such terms the full force of its autonomy. Richmond journals scout all ideas of peace, and advocate fighting it through. The Examiner says the enemy must be crushed. "Any compromise of our struggle would only prove a truce or armistice, and would be but the means of temporarily shielding our foes. We would entail upon our children untold disaster." The Legislature of Texas has passed resolutions expressing their determination to accept no peace that did not guarantee independence.

General Grant's army is no longer undivided. On the 5th inst. two divisions of his army were sent by water to Nashville, thence towards Reams station, the other to the left to Hatcher's Run, a short distance from the Weldon Railroad. The Confederates have taken from their rifle-pits, and the Federals intrenched themselves in the position thus left by the former. Skirmishing was unimportant. On the 6th and 7th Grant put out his forces to the left still more, and, though they sustained a "temporary repulse" on the 7th, at once then a thousand men, they succeeded finally in establishing their position, and driving the Confederates from their intrenchments. Substantially this is corroborated by General Lee, who adds that General Hagood was killed. A counter movement by the Confederates was intended as a cover to an advance on Wilmington by General Terry, at the head of 25,000 men.

General Sherman appears to be steadily pushing forward. One of his columns was moving on Branchville, and there was a rumour about Charleston evacuating, though Mr. Bancroft Davis, the American Consul, was still there. Another column was moving towards Charleston.

Movements of troops in other parts are rumoured, but nothing definite concerning them is known.

An engagement had been fought for a general exchange of prisoners between the belligerents.

General Lee has applied to the Southern people for cotbuses, pistols, revolvers, and saddles for the equipment of mounted cavalry troops.

The Confederate Senate has almost unanimously rejected the bill for putting 20,000 negroes into the Confederate army. The Senate has also confirmed the appointment of Mr. Benjamin as Secretary of State for War; and has passed a vote of thanks to Mr. John Lancaster, the owner of the vessel which, for rescuing Captain Semmes and crew, fought from the Alabama.

Indiana, Ohio, Missouri, and Maine, in addition to the States mentioned last week, have ratified the constitutional amendment abolishing slavery; but it has been rejected by Illinois. The Legislature of Kentucky has reconsidered its adoption, but thinks the Government should pay Kentucky 36,000,000 dollars if they make her free by the 1st of July.

President Lincoln has signed the joint resolution to give England notice of the termination of the treaty of 1817 regulating the naval force on the lakes. The resolution is preceded by a declaration that peace on the frontier is maintained by loyalty and friendship, and that naval forces of the two countries may be insufficient to prevent.

The Vice-President has informed the Federal Congress that Lincoln and Johnson have been elected for four years. 218 electoral votes were given for Lincoln and Johnson, and twenty-one for M'Clellan and Pendleton.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA.

The Montreal Gazette has refused to grant further delay in the case of the St. Albans raiders. The refusal is regarded as deciding the case against the prisoners. The counsel applied for delay on the ground that the messengers sent to Richmond were unable yet to reach their destination. The application was announced, however, as one to be surrendered, be delivered to the authorities of Vermont for trial, according to the State law.

A mass meeting has been held at Toronto, at the call of the Mayor, condemning the Government for passing the Alien Bill and for refusing the money sent by the St. Albans raiders. A meeting protesting the Government, was adopted by a large majority.

Notice has been served on the Government of Canada by Quebec that they must prepare to move to Ottawa on the 1st of May next.

The News Scotsman publishes a correspondence of the last. The Governor in his message recommends the unbiassed consideration of the confederation scheme.

MEXICO.

The Emperor Maximilian has created a new order of knighthood, to which he gives the name of "L'Aigle Mexicaine." The Emperor has conferred the Grand Cross of the Order on Emperors Napoleon, Francis Joseph, Alexander, and Don Pedro of Brazil, and Kings Victor Emmanuel and Charles of Sweden. Marshal Bazaine left Mexico on the 3rd, to invest Oajaca, which is in the possession of Porfirio Diaz. General d'Hurbal's march thither, at the head of eight squadrons of cavalry, several regiments of the line, and four batteries of artillery, recalls to one Prescott's vivid descriptions of Cortes' march to the interior of the country.

The Duke d'Aumale has contributed 1000*l.* to the fund being raised for the benefit of the relatives of John Gerard.

LATEST NEWS FROM AMERICA.

The following telegram has been received through Mr. Reuter's office:—

ITALY.—Turin, Feb. 23.—The King arrived here to-day. His Majesty was received by the Municipal Junta and deputations from working men's societies. Great enthusiasm was manifested. His Majesty subsequently issued a review of the National Guard, by whom he was loudly cheered.

JAPAN.—Shanghai, Jan. 9.—Sir Rutherford Alcock returns to England by the overland mail. He is the bearer of a convention with the Tycoon guaranteeing free navigation in the inland seas. The convention further provides for the establishment of an English Consulate at Simonoseki, or Pachmen (?), and stipulates for the payment by Japan of an indemnity for the expedition up the Straits of Simonoseki. The relations with Japan are more satisfactory and improving. [This telegram has been very unintelligibly transmitted.]

The London Chatham and Dover new railway bridge across the Thames was laid, on Wednesday, by Lord Harris, the vice-chairman of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company, in the absence of Lord Sondes, chiefly admiring the bridge the company have constructed to lead into the Victoria Station, and which is now approaching to its finish. The bridge, and is expected to be altogether inadequate to meet the increased demand which the union of the two companies will necessarily create immediately.

The annual meeting of delegates from various chambers of commerce was held on Tuesday, at the Mansion House, under the Lord Compton Lloyd presiding. The principal business of the day was a discussion on the state of the law relating to bills of lading, a question of great importance, and a motion recommending the adoption of the Scotch system was unanimously carried. The Council of the Association will bring the matter again on Wednesday, and discussed several important questions. With regard to the Bankruptcy Act, it was resolved that the Council of the Association were not prepared to recommend any alteration in the law. Suggested the appointment of a commission, consisting of Auditors and Registrars in Bankruptcy, to inquire into the working of the Bankruptcy Act. The Government has agreed to the proposition.

The Lord Mayor has given to the Corporation of the city of London building ground varied by the deeds (as appears from records) at the sum of £4000. Aldm. M'Arthur, M.P., a member of the Common Council, has given a notice of motion to refer it to a committee of the Court of Common Council to consider the possibility of making the site one of the finest municipal libraries in the city of London, especially those of the Corporation, the London Institution, Gresham College, and the Guildhall Library, which are now in the hands of governing bodies, as to render the whole easy of access to the public. In the mean time, on the 26th inst., Mr. H. Lawson has a committee of the Common Council are inquiring into the duties incumbent to the office of librarian to the Corporation with the view of appointing a permanent and efficient person. There are three candidates for the vacant office—Mr. W. H. Overall, the late librarian of the London Institution; Mr. Cowtan, of Sion University College, Gower-street; and the Rev. J. B. M'Caul, Rector of St. Michael's, Cornhill, the latter of whom is supported by the Lord Mayor for the office.

Last week the births of 2034 children—1044 boys and 990 girls—were registered in London. In the corresponding week of the years 1855-62 the average number (corrected) was 2108.—The deaths in London in the week were 1,124, of which 1,120 were registered in the 7 days of the previous week, but a great decrease on the average weekly number in January, which was 1,415 in the corresponding week of the years 1855-62. Of these deaths 1,124 were registered in the week ending Saturday, 76 deaths from typhus continue to be numerous; they were eighty-eight last week. The deaths from scarlatina were fifty-two, and from measles forty-three. Of the deaths from smallpox twenty, from whooping-cough sixty-three. The deaths from diarrhœa were twenty-seven, and from cholera five in the week. There were four deaths from privation, two from scurvy, two from delirium tremens, and five from drowning. The grant formerly made to Dunkeswell, near Honiton, was appropriated to the Rev. Mr. Hutchinson, for the purpose of erecting school-churches at Dee, Norfolk, and Porter, Hants. In consequence of the parishioners of Dee having declined to accept the school-church, the grant made on the released scale recently adopted; whilst several applications for aid from the Society, for the purpose of enlarging or increasing accommodation are pending, which the committee at present cannot meet.

On Tuesday evening last the annual meeting of the members and friends of the Young Men's Christian Association was held at Exeter Hall, and the great hall was crowded in every part. Addresses congratulated mostly of the young people attached to the issues of nineteen throughout the provinces, with an aggregate of 1,500 members, and 2,000 associates. From the report, it appears that similar associations exist throughout the continental countries. Addresses were delivered by the Rev. Mr. Mackenzie, Lisbon; in Berlin, and in many parts of Africa, all in unison with the metropolitan association. The Rev. Mr. Mackenzie, who has been for many years at the mission station of Kuruman, in Bechuanaland, stated that the young men and women belonging chiefly to the lower stratum of the middle class, and those who are engaged in business establishments, are the most numerous, and, indeed, are employed in City houses; and the report acknowledges, with thankfulness, the liberality of employers in giving their young men the counsel to reduce the debt of the society from £752, at which it stood last year, to £350; and it was earnestly appealed to the meeting to enable the council to wipe off that small deficit. The report contained a grateful tribute to the memory of the late Mr. George Hitchcock, who was a munificent supporter of the association during his life, and who by his will bequeathed £500 to the association. Addresses were delivered by the Rev. Mr. Mackenzie, Lord Shaftesbury, the Rev. S. Martin, the Rev. Mr. Stowell, and the Rev. W. Arthur.

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.—The thirty-third anniversary festival of the Lincolnshire, Silkworm, Leicester, Holderdeber, and Rutland Institution was celebrated, on Wednesday night, at the London Tavern, under the presidency of Mr. George Dennis. Upwards of 150 leaders and gentlemen sat down to dinner. An able address by the chairman was responded to by a subscription of £1700.

The twenty-fourth annual general meeting of the members and friends of the Provident Clerks' Benevolent Fund, which amounts to upwards of £20,000, was held at the London Tavern, on Wednesday—Mr. A. Smith, the treasurer, presiding. The income of the fund for last year was £2555. Seven annuitants had died during the year—viz., two clerks and two widows. These were on the fund, as the Rev. of December last, average annuities of £40 per annum, and a gratuity of £100 per annum. The fund now recommended that twelve additional annuitants—viz., three clerks and nine widows of clerks—should be elected. The annuities of £270 this day, and a gratuity of £100 per annum.

The thirteenth anniversary festival of that excellent institution, the Hospital for Sick Children, Great Ormond-street, was celebrated at Willis's Rooms, under the presidency of Earl Granville, K.G. The company numbered about 300, and received gentlemen and eighty ladies, and the contributions amounted to £1290.

A dinner took place last week at the Albion Hotel, Aldersgate-street, on Wednesday, in aid of the funds of the London Homœopathic Hospital. There were about 140 gentlemen present, Mr. Henry Pemberton, M.P., in the chair, and subscriptions received amounted on the whole to over £1000.

LAW AND POLICE.—The Lord Provost of Dundee's Inn has pledged to a large majority the opinion of the small majority of the delegates from the four Royal Burgh in favour of admitting to the Bar certain men who have (so far as they can) abandoned the clerical profession, inviters it to the Bishops to take such steps as they may think fit to deal with the matter constitution, to prevent such persons resuming their clerical functions.

An important case, "Pratt v. Garland," was heard before Vice-Chancellor Wood on Tuesday. Messrs. Pratt and Co., merchants, Austinfriars, sought to recover from the defendant, Mr. J. P. Garland, of Birmingham, a banking, about £2500 which was forced upon him when arrested in Stockholm after his flight from England. The money was said to be handed over by the plaintiffs as pay, on the eve of their liquidation and before his departure from England under a false name, he left with them a number of valuable securities, bills which they had endorsed, and goods they had received on credit for sale abroad. The assignees, on the other hand, insisted that even as an ordinary case the plaintiffs could have no lien on any equal equity with the general creditors to the money in question, and that the assignees, by exerting themselves to injure the bankrupt's estate, were entitled to the money, and should be the general creditors a right to share in it superior to that of the plaintiffs. The case was heard on bill, answer, and affidavits, and stood for judgment. The sum, about £500, which he appeared to have obtained from a Mr. Palmer by a bill transaction shortly before the commencement of the bankruptcy, was to be considered as trust-money whatever was obtained under the circumstances of a bankruptcy, and that the fact of the money having come through a bill of exchange to be of no importance. The bankrupt had left the money in the possession of the trustee belonged to the person for whose benefit he was acting. The bankrupt had violated the conditions on which he left England, and his bills just before his departure from England might be reasonably supposed, therefore, from the circumstances of the case, to be that sum out of the money on him Messrs. Pratt and Mr. Palmer were entitled to be paid the amounts due to them; but the remainder belonged to the estate, and the court ought to arresting the bankrupt.

A case of great social interest was decided, on Wednesday, by the Master of the Rolls. A widow was left with three daughters, who were entitled, under their father's will, to £10,000 each on coming of age. The widow died in the second time; and, when her eldest daughter came of age and accented a proposal of marriage, she was unable to provide for her sister her share of the property to her, the mother; and, as it was alleged—though this was denied—that the mother had promised to do so, the present suit was instituted. It took place some time before the mother's death. The Vice-Chancellor Wood came to know of the deed to sought to have it cancelled on the ground that it executed had at his mercies right. The Master of the Rolls said the reply of the case was clear, and referred the deed to be cancelled.

Another knight has been added to the list of bankrupt's—Mr. Cook creeper to have been got up was afforded by a case tried in the Court of Queen's Bench on Monday and Tuesday, in which Sir Morton Peto sued Mr. Cook, a solicitor, to recover £10,000. Interest that the defendant had undertaken to pay him that sum if he could not procure Mr. Crewdson Bailey's resources for £250,000, and they were seeking to get up a company to purchase Crewdson's Ironworks Company, which was to pay these £100,000 for the works, thus leaving them a profit of £150,000. Mr. Cook, it was alleged, undertook to find the purchasers, the deposit-money for the purchase and in getting a sufficient number of shares. The plaintiffs said that Mr. Cook failed to do so, and the plaintiffs sued for the £10,000. The jury agreed to get back a compromise of £10,000—namely, £7000 for the advance of £10,000 and £3000 for the loss of profits. Mr. Cook's counsel moved for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was contrary to law, but, on the number of fourth-class constables is much reduced, men who are well to do in the world are not to be enlisted in the force for a term of years, as in the past, but only for short time on income of 2s. per week.

The brothers Barry were workmen, who are charged with attempting to defraud the fire-insurance offices, were again up at the Mansion House on Monday morning. Mr. Braham, the solicitor prosecuting, stated the list of goods saved from the fire which the prisoners handed to the insurance offices did not correspond with the goods which were in fact saved, and discovered; but the point in dispute is, whether this under-estimation was made with a view to defraud the offices. The unavoidable consequence of the confusion that prevailed at the time and the urgency of the insurance companies to know at once the extent of their loss. The prisoners were again remanded, but being released.

The Museum Gazette mentions an innovation introduced into the Soldier Civil establishment of police as announced in the Queen's speech to undergo the usual ballot, the members of the male sex.

The relief of the Royal Assent the Session has been issued. Beginning with three Peers of the blood Royal—the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Cumberland (King of Hanover), and the Duke of Cambridge—and coming next to the Primate of all England, the Lord Chancellor, the Archbishop of York, the Duke Archbishop of Canterbury, and so on this year, the Lord Chief Justice Council, the Lord Privy Seal; and then follow, according to their rank, the Peers Temporal, the Bishops Spiritual, and the Judges of the Courts of the House of Peers. The roll differs little from that of 1862. No new Cabinet Minister has been created a Peer, and only with Lord Hougton, and Westmoreland (by courtesy Viscount Odstone) now appears; and that of Lord Dunsany is the only addition to the Irish Peerage. Of the Bishops Spiritual twelve appear—namely, the Bishops of Oxford, Ely, Chichester, bringing the new Bishop of Ely into Parliament, and also by the Bishop of Lincoln, Bishop of Worcester, Bishop of Bangor, Bishop of Llandaff, the Bishop of Meath, of Killaloe, and of Kilmore bring the Prelates now in attendance. By the absence of the Bishop of Durham and others, the number of temporal peers was raised to 424 at the commencement of this Session. Of the Spiritual lords one has died during the recess, the Bishop Lord Auckland as a spiritual Peer only, and not twice over.

The tables of the Government Life Insurance and Savings contracts for the insurance of lives or the grant of Government annuities were issued on Wednesday, in accordance with the provisions of the Act of fifty years. Tables for ordinary lives, tables for the grant of deferred annuities, and on the opposite) a table for annuities to be paid for a term of years only, namely. Persons following dangerous or unhealthy occupations, "assuming" that the risk of life is increased in such a manner, that a higher premium than that of an ordinary, or healthier, may be specified," will not, for the present, be insured at the Government Life Insurance Office. The system of forming special tables for the assurance of the lives of persons filling especially dangerous or unhealthy occupations is not considered to be desirable, as thought right to frame such tables they will in due course be submitted to Parliament. No one life can be insured for a less amount than £20 or a greater sum than £200; but previous may begin by investing their lives for £20, and may increase their insurances from time to time by smaller sums than £20 until they shall have effected an aggregate assurance of £100. All these tables have been framed on the condition that no part of the purchase money paid in any form be returnable. The tables for the grant of deferred annuities or monthly allowances, on condition of the purchase money being paid in any form be returnable. The tables for fixing the surrender value of, or sum to be returned on, a contract or policy of insurance are also under consideration; but it may be observed that the Government will not grant a policy or contract for the return of premiums. The Government premiums shall have been paid under it for five years—that is, before the year 1870.

TESTIMONIAL TO LIEUTENANT-COLONEL TINLEY FROM THE LIVERPOOL RIFLE BRIGADE.

THE Liverpool Rifle Brigade, which was established upon the basis of the 5th Lancashire Volunteer Company, in 1803, now musters, by the last official return, a total strength of 657 men, who may, for their efficiency, skill, and discipline, compare with any other corps in that part of the country. Their commanding officer, Lieutenant-Colonel Robert J. Tinley, has just received, upon the occasion of his marriage, a handsome piece of silver plate, as a testimonial presented to him by the officers and men of the Rifle Brigade, which is marked for Mrs. Tinley. The presentation took place one evening this month, in the drill-shed belonging to the corps in the Prince's-road, Liverpool. This is a spacious covered place, 240 ft. in length by 90 ft. in breadth; and, in addition to this ample space for drill, there are separate rooms for each company and their arms, besides an excellent gymnasium, fitted up on the Government plan, by Mr. Maclaren, of Oxford. Outside the shed the corps has rented a drill-field of sufficient extent to drill a brigade. The Mayor of Liverpool, who is an officer in the brigade, presided, and there was a large muster of the officers and men; amongst the other company were Lieutenant-Colonel Masters, Inspector of Volunteers; Colonel Eldwell, Major Bousfield, Major Hornblower, Captain Bardwell, and other volunteer officers; Mrs. Tinley, Mrs. and Miss Lawrence and party, Mrs. Griffiths, and several other ladies. The prizes to the winners of the brigade's rifle contests during the past year were distributed by Mrs. Tinley. Before this, however, the Mayor, addressing Lieutenant-Colonel Tinley, related the history of the formation and improvement of the brigade, and congratulated him upon the successful manner in which he had exercised his command since the retirement of Lieutenant-Colonel Gladstone, his predecessor. He then presented to Lieutenant-Colonel Tinley the piece of plate manufactured by Messrs. Elkington and Co., of which we give an illustration. It consists of a military group, in frosted silver, standing upon an ebony pedestal. The central or principal figure is that of the Colonel himself, who, seated upon a charger, is receiving a report of the "state of the field" from the Adjutant. On the other side stands an orderly sergeant, who is in the act of saluting the commanding officer. The artist has caught a characteristic expression of Colonel Tinley's features. The face of Sergeant Lawless is equally expressive. The Mayor also addressed Mrs. Tinley, and begged her to accept the bracelet, which was handed to her by Mrs. Griffith, as a gift from those under her husband's command. Lieutenant-Colonel Tinley briefly replied, thanking the Mayor and all the company for these expressions of kindness. He referred with satisfaction to the present condition of the brigade, and announced that Lieutenant-Colonel Gladstone, their late commander, had offered a yearly prize of £25, to encourage their musketry practice. The distribution of the prizes followed.

TESTIMONIAL FROM THE LIVERPOOL RIFLE BRIGADE TO LIEUT.-COL. R. J. TINLEY.

ANCIENT SILVER MACE GIVEN BY SIR GEORGE BOWYER TO THE TOWN OF MARGATE.

AN old silver mace, of curious workmanship, has lately been presented to the Mayor and Corporation of the town of Margate by Sir George Bowyer, Bart., M.P., who, having been a constant visitor to that place for many years, desired to make some acknowledgment of the friendships he had there formed. This mace, which formerly belonged to the now defunct Corporation of Kinsale, in Ireland, is to-constructed that the top may be taken off and used as a "loving-cup" at the civic banquets. It bears the following inscription :—"This mace, once the property of the town of Kinsale, now belongs to the Mayor, Aldermen, and burgesses of the town of Margate, being presented to them by Sir George Bowyer, Bart., M.P. 1864." The mace is 39 in. in length, weighs 7¾ oz., and is of curious antique pattern. It bears the arms of George II. Our Engraving is from a photograph by Mr. Joseph Byrne, of Margate. The presentation took place about three weeks since, in the Townhall, when the Mayor, Aldermen, and Town Councillors, and about 150 of the townspeople were assembled. Sir George Bowyer, addressing the Mayor, spoke of the goodwill and courtesy he had always experienced from the inhabitants of Margate, and of the attachment he felt to that place. He hoped they would accept this mace as a token of his regard. The Mayor cordially returned thanks to Sir George Bowyer for his handsome gift. Aldermen Price, and Standing, Councillor Wardell, and others, followed in the same spirit, and this agreeable business was brought to a close.

THE NEW RACQUET COURT AT HARROW SCHOOL.

ON Saturday, the 31st ult., the new covered racquet-court which has been built for the use of Harrow School was opened for play. It has been erected, at a cost of about £2000, by subscription among old Harrovians and others. The scheme of such a building had been long conceived. The old open courts, in which so many of the best racquet-players of the day had been trained, were almost useless from want of repair; and a fresh generation was rising up, which seemed likely to learn but little of the game. A committee was formed, funds were raised, many of the names of those associated heartily in the undertaking, and old Harrow men led a wretched life of it for some months, with chances calls upon their purse. Then were difficulties, however, in the way: space was hard to obtain; foundations were difficult to secure; and racquet-courts are edifices which, in the nature of things, are desperately and irredeemably ugly. At last, however, the final coat of blacking was dry on the walls, and it was determined to open the courts with a grand match. It had been at first arranged that Mr. Dyke, the well-known champion player, himself an Harrovian, and Mr. Daniel, of Cambridge reputation, should play the two best professionals that could be found; this plan, however, could not, from various reasons, be fully carried out, and in the end Mr. Daniel was unable to be present, and Mr. R. D. Walker, at the last moment, kindly supplied his place. The professionals whose services were obtained for the occasion were Day and Penter; the former a Devonshire champion, whose superior is would be difficult to find anywhere; the latter a promising player at Messrs. Princes' court, in London. Play began early in the afternoon, and the gallery was crowded with visitors. The two professionals played the two gentlemen, and beat them easily the first game. The gentlemen rallied, and won the second by a neck. The third was well contested, and the gentlemen won again; they fell victims, however, in the fourth to Day's true and brisk play. Game the fifth began, and the excitement rose high as the score of each slowly rose. Mr. Dyke's hitting was magnificent, and he seemed absolutely ubiquitous in the court. The game was capitally contested, and so fine a display of racquets can seldom have been seen in any court as towards the conclusion of this match. In the end Messrs. Dyke and Walker went ahead, and won the victory of the afternoon. After the contest was over, Mr. Dyke, though much fatigued with his exertions, played a single match against Day, giving him some little odds; but his opponent was fresher and quicker in his returns, and beat him twice; and darkness put an end to play.

The court has been erected by Messrs. Allen, from the designs of Mr. R. Burton, of Spring-gardens. It is well adapted to the purpose. A sum of £400 is still required to make up the sum required for building expenses, and contributions will be gratefully received by the committee, the masters, or the head of the school.

OLD HOUSES IN STONEY-STREET, BOROUGH.

In the observations which accompanied, last week, our View of the new street which now traverses Southwark east and west, from the High-street of the Borough to the Blackfriars-road, we took occasion to remark that there are many curious and interesting relics of antiquity in that part of London, which are worth a passing notice amidst the great works of railway construction and metropolitan improvement there going on. Behind the new Borough Market and St. Mary Overy's Church is an obscure little street, called Stoney-street, connecting Counter-street with Clink-street, and leading to the riverside. The Charing-cross Railway Company, in making their approaches to the bridge over the Thames by which their line is to reach the intended City terminus at Dowgate-hill, are obliged to demolish several of the old houses in Stoney-street which belong to the age of Queen Elizabeth. We give an illustration of one of these—namely, the George Inn, with its gable-end front, its projecting bow-windows, and other characteristic features. In the interior of this house was an old masnelpiece inscribed with the date A.D. 1560. Though its situation was close to the palace of the Bishops of Rochester in days of yore, and the palace of the Bishops of Winchester stood almost so near, this locality, between the bear gardens of Bankside and the Clink Prison, was chiefly occupied by the licensed keepers of houses of infamous resort, from the twelfth till the sixteenth century, when that nuisance was at length suppressed by law. A number of these houses were held by Sir William Walworth, Lord Mayor of London, as lessee under the Bishop of Winchester, at the time of the Wat Tyler riots; and it is said that they were among the first to be attacked and plundered by the rioters; for which damage, however, the Lord Mayor took his revenge when he knocked the ringleader on the head. It is not, indeed, to be presumed that the ancient house of entertainment shown in our Engraving was at any period of English history one of the description to which we have referred. After the Reformation, this district became the abode of dyers and other artisans, "for the convenience of the water."

THE EGYPTIAN MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS AND THE NEW HOTEL AT CAIRO.

THE foundation-stone of the new Oriental Hotel at Cairo was laid with great ceremony, on the 18th ult., by his Excellency Nubar Pacha, the Egyptian Minister of Public Works and Agriculture and Director-General of Railways, in the presence of a large and distinguished company, amongst whom figured H. E. Raglid Pacha, the Prime Minister; H. E. Cherif Pacha, Minister of Foreign Affairs; the Duc de Grammont; M. Ferdinand de Lesseps; Mr. Thomas F. Read, her Majesty's Consul in Cairo; Mr. Ross, Director of the Egyptian Trading Company and representative of the Oriental Hotels Company; and Mr. P. Avocat, who was the representative of Mr. C. G. Wray, the architect of the building. The band of the 2nd Zouaves of the Guard performed at intervals during the proceedings. This is the first time that the commencement of a public building in Egypt has been honoured with any particular notice by the Government of the Viceroy. The customs so familiar to Europeans on such occasions were strictly adhered to. His Excellency Nubar Pacha having received an address and replied to it with his usual courtesy, a leaden case was deposited in a recess in the lower stone, containing a few Egyptian and English coins, with a document setting forth the history of the company and their title to the land on which the proposed building is to be erected. This case having been duly secured, Nubar Pacha then tapped the upper stone, ordered it to be lowered, and declared the first stone of the building laid. The proposed hotel will ultimately contain about five hundred apartments, fitted up in the style of the best European hotels, with all modern improvements, such as baths, hot and cold, on each floor; and will have a public cafe and restaurant, and ranges of offices and shops on the ground floor. The ultimate cost is estimated at £200,000. The first portion, containing 150 rooms, facing the Esbekieh, will be commenced immediately, and will probably be available to the public about the end of 1866. The plans and designs of the hotel have been prepared by Mr. Christopher George Wray, architect, of Cannon-street West, London, who having been civil architect to the Government of India in Calcutta, and being consequently well acquainted with tropical requirements, was chosen by the Oriental Hotels Company to superintend this work. An hotel of this description cannot fail to be a great success in a country like Egypt, where men of business often prefer to remain in hotels to the inconvenience of a private household. Cairo, although it is the capital of Egypt, is notoriously deficient in respect to accommodation of this kind—a fact often experienced by the crowds of tourists that flock thither during the winter, and by the passengers to and from India.

THE LATE DUKE OF NORTHUMBERLAND, K.G.—SEE PAGE 193.

THE THAMES EMBANKMENT.

A VIEW of the north bank of the Thames, from the Palace of Westminster to London Bridge, occupies the two pages in the middle of our paper. It shows the whole length of the Thames Embankment, as designed and being constructed, from Westminster Bridge to Blackfriars. Several Illustrations of the actual progress of this great work at different parts of the river-side have already been given in these pages. The Engraving we now present may be suitably accompanied with a brief recapitulation of some facts which show the extent and importance of the undertaking. The idea of an embankment of the Thames through London was first conceived by the late John Martin, the painter, who advocated this measure in a series of pamphlets which he published thirty or forty years ago. It was more recently taken up by the Metropolitan Board of Works as an alternative to the progress of the main low-level sewer of the great drainage works through the Strand, where the unavoidable interruption of the traffic, while the construction of the sewer was being carried on, could not fail to produce very heavy loss of trade to the shops in that long line of street. The subject was thus brought under the consideration of a Royal Commission, under the presidency of Lord Mayor Cubitt, in 1861, when competition designs were submitted, and that of a solid embankment by Mr. Shields selected as the basis of an amended plan prepared by Mr. M'Lean under the direction of the commissioners, and submitted by Mr. Cowper to Parliament in 1861. The Act for this improvement was passed in 1862, and

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1865.

WHETHER the nation will or will not, at the coming election, reverse the decision of the Parliament called together by Lord Derby, and whether a Parliament called together by Lord Palmerston will request him to retire in favour of the first-mentioned nobleman, is a question which will be settled, together with innumerable wagers, later in the year. But it is, humanly speaking, certain that the eldest son of Lord Derby and the inheritor of a large portion of his distinguished father's talent, will one of these days be called to active duty in the government of the country. The career of Lord Stanley is therefore one which must be watched with interest by all thoughtful men.

In a debate early in the week, upon the African squadron and the value of English efforts for the forcible suppression of the slave trade, Lord Stanley took an opportunity of expressing himself with a frankness, and with an amount of good sense, which will not fail to be appreciated by his countrymen. For a long time the maintenance of the African squadron has been a subject which has called up much debate, both in the Houses of Parliament and out of doors. At one time, no doubt, the keeping a strong force at sea to hunt down and capture the wretches who make trade out of the flesh of their fellow-creatures was regarded as one of "the proud things" that England had to boast of; but, when the facts have drawn to the satisfaction of all but those for whom facts have no force, and with whom sentiment is everything, that English blood and English treasure are annually wasted to a frightful expense in keeping our coasts clear of a trade which is, among among us cling to the idea of the gallant cruisers of our nation watching vigilantly for the sun, swift, piratical vessels of the scoundrel traders, decrying them with a cheer, giving hot chase and crippling shot, and finally seizing the slaver, setting her captives free, and taking away her ruffian officers to be judged. It is a noble picture, and some of our best sea-novelists have handled the subject finely. But we fear that it does not meet the property of the novelist, and must be removed from among the realities.

For, unhappily, our well-meant efforts to put down the African slavers, however they are popularly rewarded by a capture, do more evil by far than good. We have changed the character of the slave-service. We have made it one of danger, and one that requires a special build of vessel and a special ability in the sailing of her. This will suit the greed of the trader. The conditions have been met. The slave-ships, with descriptions of which Clarkson and Wilberforce used to send audiences into agonies of tears, were bad enough to be the vessels of demons; but what would the latter class of ships be? They are built for speed, and, consequently, every inch of room is valuable. The spaces now allotted for the slaves are about as small that the scene every morning, when the poor wretches are shifted from side to side, is too horrible for description. The amount of death is something hideous. The slave-stealer has calculated all this. He has estimated how many blacks he can afford to suffocate on the passage and how much profit the remainder will give him. He knows that a certain number of each voyage in three was the last infernal quotation—that is, if on every third voyage, and throwing in the slaves who were killed in the run, he could escape the English, it was worth the adventurer's while to risk it. And, as we have seen, he compounds by single loads of blacks to the sharks when the English flag was seen unpleasantly near. We know not whether the calculations in the foregoing sentence are worked out correctly, but we may be sure that humanity has not been the gainer. This state of things is caused by the vigilance and admirable seamanship of our cruisers, and by the determination with which they give chase. Were the slavers allowed to arrive with more ease, the result, though less shocking, is not much more satisfactory. We cannot send them home, to be restored to their natural savage state, and to be seized again at the will of the petty and greedy chiefs who in those countries control the forces that send them to a colony where they become in the highest degree depraved. They have nothing to fear; they will do no work except what is absolutely necessary; and they insult and degrade the white population. Our efforts are, therefore, failures in two directions at once.

Then we have to consider ourselves and our gallant Service. We pay an enormous sum for the support of this African squadron, and we have to take into consideration the fearful climate to which our officers and men are exposed, we do not know that, if the squadron were a success, it would be much more than a set-off against the mischief caused in many places, both of life and of money, in the cause of duty and of honour. But neither duty nor honour is at stake. As Lord Stanley pointed out, in plain language, we have no responsibility upon us. We have long ago washed our hands of slavery, and of all respect to the unhappy negroes, whom we, in common with other and non-repentant nations, so long treated with inhumanity and tyranny. We have no slave trade, no slave-ships, and no slaves, within five miles of the House. There are classes who are as much in need of civilisation as the African, and who have been quite as much neglected.

We are glad that Lord Stanley has had the sense and the courage to call attention to this subject. He may be understood as speaking in behalf of those with whom he usually acts, when he says that, if the public of England really understood the question, the African squadron would be a thing of the past. The House answered him with a cheer. We do not suppose that Lord Palmerston is yet prepared to give up the squadron; at least, he has always defended it very eagerly, and has said that it was doing good and maintaining the cause of humanity. Now that it has been clearly shown to be doing neither, the veteran Premier would do a more clever thing by recalling it than by leaving that work to his possible successor, the father of the young nobleman who has deserved the thanks of the nation.

The Trade and Navigation Accounts for the month and twelve months ending Dec. 31, 1864, were published on Thursday. The total declared value of exports from the United Kingdom during the month was £12,080,437, as compared with £10,907,033 in the same month of 1863, and £14,151,609 in 1862.

The Right Hon. the Speaker gave his first Parliamentary full-dress dinner party on Wednesday last.

Mr. W. E. Gladstone had a small and early party, on Tuesday night, at his family residence on Carlton House-terrace.

CHURCH AND UNIVERSITIES.

A magnificent memorial cross has been erected in the churchyard of Hawarden, in memory of the late Rev. W. E. Gladstone, who was Curate and Rector of the parish for sixty years. The cross has been presented by the neighbouring gentry, the Bishop of Bath and Wells footing the subscription-list.

The sum of more than 2000 guineas has been presented to the Rev. David Harding, M.A., Curate of St. Mary's, Bryanston-square, by the parishioners, as a token of their appreciation and sympathy in the illness from which he is now happily recovering.

The girls' school of the Clergy Orphan Corporation, in St. James's-road, on Saturday last the scene of an interesting ceremony. Sir James Forbes, Bart., Governor of the Corporation, laid the foundation-stone of a new building, on condition that on every twenty-first anniversary of his decease, which occurs on the 28th of February, a sermon shall be preached in the chapel of the Clergy Orphan Corporation under its care, and should then award £100 to the orphan whom the governors of the school may select. If the sermon be not preached, or the money not duly awarded, it was resigned to Miss Fanny Jane Forbes, whose father, the late Rev. Robert Forbes, was for many years Rector of Pitsligo, Aberdeenshire. A large number of ladies and gentlemen assembled to witness the presentation. The proceedings were opened with prayer, and Sir James announced that the choice of the committee had fallen on Miss Evans; and also that the sermon would be preached by the Rev. Canon Ainger, Master of the Temple. Then came the stone-laying ceremonial. His Grace then delivered to Miss Fayrer the silver trowel with which she had to perform the task, and handed her a silver mallet. After a few kindly words of counsel and encouragement to her and to her young companions, the ceremony was concluded.

Both Houses of the Convocation of Canterbury assembled yesterday week in the Jerusalem Chamber, Westminster, under the presidency of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The principal subjects of discussion were the new regulations of the Universities Tests Act, and the appointment of a Bishop to act as Suffragan to the Bishop of London. On the motion of the Bishop of Oxford, seconded by the Archdeacon of Maidstone, a committee was appointed to consider the question of the appointment of clergymen to whom the Bishop should be instructed in a joint committee of both Houses to request the Archbishop of Canterbury to act. The Lower House of Convocation also adopted unanimously the three following recommendations:—1. That the statutes in Oxford and Cambridge Universities relating to Tests Act. 2. That the number be increased, as a general rule, to two members for each residential College. 3. That the statutes relating to Tests Act should be so altered as to vote for proctors, subject to such limitation as Convocation might require.

The Convocation of York met on Tuesday in the Chapter House of York Minster. The Archbishop of York (Dr. Maclagan), of York presided; and the Bishops of Durham, Carlisle, and Ripon were present. The Archbishop of York delivered his Primary Charge, in which he said that in the Province of the Diocese of York, it was unanimously resolved that a bill should be introduced into Parliament to enable the Archbishop of the Royal Commission, and that such, from the vast increase in the population of England, for the more convenient administration of the province, there should be a new Province of Manchester, with a Bishop and additional see, two in the province of Canterbury—viz., Southwark and Liverpool, and one in the Province of York—viz., Newcastle. The Archbishop of York also discussed the most important was that with reference to a proposal appointed by the Bishop of Durham, and agreed to by the Convocation. Upon this matter a report had been drawn up by a committee appointed for that purpose, which had been considered and approved by the Bishops of the province. The report contains four suggested other portions of the Old Testament, and by appointing a Revised Version of the New Testament. The Archbishop of York then read the Revised Version of the New Testament. To the Table of Daily Lessons the committee suggested that the Apocryphal lessons should be omitted, and that the Book of Psalms should be read through in the course of the month. New Testament lessons were proposed, and that in cases where there is more than one lesson, a new Table of Lessons should be drawn up. Upon this matter discussion, the report was adopted, and the president was requested to communicate with the Convocation of Canterbury.

The Universities and Public Schools.—At Oxford, the Dean of Christ Church has recommended to the Vice-Chancellor the determination of the Dean and Chapter of that house to found a Studentship of the Right Honourable William Ewart Gladstone, M.P., and to be entitled to consist—viz., Sir T. Palmer, Sir H. H. Cairns, and Mr. R. Jones Bosanquet. The Studentship is to be tenable for four years, and to be of the value of £300, which it appears that the Dean and Chapter are not held under any obligation to found a Studentship of that value, but that they have done so of their own accord at present paid. At the same time, they have come to the conclusion, "on the ground of the great services rendered by Mr. Gladstone to the University," to make such bounties as will insure the aforesaid augmentation.—On Tuesday week the Rev. Canon Liddon, D.D., delivered the first of his course of lectures on the Bampton Foundation. The subject selected for the present year is "Jesus."—The Vice-Chancellor has appointed Mr. Arthur Sidgwick, Fellow of Corpus Christi College, to be Public Orator.—A proposal to confer honorary degrees has been paid to the veteran Professor Sedgwick—the number of £100 has been subscribed.—Professor Sedgwick" is the University for the best essay on some subject connected with the Hindoo religions.—The Syndicate appointed to consider the proposal to extend the local examinations to girls have reported in favour of giving the scheme a three years trial.

The Education Aid Society issued last week 212 school orders, the cost of which will be £7 7s. 8d. per week, and fifteen cases have been declined. The number of orders issued to the present time is 6282.

Lord Penzance, M.P., for Middlesex and eldest son of Lord Stratford, has accepted the office of Secretary of the Board of Control, vice Lord Sandhurst, resigned, on account of ill-health, by the appointment of Mr. Gulpin, M.P., for Northampton.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

How about relieving the pent-up traffic, the chronic block, and the perilous crossing of that Via Dolorosa—Parliament? The present condition of this fashionable and choked-up thoroughfare is intolerable; but how are the evils complained of to be remedied? For these Echoes are printed the House of Commons may have decided our way or the other on the scheme first repudiated, but now indorsed, by the Board of Works, for opening up Hamilton-place upon a short cut into Piccadilly. And Echoes of the previous and benighted are to widen the Hyde Park-corner approach. Was there ever such a lame and impotent proposition? To say nothing of the proprietors of the houses who hold leases under the Crown, and who have been promised the advantage of the increased possession of their property. To timber up Hamilton-place will not open, so the cabmen and others tell the public, more than two thousand pounds: that is to say, if it can be carried out, ten thousand pounds might not do more than open the middle of the Atlantic Ocean; for we shall assuredly have to spend, at one date, five times that sum before we can get to cut the knot of the difficulty, which can only be done by widening the southern and the Hyde Park-corner approaches. Then the ugliest and dingiest nuisance in the London streets, which for the last ten years of improvement has been allowed to remain, as well as the mean little shops, taverns, and tenements opposite the Hyde Park-corner station, might make a very respectable starting Hyde Park from Piccadilly to Oxford-street.

Everybody has heard of Le Petit Manifestant, the Paris toy which "explains itself" perfectly by a benevolent French gentleman in the days when people were not ashamed to be simple, and when the perfection of the human species "There there is the pretty and thoroughly French-looking illustration of Le Petit Anglais, designed to keep us in a happy age, a continuous succession of comely and virtuous maidens. Paupers, however, however, that Petit Anglais may be, no matter-of-fact Leaden there exists an undowment offering many points of resemblance with the Manifestant and the Anglais—with the conventional of the French Academy and the time-honoured fore-at Amiens. A friend of a sensible character, and one Clergy Orphan Corporation, left, some time since, a large sum of money for the interest on which a number of little pounds was to be periodically conferred on the most meritorious and deserving girls connected with the Clergy Orphan Corporation. The orphan par excellence this year is Miss Fanny Payne; and the deserving girl is Miss Jane Forbes, the kindest grandma ever was to the lucky young orphan by his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury in the presence of the Lord Mayor and a numerous party. Bravo! Miss Fanny Payne.

A prize has been sent to the subscriber a pamphlet entitled "The Reform Club an Enemy of Progress, an Opponent of Reform, the Perverter of Abraham Lincoln's Proclamation against Freedom of Thought and the Rights of Electors." The author of this remarkable production is Mr. Alfred Russel Wallace, Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, President of the Historic Society, and a gentleman who has have got an enemy, an opponent, and a perverter. Reform Club's a nasty place; but I would rather not review Mr. Sneed's pamphlet. I always thought that the Reform Club was the Headquarters of Mr. Gibson, Mr. Colebee, and Mr. Bright, with some hundreds more appointments of Liberal Members; were members of the Reform Club; but I never heard that the Premier was an enemy of progress, the Foreign Secretary an opponent of Reform, or the chairman of the Anti-Corn-Law League and the Commercial Treaty with France a perverter of Liberal Measures.

There is, perhaps, a good deal of vagueness and uncertainty just now in regard to the landmarks of political parties. The terms Whig and Tory, Conservative and Liberal, have just now all the confusion of signification. Perhaps "Preservers" and "Destructives" might not be inappropriate designations. Be that as it may, Conservatives now divide the realm of political thought. Stay, "another way," as Mr. Micawber says. Liberals and Liberals in America and Liberals who "on the fence"—that is, half one way and half the other, and willing to jump either. We are not sure that Mr. Labouchere is not a moderate and a Liberal done, a Tory sneaking-room and a Whig one? It will be remembered that Mr. Asquith, of Eatanswill, asked Mr. Bob Sawyer to what political party he belonged, he answered "to the Pinch Club" admirably. It would be much more significant than the names of Gibson-Bowles, Labouchere, Cathone, Garricks—which are springing up all around.

That famous Anaxes of Scessia, Belle Boyd, now Mrs. Harding—and whose marriage to the brave and susceptible Kentuckian we always considered, as Omphalia converted Hercules, to Southern proclivities, who now is in London, and proposes to lecture, here, and in London, and prospers, it is said, to publish her memoirs as a Secesh heroine and Federal spy—Shenandoah Jackson. Unfortunately I cannot fail to be very interesting. Belle Boyd has been the Flora Macdonald, the Rachel Lyndsay, the Grace Darling of the South—a fair suffered captivity, exile, and poverty for the cause which she believed to be right. Let us, if we will, give the devil his due. Friends to know that her husband, who was taken prisoner while attempting to run the blockade—and who, under the circumstances, might have expected to languish in a Federal prison until the termination of the war—has been liberally released, and has rejoined his wife in England.

There is another lecturer who, if Belle Boyd leaves the native pendler—just now in London, and who is being lionised to the last degree of the word—is Mr. Sala. Mr. Sala, as they used to say in the days of the Grand Monarque; and a grand fold-day was held in his especial honour at Gatti's Adelphi on Thursday. Mr. Sala was, as from the Northern side of the hedge. His name is General Burlow, and he is one of the most popular men in the Scots Fusilier Guards. On the commencement of the war General Burlow was a peaceful lawyer in the City of London. He was called to the attack on Sonatar, he enlisted in the Federal army as a private; rapidly obtained promotion, was in all the great battles in the Wilderness and at Spottsylvania Courthouse; captured a Confederate flag, and was wounded, and, for his distinguished gallantry, was made a Major-General. This Paladin of the North is a man of letters, and has published a book. A man as you might picture George Brummell to have been when he was a Dandy of the Line. Mr. Sala's reception was a most enthusiastic one, as what are years to those who are made of the heroic stuff? How old is Mr. Sala? Nobody knows, and nobody inquires at Arcola's?

Two great black pageants mark the present week. In this letter, cager, nipping weather we are not going to attempt to do as you may take two coats of invitation with the broadest of safe borders. One such is the Cordwainer's last and leather ball, embossed in mourning purple within the border—tells me that on Thursday there is a grand assembly of requisite at St. Mary's Mansion House, to the repose of the soul of his Eminence the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster. Another, but more festive circumstances read, proclaims that on Saturday takes place, in Westminster Palace Hotel, the marriage of Mr. Alfred Algernon, Duke of Northumberland, K.G. Of both these dismal solemnities I shall have something to say next week.

To many persons the Canadian Defence question may be a mystery and to others a bore; but it is a question which will affect not only the defences of Hochelaga, about Mr. William Howard Russell's "Canada" Canada is not made to read. There is a capital description in it of the Skating Rink at Montreal and the hair gelinneuses who delight to display their graces on the ice—and, for all Mr. Russell, how could you be bold enough to say that the "Canadian Canadian" is a large beauty?—? Unattendus, à la Tawyer, of scarlet flannel would be a gentelier term. In this you must be greeted or die.

Let it not be forgotten, oh ye amateurs of private theatricals! that to-day (Saturday) and Monday next there will be given in the Bijou Theatre, adjoining the Bijou Restaurant, in the Haymarket, two dramatic performances by officers in the Foot Guards. A prologue, written by Mr. Shirley Brooks, and spoken by Mr. Percy Fielding and Mrs. A. Wigan, will commence the performances each evening. This fiasco is in aid of the funds of the "Guards' Industrial Home." With his Royal Highness the Prince as patron, and Colonel De Bathe as manager of the festivities, nothing short of triumphant success can be anticipated.

The Brussels journals announce that King Leopold, who had been confined to his apartments by a severe cold, is now nearly recovered.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

IT has been assumed—on grounds perhaps sufficiently slight—that the Opposition in Parliament did not propose to make any stay this Session. This supposition was probably founded on Lord Derby's real or affected disinclination on the opening night to discuss an innocuous Queen's Speech, and his gentle and genial criticisms on Ministerial policy; and still more on the very remarkable silence which Mr. Disraeli has maintained in the other houses, although those who may have closely observed may have seen that he is very often in earnest conversation with members on his party, and peculiarly gracious in his manner to them. Then, too, that public which watches the proceedings of party leaders may have noticed that Lord Derby and Mr. Disraeli are each giving a series of Parliamentary dinners—a one old-fashioned, perhaps, but still a most effective party agency at critical moments of party affairs. There has, however, been something to indicate that Opposition quiescence or inaction—if not nonexistence—was but the result of a wise and deep opinion—it more meaning than real. An incident has occurred which will not strengthen the mutual confidence, but may stay the violence—in that stage which precedes an eruption. A slashing debate in the House of Lords (to which we shall presently refer) took this time of the year—went far to prove this notion. An exmember of that Cabinet of three weeks which Lord Stanley had managed to shuffle on from 1852 to 1858—and whom it was impossible to name here on his assembled Ministry in 1858, after an exhibition of administrative knowledge and ability in supposing that he had put down the Indian mutiny by a speech, and who (after the fall of the city of Delhi (covering a space of seven square miles) could be surrounded on 3 sides) had declared that "now was the time to act in order that he might never more be heard of—inaugurated a notion which was in its nature and tone hostile to the Government. Their policy in reference to the defences of Canada being called in question by an excellent friend behind them was awkward; but, "clinging to the civilized humanities, might not the Government, as Lord Derby, evidently in the "Prince Rupert" vein, bounced up and went in for one of those famous spectacular displays which Mr. Disraeli had described when he compared his new chief to the dashing but inspectent leader of the cavalier horse; but, as the battle, on that point, was irresistible, but he returned to find his camp in the possession of the enemy. To speak without circumlocution or ambiguity, the leader of the Opposition delivered an address which, while it only temporarily damaged Ministers, enunciated a policy which must assuredly not be remembered and set up against him any time that he may come to be First Minister of England. If the speech meant anything, it meant that the Conservative leader was in a false position—as any rate, the Americans which would render him only too pleased if they should give him a cause for war. Mr. Disraeli, in the House of Commons, speaks without any sense of responsibility, and is held to be only a very elegant and very elegant satirist in Parliament—and as he has not made half so inflammatory an address as that political chief who it may be supposed, once a week at Cleveland House, has to endure few of his followers to understand that the hour of his advent to power is at hand. Besides this, the Ministerial explanation—prompt and sudden might have been the impulse which dictated the peculiar tone of Lord Derby's speech, the intention to impeach this particular Ministerial policy was not the thought of an impulsive hour, or any rate, that it has been deliberately adopted since, for Mr. Scrymour Fitzgerald, who has been elected "stroke" of the Tory Opposition boat, afterwards gave notice of a motion to make the same question in the Commons. Were we loath to call so high a name to account for such his apparent reticence. The only other signal event in the Upper House was a curious though brief discussion which has since been formally introduced to his father—that is, Mr. Slingsby Bethell, having been appointed one of the clerks of the Crown in Chancery—which exists, led up by the chief clerk to the Lord Chancellor, sitting on the woolsack, and, with the usual courtesies, presented to the House notice. Certainly such a mutual recognition must have reminded the participants therein of the proverbial meetings of the augurs of the ancients.

The vitality of the House of Commons has been but slight, unless when the Irish element was introduced by the Irish members, more especially Mr. Scully, who had hitherto engrossed a monopoly of that process; but seem assisted by one or two of the more recent English members of the House. Who would have supposed that Sir Hugh Cairns would have been found to be the first to "put his foot in Irish row in Parliament? Never, however, was there such a case of latent mischief's taken under a generous shelter as in the instance of the never weak Irish tortoises called upon in a more insidious but more gentlemanly way "to treat a foe" than in the case of the well-known Milesian call to arms—than by the great lawyer and rising hope of the Conservative party. There is nothing of the Irishman—even of the Irish gentleman in manner or speech, about Sir Hugh Cairns. Only once and again, when he uses the word "Ireland" in his speech, does he use a brogue, and an accent which causes it to sound as if it were spelt "Oirland;" but that is all. Nevertheless, there is in the sarcasm, which was varied occasionally by little bursts of well-managed animation, such as a practised Parliamentary man can exhibit at moments when he is particularly cool, but which did not verge on the particular Irish style of Mr. Scully, or Mr. Sadleir of yesterday, and a tingling taunt which was calculated to rouse any opponent of any temperament, and which were, if not intended, at least powerful to provoke angry discussion. Particularly, however, Sir Robert Peel presented himself, if we may be allowed to use the expression, in the character of a "fiery Irishman" contrasted with the distant parties—if there were any—with the neutralising force of a quasi-provincial effect. His speech was calculated (and probably was enough)—a thing of shreds and patches—but curiously effective in its way: for there were hard hits and sore points, and personalities and retorts which made even Sir Hugh Cairns wince, and set some of the Orange Irish members into ill-concealed rage. It was full of sarcasm, groans, shouts, and not even appropriate as a fanciful idea; but we never can see and hear Sir Robert Peel at work on any of his long speeches without being vividly reminded of the gambols of a young bear, when that creature, but rather ungainly fish is particularly lively and in dispersing itself in a tolerably high state. In the House, also, the House was perhaps too thin to please Mr. Whiteside, for he withdrew, and left the stage to Lord Castlereagh, who, in the most matter-of-fact boasting with excitement, and who more than ever illustrated his special manner of making a speech. He has the power of muscle of his body to contribute to the force of his observations, and who seems to have been born for the declamatory style of action as applied to eloquence from a very popular representation imported into this country many years ago, and well known by the name—probably not generally comprehended—of Punchinello. There was much, very much, in Mr. Whiteside's speech which soon followed, to lead to eversion amongst his critics and to do away with an opinion held by many Englishmen that he is not great in the House as he is in the Irish Courts, the greatness in the one being derived from such very different elements to those which prevail in the other. Perhaps Mr. Whiteside was somewhat between him and Sir Robert Peel, and his not having to answer on the instant, enabled him to begin in a manner which was comparatively tame, which led up to attention; while the rhetorical manner in which he managed to work up to a fine passage, and his use of the most special qualifications and his most idiosyncratic style, was masterly. A more powerful, and certainly a more eloquent speech, we shall not be never made.

Except that Mr. Baines brought in his "single-barrelled Reform Bill," under very odd circumstances, there has been little more worth chronicling in the Lower House. It was, however, curious that the introduction of a measure for the extension of the suffrage should have, apparently, frightened every member of the Government from the Treasury bench, even Lord Palmerston breaking his custom and going away earlier than usual. The Ministerial seat was literally bare; not a Minister was at that moment in the house, although Mr. Brand was crouching beside the Speaker's chair, waiting for the moment to arrive when he would have to perform the pleasing duty specially attached to his office, that of moving the adjournment of the House. However, Mr. Baines knows that on the second reading there will be no such opportunity of escape; and there is a whisper that occasion will be made out of the debate on the bill in that stage to make a grand Parliamentary Reform demonstration.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

SIR J. G. Lefevre, Clerk of the Parliaments, introduced Mr. Hans. S. Bethell, the new Reading Clerk and Clerk of their Lordships' Committees, who took his seat at the table.

THE DEFENCE OF CANADA.

Lord LYVEDEN called attention to the report of Colonel Jervoise on the defence of Canada, which, he urged, showed unanimously the defenceless state of that colony. He would not enter into the question which had been raised by Canada and this country towards placing the colony in a position of defence, and what provision had been made for placing gun-boats on the lakes, and especially on Lake Ontario. Her Majesty's Government ought to be in a position to say what they intended to do with regard to the defence of Canada. He moved for copies of the correspondence which had taken place between the Governor-General and Her Majesty's Government upon the subject, and that the papers which had been laid on the table embodied the report of Colonel Jervoise, as to the Militia Act, that the Government proposed to ask Parliament and Canada to join in providing for the defence of the colony, it was necessary to know the ground on which that plan would be proposed. In the Estimates for the present year there would be included a sum of £50,000 for the defence of the Province of Quebec; and it was proposed that the Canadian Government should undertake the fortifying of Quebec, and that the Imperial Government, as the City of Quebec was about to build for 80,000 militia, and her Majesty's Government would provide the armament and the military force.

The EARL OF DERBY strongly censured the Government for having so long delayed the production of the report of Colonel Jervoise, which contained in a more definite shape than he could have made it the actual preparations on the frontier.

Earl GRANVILLE reminded the House that it was only in November last that any question arose with regard to the lakes. He believed that a strong feeling of defencelessness existed among the people of the country; and, as long as the colony was prepared to take a fair share, both in money and men, to defend itself, he thought the Government was bound in the manner deserving of a great country in such a cause.

Lord FITZHARDINGE and Lord CLANRICARDE having addressed the House,

Earl RUSSELL expressed his regret that the subject had been introduced, because he thought it was one which could not be discussed with safety. He had always declined to enter into the question of defence. That being so, Government could not have asked Parliament to vote a large sum of money for a purpose which, in a measure, depended upon the co-operation by the Canadians, the Government were prepared to act at once.

The Duke of NEWCASTLE said that the Militia Bill, and the subject of what steps were to be taken as to naval armaments on the lakes was under consideration.

Earl DE GREY AND RIPON explained that it was impossible to expend £20,000 in the manner proposed by the noble lord.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

SIR G. Grey, in answer to Sir C. Lefevre, said that a Royal Commission would be issued in a few days to inquire into the military defences of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Thesiger, Solicitor-General, in answer to Mr. Locke King, said that the Board of Inland Revenue had no power to remit the duty, but only an authority, to take the evidence of professional men on any improvement in the mode of collecting the duty, and to report the same to the House.

The Bank of Ireland Bill—the object of which is to alter the mode of communicating the profits of the bank to the proprietors—was read a second time.

The Crown Suits (Ireland) Bill and the Debtors International Extradition Bill passed through Committee.

The Civil Bill Courts (Ireland) Act, 1851, Amendment Bill, the Elections Petitions Act, 1856, Amendment Bill, and the Copyright Amendment Bill were read a second time.

Mr. Hilliard moved for the appointment of a Committee to report to parliament whether it was expedient to alter certain regulations, and to repeal certain enactments relating to the Inns of Court and Chancery.

Mr. Whiteside obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the constitution of the Court of Queen's Bench, and to make provision for the office of Vice-Chancellor of the United States Court.

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO THE POOR-LAW BOARD.—RETIRING OF THE FOUR IN ERNOR.

Mr. A. Smith moved that the parliamentary secretary rendered capable of sitting or voting as a member of the house by the ninth clause of the Poor-Law Act, 1834, by vacating his office of secretary.

Mr. Villiers said that this question had been deliberately discussed on three different occasions—in 1846, in the Session of Parliament in 1847, and in 1848, which inquired into the subject of public salaries, and it had been decided that the office of Parliamentary secretary to the Poor-Law Board was occupied as necessary. In the Committee that sat last year which inquired into the subject of public salaries, the office of the Poor-Law Board was raised and discussed, and it was agreed that this secretary was as necessary as the Parliamentary secretary to the Board of Trade or the Poor-Law Office of present was how greater than it had ever been, and the duties of the Parliamentary secretary had increased in proportion.

After a few observations from Mr. Bernal Osborne,

Mr. Gladstone said it was a great mistake to suppose that the Poor-Law Department was a department of the House of Commons, and was responsible to the House, but a contrary complaint had been made, to the effect that too many of the Members of the House were connected with it. Even while the President of the Poor-Law Board was a member of the Lower House his public duties were not confined to attendance in the House, but he was obliged to visit workhouses, to receive deputations at the department there; while as to the amount of work at the office, it was very great, and was increasing.

The motion was withdrawn.

Mr. Villiers moved for leave to bring in a bill to provide for the better administration of the Poor-Law in Ireland. He explained that the chief complaint that union funds should bear the charge of all the poor in each union; that the aims of the Poor-Law Commissioners in Ireland were to relieve only the poor law, the cause in the present Act casting on parishes chargeability for the support, and transferring the question of removability from the overseers to the guardians.

After a short discussion leave was given.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The Lord Chancellor presented a bill to confer on the county courts a limited jurisdiction in matters of bankruptcy and insolvency, and to extend to others property was of the value of £100 or £150, and disputes arose, they could be settled in the county courts. The bill also proposed to establish a uniform system of proceeding in bankruptcy and contract debt. It was proposed to empower the County Court Judges to appoint a registrar, who should act as solicitor to the petitioning creditor, and to the assignee, and who should be bring in a general measure which would shorten the period within which debts could be recovered, and would, he hoped, be the means of preventing the accumulating injuries drunk on the premises. The bill was read a first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

Mr. William took the oath and his seat for Shaftesbury.

Mr. W. Cowper, in answer to Sir J. Shelley, said that, looking to the fine which had been inflicted on the proprietors of the Times for the obstruction to Whitehall-place and Victoria-street, and the cost of Westminster Abbey and the Houses of Parliament, the Government did not think it necessary to insert that clause in the Metropolis Local Management Act. It was proposed to raise the clock-tower with stone, and to surround the adjacent vacant ground with a wall, and the Government thought that provision might be extended to make abstractions in St. Margaret-square, so as to give more room and convenience for the passage of carriages to and from Abingdon street.

Mr. Baines obtained leave to bring in a bill to extend the elective franchise to boroughs in England and Wales, by means of reducing the qualification from the present one of £10 to £6.

Sir C. Clifford moved for leave to bring in a bill to amend the law of libel and for more effectually securing the liberty of the press, the object of which was to regulate proceedings for libel. He thought that no criminal prosecution should be laid without the sanction of the law officers of the Crown; and that no ordinary action for libel should be brought except by leave of a judge at chambers, it was proposed that persons making libellous speeches which were published by newspapers should be responsible for the publication of those papers; and that no action should lie against them for the insertion of such speeches.

Mr. Newdegate obtained leave to bring in a bill for the commutation of Church Rates.

Lord Henry Scott, in moving for the appointment of a Committee of Select Committee to inquire into the best means of preserving for the public use the Lavery, and the Royal Parks and gardens, and the metropolis, Mr. Alderman Rose seconded the motion, and said that if the Committee was granted the noble lord the member for Dover would be that case be willing to designate it, the inclosure of Wimbledon-common, could not be perpetrated.—After some further conversation the motion was withdrawn.

Lord John Russell said that Government would not oppose the motion of Lord Henry Scott if they thought it would be a useful measure, but could not be considered as an outrage, that noble Lord courting every inquiry before a Committee. He thought that the motion of Alderman Rose withdrew the experiment he had sent, and the motion was agreed to.

RECRUITING FOR THE ARMY.—Mr. O'REILLY called attention to the present mode of recruiting for the Army, and moved the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the subject. The hon. member considered that the existing system was in practice but another form of impressment, and necessarily led to wholesale desertion. As a remedy, he recommended straightforward enlistments from the militia into the line, local recruiting in the districts in which the regiments were known, and the extension of the period of service from ten to twelve years.—The Marquis of HARTINGTON said the suggestions of the mover were casually entitled to weight, and some of them were already under the consideration of the War Office; but although there were many evils incidental to the present system, he could not agree to the motion, as a Royal Commission had but lately reported on the subject. After some discussion the motion was withdrawn.

BRITISH ESTABLISHMENTS ON THE WESTERN COAST OF AFRICA.—Mr. ADDERLEY moved for the appointment of a Committee on the British settlements on the western coast of Africa. He gave an historical sketch of the acquisition of the territory in this region. He contended that, as the territory had been acquired for which they were acquired, the suppression of the slave trade, he urged that those settlements had been practically conquered from the native chiefs—and, therefore, that the British Government had a right to levy taxes for the purpose of maintaining them. Lord STANLEY supported the principle of the motion, but thought that the case for the country need to Africa had not been sufficiently made out. The steps to suppress the slave trade had been simply rapid; and, as regarded the settlements, he thought it would be a mistake to withdraw from them. He, however, was of opinion that the time had arrived for reconsidering the policy in furtherance of which the settlements on the western coast of Africa had been founded. He objected to the motion for inquiry, and he should not limit the terms of an inquiry which was directed from the Government to the state of the settlements on the coast. He, however, deprecated any depreciation of the labours of this country on the improvement of the African race. He thought that the question of the slave trade could be a question of colonization involved in the forging up of settlements on the coast of Africa, and that it was the proper time to reconsider the question in the interest of those settlements with a view to the diminution of expense; but, at the same time to obtain the greatest efficiency for the purpose which we could have in view. He endorsed the policy of this country—that of the suppression of the slave trade.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The report of the Conspiracy to Murder Bill and Justice Building Bill occasioned the Common Law Courts Fees were received.

Mr. E. Cardwell obtained leave to bring in a bill to allow affirmations and declarations to be made instead of oaths in all courts and criminal proceedings in Scotland.

Mr. Dunbar moved the second reading of the Felony and Misdemeanour (Evidence in Certain Cases) Bill, the object of which was to enable parties to criminal cases to that in civil cases by allowing a summing up by counsel on both sides. The bill also proposed to abolish the rule by the prosecutor to compel to contradict a witness and to let his credibility by cutting impeaching evidence. The bill also proposed to allow the wife to be a witness for or against her husband. The bill also proposed to abolish the practice which he proposed was already established in Ireland. After a few observations from Mr. Bernal Osborne, stating that the bill was of such a character that he thought it should be so comfort that all the rules of evidence applicable in civil cases should apply to criminal cases, the bill was read a second time, and passed.

COSTS OF PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. Scourfield moved the second reading of his Private Bill Costs Bill, stating that he brought it in as chairman of a Committee of last year which unanimously recommended that some measure should be offered to the House; Mr. Massey, the late Chairman of Committees, especially having given an opinion to that effect. The object of the bill was to put an end to costs against parties to any railway bills the proceedings on which were obtained by the promoters of the bill, whether by bribery, corruption, fraud, perjury, or fulfilling the meaning of some such words which would hereafter be inserted in the bill. After a few words from Mr. Walpole, it was agreed to the bringing more preparative schemes and to prevent vexatious opposition to pass a fair opposition.

The House went into Committee on the bill pro forma.

Mr. Denman thought the terms of the bill were a little too large, but he should support it.

Mr. Pusey and Mr. Torrens supported the bill.

Mr. Bouverie and Mr. Hutchinson moved that the provisions of the bill be extended to all private bills.

Mr. Hutchinson supported the motion.

Mr. M. Gibson thought the principle of the bill was very doubtful; but, under the circumstances, he should not oppose it. He, however, should, on the third hearing, suggest that it should be referred to a Select Committee.

Mr. Scourfield, in reply, said that he should be glad to have the bill referred to a Select Committee.

After a few remarks from Sir G. Grey, the bill was read a second time.

On the motion of Mr. M. Gibson, the bill was ordered to be referred to a Select Committee.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

Crown Colonies (Australia).—Lord Stanley, in moving for a return of the correspondence relating to the settlement of a Crown colony in the northern part of Moreton Bay, said that it was his intention to introduce a bill to the House upon the subject. The noble Lord said he considered that the territory lying between the Hunter River and Moreton Bay would at the present moment, of considerable importance; and it was a matter of great interest to settlers in that district that the land should be surveyed. Two methods had been proposed—namely, that the territory should be sunk by the Crown, or that it should be granted to the settlers. He was not prepared to say that it would be desirable to make a separate colony at once, but he suggested that a settlement should be established at Port Curtis, and that the best course would be to erect it into a Crown colony. The Earl of Carnarvon said that the appeals had been made by the Hudson's Bay Company for the settlement of the Red River territory, and he was unwilling to interfere with the views of the Crown Government, but no definite arrangement had been concluded. Recently a further proposal had been made by the above-named company, which had been sent by her Majesty's Government to the Canadian Government, with a request that they would communicate their views with regard to the settlement of the territory of the Hudson's Bay Company and their own. In the present state of the correspondence on the subject of the Hudson's Bay Company he should be injudicious to allude to anything with regard to the Red River territory. He could not, however, conceal from himself that it had been brought that the Canadian Government ought to consider the matter very seriously before they took any step that would amount to a pledge on behalf of this country to the construction of a railway in connection with it, as much as the difficulties of sending troops there would be almost insuperable.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

Piccadilly and Park-lane (New Road).—On the question for the second reading of this bill, Sir J. Trelawny said that he did not consider this bill should be read a second time without a considerable amount of inquiry. An explanation was desirable on the part of Government previous to the House coming to a decision on the second reading of the bill. The object of the bill was no doubt desirable in effecting a communication between Piccadilly and Park-lane, but he thought it would be desirable that the bill itself had formed the subject of newspaper discussion, and that the public should have had an opportunity of seeing it. The bill would not give the slightest information to the House from Hamilton-place was proved, in his opinion, by Mr. Nelson, and to let the bill be read a second time without consideration of it. He conceived by moving that the bill be read a second time that day six months—Mr. Hutt thought that there was an unusual degree of interest in the attention of the House to the cost that would be incurred if they adopted any plan for the improvement of the Piccadilly and Park-lane thoroughfare. Mr. Mitchell supported the bill.—General Peel said that he did not know why the Government should be called upon to give any opinion on the subject, as the matter was entirely in the hands of the House to allow the bill to go into Committee, where it would receive ample consideration.—After a few words from Mr. Bernal Osborne, the bill was read a second time.

Irish Peerages.—The Greenwich Union Officers.—Mr. Villiers, in reply to Mr. Bernal Osborne, said that, by the law as it now stood, it was intended; and, indeed of Irish peerages being merely deposited as the court of Chancery, and not subject to their natural parents. The bill was intended to arrest from a departure from that enactment, and had formed the subject of inquiry.

Prisoners in Newgate.—Mr. Locke asked the Home Secretary whether it was true that prisoners in Newgate were allowed to receive visits from their friends without the presence of a gaoler, and whether he had taken any steps on suspicion of any offence are perpetrated of their untrustedly lodged in Newgate, and whether he had taken any steps to prevent such practices.—Mr. Walpole said that he had no power to close out their own cells, and whether they are deprived of proper means of communication with their friends, and whether they are in proper health; whether all persons remanded on suspicion are prohibited from seeing their wives and children except in the presence of a gaoler; whether in the presence of a gaoler; whether persons so treated, and ultimately acquitted or discharged, are entitled to any compensation for their imprisonment; and if less serious offences are treated the same as persons charged with murder.—Mr. Walpole said that he had no power to close out their own cells, and to deprive them of proper means of communication with their friends, and to close out their cells. Their friends were allowed to see them under certain regulations, and whether they were in proper health was a question for medical practitioners in Scotland.

Medical practitioners in Scotland.—Mr. Black asked the Lord Advocate whether it was true that any widow could be practised by medical practitioners in Scotland under the 41st section of the Act 17 and 18 Vict., cap. 80, to practise in Scotland, and whether the Act 21 Vict., cap. 24 Vict., cap. 72, did not does he intend to take the necessary steps to procure a repeal of this enactment, and so place medical practitioners in Scotland on a footing of equality with medical practitioners in England and Ireland.—The Lord Advocate said that the Act 21 Vict., cap. 24 Vict., cap. 72, did not repeal the Act of 1815, and that emergency had been created. With regard to the second part of the question, he had to inform the hon. member that it was not his intention to bring in any bill on the subject.

Banks of Issue Bill.—On the order of the day for the second reading of this bill, Mr. Buchanan moved an amendment to the effect that it is expedient to inquire into the working of the Acts regulating banks of issue, and in the mean time that the second reading of the bill be postponed. A discussion thereupon ensued, in the course of which the Chancellor of the Exchequer remarked that the point in issue was not one of free trade as connected with this branch of commercial operations: banking was one thing—the issue of promissory notes by a finance banking company another. On the whole, he deprecated any discussion as to the larger portion of the general principle, especially at this period of the existence of the present Parliament.—Ultimately the amendment was withdrawn, and the bill was read a second time.

The Lord Advocate obtained leave to introduce a bill to alter and amend the system of the registration of writs relative to land in Scotland. The Courts of Justice Building Bill was passed through Committee. The Courts of Justice Concentration (Site) Bill was read a second time.

COUNTRY NEWS.

This year's exhibition of the Royal North Lancashire Agricultural Society will be held at Accrington in August.

Mr. Schneider, a Liberal, was on Monday elected, without opposition, for Lancaster, in the room of the late Mr. Gregson.

The Bristol Town Council has adopted the provisions of the Act for closing public and refreshment houses between the hours of one and four a.m. by a majority of twenty-seven to seventeen.

A new effort is to be made by Lieutenant Campbell, one of the claimants of the earldom and entailed estates of Breadalbane, to get a judicial manager of the estates appointed pending the litigation.

Mr. Sotheron Estcourt has issued an address to the electors of North Wilts stating that increasing bodily infirmity renders it necessary for him to retire from Parliament at the earliest possible opportunity.

An earthquake shock was felt on Wednesday week in the neighbourhood of Furness, North Lancashire. There was an upheaval of the earth in some places, bells were set ringing, and chimney-stacks were thrown down.

The Queen has approved of Mr. John Raspen Ringrose as Consul at Hull, and for all the ports on the Humber, for the King of the Netherlands; and of Mr. Gustav Heyn as Consul at Belfast for the King of Hanover.

The Fine-Art and Industrial Exhibition at Lancaster continues to attract numerous visitors, and promises a successful result in a financial point of view. On Monday next several railway companies intend to run trains to Lancaster at single fares for the double journey, adding a charge for admission to the exhibition.

A lawyer's clerk, named M'Erlone, has been committed at Belfast for uttering seditious remarks. The man, who was drunk at the time, is a Fenian. He cursed the Queen, said that he had the command of 30,000 men, and that he would like to be the executioner of the Prince of Wales. Bail was refused.

In Liverpool last week the births were 373, the deaths 384; in Manchester—births 222, deaths 241; in Salford—births 69, deaths 68; in Birmingham—births 231, deaths 163; in Leeds—births 169, deaths 163; in Bristol—births 89, deaths 86; in Edinburgh—births 140, deaths 119; in Glasgow—births 324, deaths 391; in Dublin—births 152, deaths 167.

At Edinburgh, on Monday, the Lord Provost, in the presence of a large assemblage, presented to the Rev. Dr. Guthrie the testimonial which had been subscribed for on the occasion of his retirement from public duties. The testimonial consisted of £5000; and several pieces of silver plate were at the same time presented to Mrs. Guthrie. Lords Jerviswoode and Ardmillan and Dean Ramsay took part in the proceedings.

The revenue of the Duchy of Lancaster, as shown by a return to Parliament, amounted to £49,914 during the year ending Dec. 21, 1864. Of this there was paid to the Keeper of her Majesty's Privy Purse £26,000, and £3985 was expended in the purchase of £4000 Exchequer bills, being money held for the restoration of the Savoy Chapel. £1980 was expended as donations and charities, and the balance due from capital amounted to £6161.

A meeting was held at the Royal Institution, Manchester, on Monday, for the purpose of opening an exhibition of works of Art contributed by working men, intended to show what the working people of the district can do in matters of taste and ornament. The meeting was held in the lecture-hall, which was well filled with people taking an interest in the scheme. Sir J. Kay-Shuttleworth presided, and there were present the Mayors of Manchester and Salford, the Dean of Manchester, and other influential inhabitants. The number of exhibitors is 200, all resident in the town or neighbourhood; and there are about 700 specimens of art-workmanship.

The Cambridge middle-class examinations held last December have been the most successful hitherto held, both as regards the number of candidates and the percentage of those who passed. They were held at the fifteen places in which they were held the previous year, and also at four new centres—namely, Barnstaple, Hastings, Southampton, and Windsor. Moreover, an examination of six senior candidates was, by the aid of the Colonial Office, successfully conducted in Trinidad. The whole number of candidates entered was 844—655 juniors and 179 seniors. The number of juniors is 151 more than last year. In the case of the seniors the increase is 64. The receipts amounted to £699 and the expenditure to £685.

The return of pauperism in the cotton districts exhibited another increase last week. We learn from the Manchester Guardian that eighteen unions, in the aggregate, relieved 2000 more persons than the previous week, and seven unions fewer by 740; this leaves a net increase of 1260. Three unions experienced no change in their relief lists. The following unions increased by the numbers respectively stated, viz.:—Ashton-under-Lyne, 300; Blackburn, 290; Bolton, 100; Chorlton, 130; Glossop, 240; Saddleworth, 200; and Todmorden, 210. Manchester decreased 480, which, within ten, is the amount of the previous week's increase. The number of adult able-bodied increased 510. The guardians distributed £2937 in outdoor relief, or £102 more than in the first week of February; at the same time, it is to be observed that this item is now nearly £3900 less than it was in the corresponding week of 1864.

The report of the Registrar-General of Marriages in Ireland shows that there have been 8188 marriages registered in Ireland during 1863. Of these, 4514 were according to the rites of the Established Church, 2362 were solemnised in Presbyterian meeting-houses, 1200 in registrars' offices by civil contract, 101 in registered places of worship, and eleven were marriages by the Society of Friends. There has been an annual decrease in the marriages registered since 1859, in which year there were 9261, being 1073 more than in 1863. This diminution has, no doubt, been mainly caused by the very large emigration from this country. The decrease in the last twelve months, compared with the preceding year (1862), amounted to 242. The greatest diminution was in Presbyterian marriages, which decreased by 127; those in the Established Church were less by fifty in 1863 than in 1862; and those by civil contract fell off by eighty-seven. As regards the marriages of Jews, there were not any registered in Ireland in 1863, and only three in 1862. The marriages which exhibited an increase in 1863 were those between members of the Society of Friends, and those in registered buildings—the former having increased from eight to eleven, and the latter from seventy-nine to 101. The increase in marriages in registered buildings is due to the passing of the Act 26 Vic., cap. 27, by which the presence of the registrar is dispensed with at marriages in places of worship registered under the 27th section of the 7 and 8 Vic., cap. 81; and the increase in the marriages in such buildings will diminish those by civil contract; as, before the passing of the Amendment Act referred to, which came into operation on the 1st of August last, the parties who belonged to those places of worship were in many instances married before the registrar of the district in which they lived.—By the return of the Registrar-General of Ireland for the year 1864 it appears that 84,556 persons left the country to the end of July, being an increase of 41,080 on the number for the previous year. Since the 1st of May, 1851, the total emigration has been 1,499,642 persons.

The Committee of Council on Education have issued a minute on the subject of art-schools and art-instruction, dated Jan. 9, 1865, containing a number of observations on the report and resolutions of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Schools of Art, and other documents. They express agreement with the Select Committee in the opinion that schools of art should rely chiefly on their own resources and local exertions, being relieved from Government control, and free to work according to the wishes and peculiar wants of each locality. They regret the recommendation of the Select Committee to withdraw all grants for the erection of schools; the want of proper buildings, they say, being one of the greatest difficulties in the establishment of schools. They feel bound, however, to adopt the recommendation, and withdraw as well all grants for rent, taxes, and repairs of buildings; but they will promote the erection of suitable buildings by enabling masters of schools of art and local architects to visit the training school and profit by all the experience the department possesses. In accordance with the recommendations, aid will be withdrawn for the purchase of examples of drawing, except towards obtaining a few elementary examples for the night classes. Considering the loose and inaccurate style of drawing still prevailing and always popular, they express a doubt of the expediency of these recommendations. They objected, on various grounds, to the recommendation to give a capitation grant, as violating the principle of self-support and voluntary exertion, by which only art-schools can obtain a permanent footing. By a capitation grant artisans might be tempted to attend without study, for the purpose of its being obtained. A small capitation grant would not be worth the trouble of administration, and a large one would be beyond control. They will not, therefore, recommend this mode of assistance. Any direct payments to be made are not to create the expectation of vested rights. The capitation payment will be continued for elementary drawing in schools for the poor, and payments only on results for elementary instruction to adults and teachers in night classes. In future the department will conduct all correspondence with managers of schools only, and not with the masters. They also concur in the recommendations of the Select Committee for establishing a national art-training school and prizes for national competition. To make the collection at South Kensington as useful as possible throughout the country, they will relieve schools of art that provide a suitable building for a local exhibition of all cost of transport and packing and conducting the exhibitions. The votes for the museum at South Kensington, the schools of art, and for elementary instruction in drawing, will be kept distinct and laid before Parliament in greater detail than heretofore; and the cost of examples to be preserved in the museum will be transferred to the estimate for the museum. The policy of purchases for the national museum does not, they think, affect the question of aid given to local schools of art. In conclusion, the minute states that permission will be requested of the Lords of the Treasury to frame estimates in accordance with the principles laid down. They expect the changes proposed will effect a slight saving this year, and if any increase should take place in future years it will probably be confined to the need of elementary instruction for the poor.

Seven hundred and eighty-two national banks are in operation in the Federal States, with a capital of 183,093,000 dols.

The extension of the railway which is to surround Paris will require seven bridges, which are begun, together with nine locomotives for the Western Railway Company.

The Queen has appointed William Tasker Smith, Esq., registrar in the Mixed Commission Courts at the Cape of Good Hope, to be her Majesty's Consul at Havannah; and Christian Koch, Esq., to be her Majesty's Consul at Frankfort. The Queen has approved of Mr. Julius Meyers as Consul at Demerara for the King of the Netherlands; and of Mr. Charles H. Powers as Consul at Coaticook, Canada, for the United States of America.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

ALL departments of the Stock Exchange have been in a most unsatisfactory state during nearly the whole of the week. Although the Government broker has continued his purchases of Stock for the reduction of the National Debt, prices have ruled heavy, but without any important fluctuations in them. In the Unfunded Debt, very little has been passing. The demand for money for commercial purposes, both at the Bank of England and in Lombard-street, has fallen off; nevertheless, the quotations have been fairly supported, although the supply of capital is very large. The lowest rates are as follow:—

Thirty days' bills	4¾ per cent.	Four months' bills	5¼ per cent.
Sixty days' bills	5 „	Six months' bills	6 „
Three months' bills .. .	5¼ „

Money is still declining in price on the Continent. The quotations in the leading cities are:—

	Bank rate per cent.	Open market per cent.		Bank rate per cent.	Open market per cent.
Paris	4	4	Turin	6	6
Vienna	5	5	Brussels ..	5	4
Berlin	4	4	Madrid	9	10
Frankfort ..	4	4	Hamburg ..	—	3
Amsterdam ..	4½	4½	St. Petersburg	6½	8

The imports of the precious metals have been only moderate. Several parcels of gold have been withdrawn from the Bank for shipment to Spain. The demand for silver is inactive, at 61⅝d. per ounce.

The dealings in Home Stocks on Monday were much restricted, at about stationary prices. Consols, for Money, were 89¼ ½; Ditto, for Account, 89¼ ⅜; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 88⅞ 89; Exchequer Bills, 4s. to 8s. prem.; India Bonds, 10s. to 15s. prem.; India Five per Cents, 103⅞ to 104. Bank Stock was 246 to 248; and India Stock, 215 to 218. The transactions on the following day were limited. Consols, for Transfer, left off at 89 to ⅛; Ditto, for Time, 89¼; Bank Stock, 246 to 248; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 88⅞ ⅞; India Stock, 215 to 218; Ditto, New, 103⅞ to 104; Rupee Paper, 101 to 103, and 109 to 111; India Bonds, 10s. to 15s. prem.; Exchequer Bills, 3s. to 7s. prem. On Wednesday Consols, for Money, closed at 89⅛ ¼; Ditto, for Account, 89¼ ⅜; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 88⅞ 89; Bank Stock, 246 to 248; India Stock, 215 to 218; Annuities, 1885, 14 5-16; India Bonds, 10s. to 15s. prem.; Exchequer Bills, 3s. to 7s. prem. On Thursday the amount of business transacted was very moderate:—Consols, for Money, sold at 89¼ ⅛ ⅜; Ditto, for Account, 89⅜; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 88⅞ 89; Bank Stock, 248; India Five per Cent Stock, 104; and India Bonds, 15s. prem.

A new loan for Peru of £10,000,000, in a Five per Cent Stock, at 83½, is announced.

All American Securities have been heavy, at drooping prices. United States Five per Cents have been 62½; Erie Shares, 33¼; and Illinois Central, 52½.

According to the Board of Trade returns, the total exports of British and Irish produce and manufactures last year were valued at £160,436,302, against £146,602,342 in 1863, and £123,992,264 in 1862.

Spanish Passive Stock and Spanish Certificates have been somewhat extensively dealt in, and prices have improved. The Confederate Loan has ruled heavy, and has fallen to 55 and 56. Most other Foreign Securities have steadily supported previous quotations. Italian Scrip has sold at 1½ to 1¼ dis.; Egyptian, ⅝ to 1½ prem.; and Danubian, ⅝ to ⅛ dis. Brazilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents have been done at 83¼; Chilian Six per Cents, 102; Egyptian Seven per Cents, 98¾; Greek, 22½; Mexican Three per Cents, 27; Ditto, 1864, 26; Ditto, Anglo-French, 54; Moorish, 93 ex div.; Peruvian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 88; Portuguese Three per Cents, 47⅞; Russian Old Five per Cents, 92; Ditto, 1862, 89; Ditto, 1864, 91; Spanish Deferred, 40½; Ditto, Passive, 32¾; Ditto, Certificates, 15⅜; Turkish Old Six per Cents, 92; Ditto, 1858, 73; Ditto, 1862, 71; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 63¼; and Italian Five per Cents, 64.

A full average business has been transacted in Joint-stock Bank Shares, and prices have ruled firm. Alliance have sold at 39¾; Ditto, 23½; Bank of Egypt, 31 ex div.; Bank of Queensland, 21½; British North American, 44⅞; Chartered of India, Australia, and China, 30½; Colonial, 42; Consolidated, 11⅝; English, Scottish, and Australian Chartered, 19⅞; English and Swedish, 13½; Imperial, 31½; Land Mortgage of India, 4½; London and Brazilian, 42½; London Chartered of Australia, 23¾; London and County, 74½ ex div.; London Joint-stock, 47⅞; London and South African, 22; London and South-Western, 29½ ex div.; Metropolitan and Provincial, 29½; National, New, 86 ex div.; New South Wales, 43⅜; Oriental, 59; Scinde, Punjaub, and Delhi, 11¼; and Union of London, 52½.

Colonial Government Securities have been in steady request. Canada Six per Cents have realised 92; Ditto Five per Cents, 80; Nova Scotia Six per Cents, 95; Queensland Six per Cents, 103; and Victoria Six per Cents, 103⅜.

The Miscellaneous Market has ruled inactive. Bombay Gas, 6½; Ceylon Company, 9¼; Credit Foncier and Mobilier of England, 9; Ditto, New, 7¼; Crystal Palace, 31; Egyptian Commercial and Trading, 4⅜; Electric Telegraph, 112½ ex div.; English and Australian Copper, 1¼; General Credit, 6⅝ ex div.; Hudson's Bay, 15½; Joint-stock Discount, 9 ex div.; Land Securities, 3¾; London Financial, 21¾; National Discount, 11½; Oriental Financial, 4; Peel River Land, and Mineral, 37; Peninsula and Oriental Steam, 83½; Société Financière d'Egypte, 4½; Submarine Telegraph, 52; Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance, 7½.

The Railway Share Market has been heavy, and prices have not been supported. A serious decline has taken place in Great Western Stock. Annexed are Thursday's official closing quotations:—

Ordinary Shares and Stocks.—Great Eastern, 46½; Great Northern, 132; Ditto, A Stock, 147½; Great Western, 73⅜ ex div.; London and Blackwall, 87½; London and Brighton, 105 ex new; London, Chatham, and Dover, 36½; London and North-Western, 123¾; London and South-Western, 98; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, 60; Metropolitan, 118 ex div. and ex new; Ditto, New, 6½ ex div.; Midland, 138; North-Eastern—Leeds, 68; Ditto, York, 102½; North Staffordshire, 80¾; South-Eastern, 86¼; West Cornwall, 38.

British Possessions.—Bombay, Baroda, and Central India, 100½; East Indian, 100½; Grand Trunk of Canada, 18; Great Indian Peninsula, 101; Great Western of Canada, 8¼; Madras Five per Cent, 100¼; Ditto Four-and-Three-Quarter per Cent, 92; Scinde, 99¾; Punjaub, 92; Indus Steam Flotilla, 26.

An increase of public deposits of ..	92,852	A decrease of rest of	16,639
An increase of other deposits of ..	171,226	An increase of reserve of	321,497
A decrease of securities of	96,708

The total circulation is £20,101,978; public deposits amount to £6,665,361; and private deposits to £14,140,885; securities are £29,910,491; and the stock of bullion is £14,600,233.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, Feb. 20.—Very little English wheat has been on sale this week, and, for all kinds, the demand has ruled steady, at full quotations. Fine foreign wheats have moved off freely, at extreme rates. Otherwise, the trade has been heavy. Grinding barley has advanced 1s. per quarter. Malting and distilling sorts have been unaltered. Malt has sold slowly, at late quotations. The oat trade has been active, at 1s. per quarter more money. Beans and peas have improved 1s. per quarter. Both English and foreign flour has continued firm in price.

Feb. 22.—No quotable change took place in the value of any kind of produce to-day. On the whole, the trade was firm.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 38s. to 40s.; ditto, white, 39s. to 45s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 38s. to 40s.; rye, 28s. to 30s.; grinding barley, 23s. to 25s.; distilling ditto, 25s. to 28s.; malting ditto, 26s. to 34s.; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 54s. to 60s.; brown ditto, 47s. to 50s.; Kingston and Ware, 56s. to 60s.; chevalier, 60s. to 62s.; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 17s. to 22s.; potato ditto, 19s. to 21s.; Youghal and Cork, black, 16s. to 19s.; ditto, white, 17s. to 21s.; tick beans, 32s. to 34s.; grey peas, 33s. to 35s.; maple, 37s. to 40s.; white, 36s. to 39s.; boilers, 39s. to 40s. per quarter. Town-made flour, 35s. to 40s.; town households, 33s. to 35s.; country marks, 25s. to 32s. per 280lb.; French, 30s. to 32s. per sack; American, 19s. to 25s. per barrel.

Arrivals this Week.—English and Scotch: Barley, 470; malt, 910; oats, 880; flour, 220. Foreign: Barley, 9310; oats, 110.

Seeds.—Clover seed still supports the late advance in the quotations; but the demand for it is heavy. Other seeds rule about stationary. The demand for cakes is far from active.

Linseed, English, crushing, 60s. to 63s.; Calcutta, 56s. to 58s.; hempseed, 41s. to 43s. per quarter; coriander, 22s. to 24s. per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 10s. to 12s.; white ditto, 8s. to 10s.; tares, 9s. to 10s. per bushel; English rapeseed, 74s. to 76s. per quarter; Linseed cakes, English, £10 to £11 0s.; ditto, foreign, £9 10s. to £11 0s.; rape cakes, £5 10s. to £6 5s. per ton; canary, 44s. to 50s. per quarter; red clover seed, 62s. to 120s.; white ditto, 56s. to 88s. per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 6½d. to 7d.; of household ditto, 5d. to 6d. per 4 lb. loaf.

Averages of Gain.—Wheat, 38s. 4d.; barley, 29s. 2d.; oats, 19s. 1d.

English Grain Sold last Week.—Wheat, 67,829; barley, 60,089; oats, 9356 quarters.

Tea.—There is a fair average business doing in most kinds, at full quotations.

Sugar.—The demand is inactive; nevertheless, prices are supported. The stock amounts to 105,666 tons, against 74,450 tons last year. In refined goods very little is doing. Common brown lumps are selling at 42s. 6d. per cwt.

Coffee.—For the most part, sales have progressed slowly, on former terms. Stock, 10,150 tons, against 10,901 tons in 1864.

Rice.—The market is firm, at previous rates. Stock, 46,299 tons, against 51,930 tons last year.

Provisions.—Irish butter is a dull inquiry, and rather cheaper. Foreign parcels, however, command rather more money. Bacon is dearer; Waterford on board, 61s. to 65s. per cwt. In other provisions, very little is doing.

Tallow.—Only a limited business is doing, on rather easier terms. P.Y.C., on the spot, 40s. 6d. per cwt. Stock, 40,401 casks, against 60,889 ditto last year. Rough fat, 2s. 2d. per 8 lb.

Oils.—Linseed oil is offering at £32 10s. per ton. Rape is selling at £41 to £45; olive, £48 to £53; cocoanut, £38 10s. to £39 10s.; and fine palm, £36 to £36 10s. French turpentine, 67s. per cwt.

Spirits.—Rum is in fair request, at full prices. Brandy and grain spirits rule about stationary.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £4 10s. to £5 10s.; clover, £5 10s. to £6 10s.; and straw, £1 8s. to £1 14s. per load.

Coals.—Hoswell, 22s. 6d.; Hetton, 22s. 6d.; Heugh Hall, 21s.; Kelloe, 21s.; Holywell, 16s. 6d.; Tanfield Moor, 14s. 6d. per ton.

Hops.—The demand for most kinds is steady, at full quotations. The best hops are worth 200s. per cwt.

Wool.—The next public sales will be commenced on the 2nd proximo. The trade is heavy.

Potatoes.—The supplies are limited and the demand is steady, at from 55s. to 140s. per ton.

Metropolitan Cattle Market (Thursday, Feb. 21).—Our market to-day was moderately supplied with beasts, in fair average condition. On the whole, the beef trade was inactive, at Monday's currency. The best Scots sold at 5s. 4d. per 8 lb. The show of sheep was rather limited, and most breeds moved off slowly, at previous rates. The best Downs, in the wool, realised 6s. 4d.; out of the wool, 5s. 2d. per 8 lb. Lambs were steady, at from 7s. to 7s. 4d. per 8 lb. There was a steady sale for calves, at full prices—viz., from 4s. 6d. to 5s. 8d. per 8 lb. Pigs were firm in price, but milch cows were very dull.

Per 8 lb. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s. 8d. to 4s. 2d.; second quality ditto, 4s. 4d. to 4s. 10d.; prime large oxen, 5s. 0d. to 5s. 2d.; prime Scots, &c., 5s. 2d. to 5s. 4d.; coarse and inferior sheep, 4s. 6d. to 5s. 0d.; second quality ditto, 5s. 2d. to 5s. 6d.; prime coarse-woolled sheep, 5s. 8d. to 6s. 0d.; prime Southdown ditto, 6s. 2d. to 6s. 4d.; large coarse calves, 4s. 6d. to 5s. 2d.; prime small ditto, 5s. 4d. to 5s. 8d.; large hogs, 3s. 6d. to 4s. 2d.; neat small porkers, 4s. 4d. to 4s. 10d.; suckling calves, 20s. to 22s.; and quarter-old store pigs, 21s. to 28s. each. Total supply: Beasts, 1100; cows, 120; sheep, 3010; calves, 132; pigs, 300. Foreign: Beasts, 410; sheep, 220; calves, 125.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—The supplies of meat are moderate, and the trade is steady, as follows:—Beef, from 3s. 0d. to 4s. 8d.; mutton, 3s. 6d. to 5s. 0d.; veal, 4s. 0d. to 5s. 0d.; pork, 3s. 4d. to 5s. 0d. per 8 lb. by the carcass. ROBERT HERBERT.

A THAW IN THE STREETS OF LONDON.

THE frequent and sudden changes of temperature in the last few weeks have made an extraordinary difference in the aspects of London street-traffic from day to day. We lately gave an Illustration of the effects of a hard frost; our present subject is a companion picture to that Engraving; it shows the state of things occasioned by a thaw. The discomfort of walking in such mud as melted snow leaves upon our much-trodden thoroughfares is far worse than the danger of sliding when the pavement is glazed with ice. London mud is always disagreeable; and we believe there is no city in Europe where so little care is taken to abate this nuisance, or where the convenience of foot-passengers is so entirely disregarded by the legal custodians of the public highways. To go no further than the large provincial towns of England—it would not be endured, for instance, in Manchester that any of the streets should be left for twelve hours in so foul a condition as that of the Strand during many days of the last fortnight; when it might have been cleansed without difficulty, either by sweepers employed at night, or by the use of Whitworth's machine—a mud-cart furnished with a revolving brush and scraper behind, which travels along the road, causing no interruption to the daily traffic. In this department, it must be confessed, the municipal administration of London is greatly at fault; and it would be instructive to reckon the enormous cost of its neglect in the matter of street mud. Such a calculation would include—first, the cost of boots and shoes, of stockings, trousers, and crinolines, sacrificed by the unhappy pedestrians who venture abroad at this season; secondly, the loss of health, and sometimes of life, from the catarrhs, coughs, and rheumatisms which wet feet are apt to engender; thirdly, the damage to horses and carriages; and, lastly, the waste of an immense quantity of material which should be almost as valuable as the sewage itself for the purpose of agricultural manure. In addition to these evils, we have reason to believe that the mischief done by neglected street mud to the sanitary condition of London extends also to those who never walk out in bad weather, for it keeps up a general dampness of the atmosphere, attracts and retains the fogs, and, after the dry winds of March or the heat of sunny days shall have caused the last vestige of mud to disappear, it will then be converted into dust, which, as it contains minute particles of stone from the roads, mixed with the noxious atoms of decomposed animal matter, is a most unwholesome compound to be inhaled by the throats of men and women. Thus much we have felt it our duty to say of the remoter and more general injuries occasioned by the utter lack of provision for the removal of the metropolitan mud. The miseries depicted on our next page are indeed the immediate consequence of a visitation of nature which is a common incident of this season in a climate so uncertain as ours; but these miseries would very soon be abated if we had a proper system of cleansing the streets. The poor mendicant sweeper at the crossing should be relieved of an office which ought to be more efficiently performed by an apparatus under the direction of the Metropolitan Board of Works.

THE PRONG-HORNED ANTELOPE.

THE Zoological Society of London have lately purchased of a London dealer in wild animals the only specimen, it is believed, yet brought to England of the Prong-horned Antelope (Antilope furcifer), which is commonly known in North America by the name of the "Cabree goat." This animal is never found east of the Mississippi, but inhabits the great western prairies of North America, from the 53rd deg. of latitude to the plains of Mexico and California, and was formerly numerous in the country watered by the Saskatchewan River; frequenting the open plains and hills, but never inhabiting the closely-wooded districts. During the winter, however, it migrates from north to south, and returns in the warmer season. It is now becoming scarce in most parts. Its ordinary size, when full grown, is about 3 ft. high and 4 ft. 4 in. long from the nose to the tip of the tail. The body is covered with long hair, which loses its elasticity in cold weather; there is an erect mane upon the neck; the head, ears, and legs are clothed with short, close hair, of a common description. The colour is generally a light fawn colour, except the white stripes across the throat and about the legs and tail. The horns rise perpendicularly from the skull, immediately above the eyes; they spread outwards and are straight till within two or three inches of the points, where they curve suddenly backwards and inwards, forming a small hook; the prong, which is little more than an inch in length, projects from the front of the horn, about half way up from the root; the lower part of the horn, below the prong, is rough and of a flattish shape; above the prong it is round, black, and polished. The specimen now in the gardens of the society in Regent's Park is a young male, which was brought from California to New York, and thence re-exported to England.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR MARCH.

EVERYTHING in Paris is subject to the caprices of fashion, even to the colours selected for the attire of the different seasons; and if the chivalric sentiments of the present day required each faithful knight to wear the colours of his lady, the changes would be frequent, if not irksome. Just now the black and white predominate, for all gala and public dress, to such an extent that almost every lady's colours are those usually worn by every gentleman; and there might be some difficulty in recognising these, but that the old custom of wearing "her colour" has been relinquished.

The order of the day is simplicity united with good taste, a union productive of the best results even in these days of dressy ostentation, when, in spite of the gaudiness inherent in many of the articles worn, a certain degree of elegance is obtainable in their disposition and arrangement. Even with such a costume as that depicted in the third figure in our Engraving of the Paris Fashions for March, a stamp of elegance may be acquired by the manner of the wearer, although we only reproduce it as coming within the ordinary scope of our observation.

For indoor wear, the Zouave vest, in cashmere or in velvet, with the trimmings special thereto, are still in considerable favour in Paris. Skirts are made on purpose to be worn with these vests, as well as with the beaded canezous, in foulard or in cashmere.

We may here note that satins are quite à la mode again, even for ball costume, the turquoise blue, pale rose, and pearl grey colours being preferred. The grey especially, either in crepe or satin, has been particularly remarked at the recent bals de la Cour.

The taste for fur trimmings in rolls or narrow bands on pardessus has turned to account the merits of the sable tails. They are particularly charming on black velvet vestments, no matter of what form. Where the sable trimming might be found too expensive, strips of martin fur may be employed with advantage.

In the way of jewellery, the crystal ornaments recently introduced are much less admired for wear as ear-rings; but they are applied with excellent effect in the hair, or amongst foliage in floral ornaments for the head.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Fig. 1. Evening Dress. Light grey moire antique robe, provided with a passementerie ornament fringed with light beads, so placed on the dress as to simulate a tunic. The bows down the front of the skirt, of the same material as the dress, are edged with two rows of beads. The corsage is ornamented in a similar style. Grey velvet bonnet à fanchon; a velvet band passing across the middle attaches the lace of the fanchon.

Fig. 2. Ball Dress.—White silk robe, ornamented with rolls of satin surmounting a flounce composed of upright satin rolls between two rows of white satin fluting. Over the robe is a tunic forming a sort of train, and surrounded with a flounce of plaits and bouillonnés very similar to the ornamentation of the lower part of the dress. The corsage is round, and the bertha is trimmed to match the other portions of this ball toilet. Pearl necklace, and head-dress of marguerites.

Fig. 3. Walking Dress.—Light brown silk robe, trimmed round the skirt with two wide bands of black velvet edged with small bias and surmounting a plaited flounce. The corsage-habit, or coat-corsage, is also trimmed with velvet bands and passementerie round the edges of the back-turned tails. Green crape bonnet, without bavolet, but ornamented behind with a profusion of magenta velvet ribbons.

This Company has been formed for the purpose of constructing a Canal Basin, with Wharves and Warehouses adjoining, in the immediate vicinity of the Victoria Railway Bridge at Battersea.
The objects of the undertaking are twofold—firstly, to supply good Wharf and Warehouse accommodation to the South-Western District of the Thames; and, secondly, to accommodate the traffic of the various railways which converge to the point at which the Wharves will be situated.
The want of good Wharf and Warehouse accommodation has been long felt in this district, and still more severely since the demolition of the Grosvenor Canal, by which a long line of water frontage has been made to disappear.
The construction of the Thames Embankment also will sweep away not less than two and a half miles of wharves, and, as a consequence, almost entirely close up the water-way to the several warehouses lying along its course.
The Railway Companies which will have access to the Wharves are the following:—The Great Western, the London and North-Western, the Great Northern, the South-Western; the London, Brighton, and South Coast; the London, Chatham, and Dover; and the Metropolitan.
The site selected for the wharves is the only spot in the metropolis where a large area of land abutting on the Thames can be obtained at a moderate cost. Nearly half the land required—viz., twenty-six acres—has already been purchased on favourable terms, and possession obtained, and it is proposed to commence the works immediately.
The Canal Basin, when completed, will present a water-frontage of over 1000 feet, and, being formed so as to be made available twice in each day, coasters, barges, and canal-boats will receive the greatest dispatch in loading and unloading, and always be able to work afloat.
The tariffs of charges have been arranged upon a firm basis, and the direct sources of revenue to be derived from the establishment of the proposed works will be—
Canal and Dock Dues,
Rental from Wharves and Warehouses,
Charges for Loading and Unloading, &c.
From the most careful estimates of the results anticipated no doubt can be entertained that the Company's operations will produce a highly remunerative return.
The works have been let to responsible contractors, who have undertaken to complete them within two years from the date of commencement, and to pay 7 per cent interest upon the paid-up capital during their construction, and for twelve months after their completion.
Prospectuses and forms of application for shares may be obtained from the Bankers, Brokers, Solicitor, or Secretary to the Company; at the Offices, 3, Bridge-street, Westminster; and at the Offices of the International Contract Company, 85, Cannon-street West, E.C.
FORM OF APPLICATION FOR SHARES.
To the Directors of the West London Docks and Warehouses Company.
Gentlemen,—Having paid into your Bankers the sum of ——, being £1 per share on —— shares in the above Company, I request you to allot me that number of shares; and I hereby agree to accept the same, or any less number which may be allotted to me, and to be registered as a shareholder in the Company in conformity with the Act of Incorporation.

DR. DE JONGH'S
LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL
Is pronounced by the entire medical profession unrivalled as a remedy for CONSUMPTION, RICKETS, SCROFULA, and all forms of GENERAL DEBILITY.
Universally recognised to be incomparably superior to every other kind.

DISEASES OF THE LUNGS AND CHEST.
"The extraordinary efficacy of DR. DE JONGH'S Cod-Liver Oil, in Pulmonary Consumption may now be considered as fully established. . . . Dr. de Jongh's Oil is the purest we have ever submitted to analysis; it possesses the curative properties of drugs of distinguished excellence, checks the complaint, yields the cough and expectoration, at once, and does a most valuable service to humanity."—Dr. Hassall, Author of "Food, its Adulterations," &c. "Dr. de Jongh's Oil is the purest we have ever met with, and is unfailing as to its curative properties."—Dr. Lankester, F.R.S. "Dr. de Jongh's Oil, without difficulty or dislike, and with as little inconvenience as can be expected, produces the effects for which it is given, as to a less extent, the essential oil procured from the livers of haddock and its isomers of weight, as soon and as hastingly as to be quite remarkable."—Dr. Granville, F.R.S. "Dr. de Jongh's Oil is a most valuable remedy on account of its more than usually uniform chemical character."

EXTRACT OF MEDICAL OPINIONS.
This is to certify, JONATHAN PEREIRA, F.R.S., Physician to the London Hospital, &c., &c.
"I was doing that the author of the best analysis and investigations into the properties of this Oil (Mr. Hassall himself) was purveyor of this important medicine. Whether combined with refreshing tea, or with coffee, or with cocoa, it is equally unobjectionable. For medicinal purposes, no finer Oil can be procured."

DR. EDWARD SMITH, F.R.S.,
Physician to the London Hospital, Author of Consumption and Diseases of the Chest, Brompton, &c., &c.
"We have much pleasure in stating that there is one kind of Cod-Liver Oil which is universally admitted to be genuine—the Light-Brown Oil of Dr. de Jongh. We have found it to be the purest that we have ever analysed. We have found it to be perfectly free from those disagreeable tastes variously and unnecessarily, we have confidence in its genuineness."—Extract from "Consumption, its Early and Remediable Stages."

Coroner for Central Middlesex, &c., &c.,
"I consider that the purity and genuineness of this Oil are evinced in the paragraphs by the personal attention of so good a chemist as Dr. de Jongh. I have found it to be the purest Oil that I have ever written for but Medical Practice on the Oil with which I am acquainted. Hence I deem the Cod-liver Oil sold under his guarantee to be preferable to any other kind as regards genuineness and medicinal efficacy."

DR. LETHEBY,
Medical Officer of Health, and Chief Analyst to the City of London, &c., &c.
"The Oil recommended by all its characters with that noted "Brown Brown," and described as the best variety in the masterly treatise of Dr. de Jongh, is that which I have frequently analysed and pronounced to be genuine. I have also found it to be the purest Oil that I have met with in my investigations. I have no doubt of its being efficacious in Consumption."

DR. BARLOW,
Senior Physician to the London Hospital, &c., &c.
"I have previously recommended prescribe considering me to make use of Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod-Liver Oil. I have been satisfied with its effects, and believe it to be a very pure Oil, well fitted for those cases in which it is usually prescribed."

DOWN CANTON, 1862, F.R.C.S.,
Surgeon to the Queen's Private Hospital, &c., &c.
"I have used every year I have been in the habit of prescribing Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod-Liver Oil, and find it to be decidedly the most efficacious and uniform of the many specimens which I have also employed with a view to test their relative properties."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold only in Imperial Measure, in Capsuled Bottles, with his Stamp and Signature, by Dr. de Jongh's Sole Consignees, ANSAR, HARFORD and CO., 77, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

LAUNCH OF FIVE STEAMERS ON THE MERSEY.

IF any proof were needed of the prosperous state of shipbuilding on the Mersey, it was to be found on Wednesday week, when, from one single yard in Liverpool — that of Messrs. Jones, Quiggin, and Co., Sefton-street — no less than five steamers were successfully launched. The unusual event was witnessed by a large number of persons, all anxious to see the launch of so many vessels at one time. Four of the steamers are of cast steel, and were built from the same design. They are of beautiful model and fine lines. Their dimensions are as follow:—Length, 225 ft.; breadth of beam, 24 ft.; depth of hold 11 ft.; builders' measurement, 645 tons; and their nominal horse-power will be 160. They were named as follows:—The Widgeon (by Miss Quiggin), the Snipe (by Mrs. Clarke), the Curlew (by Miss Rimmer), and the Plover (by Miss Mylchrist). The Snipe and Widgeon left the ways together, and were followed, in a few seconds, amid loud cheers, by the Curlew. The last-named steamer, having been built on the same stocks from which a vessel had lately been launched, had a considerable run before gaining the water; but this in no way interfered with her successful launching. The Snipe, Widgeon, and Curlew were soon afterwards joined in the river by the Plover. The Curlew and Plover will be fitted with engines made by Messrs. James Watt and Co., of Birmingham; and the engines for the Widgeon and Snipe are being made by Messrs. Geo. Forrester and Co., of the Vauxhall Foundry, Liverpool. For whom the steamers have been built we were not informed; but, from their general appearance, there can be little doubt that they are intended for some service in connection with the running of the blockade of the Southern ports. From the same ways that the Plover was built on a very fine screw-steamer was also launched. She has been built for an Egyptian company, and is intended for the Red Sea trade. She was named the Noor-el-Huda (The Light of Day) by Mrs. Mylchrist. Her dimensions are — Length, 160 ft.; breadth of beam, 25 ft.; depth of hold, 15 ft.; builders' measurement, 480 tons.

THE FARM.

AN important lecture was delivered by Mr. Lawes, last week, at the Royal Agricultural Society's Rooms, in Hanover-square, on the subject of town sewage. In discussing the question, what is sewage? he stated that, for convenience sake, it is estimated by the amount of ammonia per gallon; and that, taking the mean of the three years 1861-3 at Rugby, where the sewage is most accurately gauged, it was never above fifteen grains or below three; and averaged six, five, and seven grains in each of these respectively. Of course in 1862, when there was most rain, the amount of ammonia was least. At Rugby, when 3000 tons were put on the land, 21¼ tons of produce were got in one case, and 23 tons in the other; from 6000 tons, 32 tons and 28 tons; and from 9000 tons, 34 tons and 31 tons. Mr. Lawes also considered that if 5000 tons were used per acre, the grass, when converted into milk, would produce, at 8d. per gallon, from £30 to £35 per acre; and that, therefore, a farmer might afford to give a halfpenny per ton for it; but that such sewage has been more or less a failure whenever it has been applied to arable land. Professor Voelcker added his caution to farmers, that if they wished to use superphosphate they should put it on the soil and leave the rain to wash it in, and not put it into the sewage previous to application. Mr. Morton quoted an instance where 300 gallons of diluted blood had no effect when applied to a garden until it had been mixed in a dunghoop and left to ferment, as a proof that sewage manure should be applied in the state in which it would contain food for plants, and not be left to decompose in the soil.

Sir E. Kerrison, the chairman of the society, considered the Edinburgh experiments most successful, as 350 acres of land so managed had proved sufficient for 2000 cows. The soil, as he further remarked, was lightish and well fitted for the purpose, as it sloped and prevented the sewage from remaining long on any one spot, thus souring the herbage. He also gave it as his Belgian experience that clovers and potatoes could be brought forward enormously by the application of sewage on light land. According to Mr. Dyke Acland, such experiments in the West on Swedes and mangolds have not been so successful; but Sir J. Johnstone's account of the application to land under spade cultivation near York was more encouraging. Still Sir John gave it with the qualification that the sewage was "not exactly liquid." Mr. T. Scott thought that "dooling" was the only profitable mode of applying sewage, and stated that he had found at Wimbledon that lake-water was quite as valuable as sewage-water on grass land. Mr. Blackburn gave it as his opinion, in opposition to Lord Feversham and Mr. Hewett, that the warmer the weather the more efficacious the application of liquid manure to grass land. In his summing up, Mr. Lawes stated his belief that the experiments at Rugby had been more successful than those at Edinburgh; and replied to a question of Mr. Blackburn's, that, if a given quantity of sewage contained only twenty tons of water, it would be more than three times as valuable than if it contained sixty.

Messrs. Wetherell have announced that they will put up at auction, on April 12 (after Mr. Dawson's sale at Poundsworth, near Driffield), six more lots—Rose of Promise, Rose of Hope, and Almack's Belle, and their produce, which were purchased by Mr. C. P. Gell, at Lady Pigot's sale, in September, '63. The same firm sell Mr. Syme's herd at Redkirk, near Annan, N.B., on May 2; and Mr. Stratford has appointed March 28 (the day before Captain Spencer's sale at Aldreth) for the disposal of the late Sir Charles Knightley's small but select herd of twenty, the descendants of three cows which were kept back from the great Fawsley sale of '56. It will be quite a shorthorn week in the Midlands, as Captain Spencer has his Rugby sale on the day after the Aldreth. The following are the returns of the stock which came to Smithfield market during the past year:—Beasts, 346,676; sheep, 1,251,980; calves, 37,585; and pigs, 32,512. As compared with 1863, these figures show an increase of 30,429 beasts, 53,710 sheep, 2107 calves, and 9282 pigs.

LAUNCH OF FIVE STEAMERS AT LIVERPOOL.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

THE DUKE OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

His Grace, the Right Hon. Sir Algernon Percy, K.G., P.C., F.R.S., fourth Duke and fifth Earl of Northumberland; Earl Percy; Baron Percy; Baron Warkworth; also Baron Prudhoe, of Prudhoe Castle, in the county of Northumberland; and a Baronet; eldest coheir of the barony of Latimer, and one of the coheirs of the baronies of Scales, Playz, Badlesmere, and L'Isle; an Admiral R.N.; Constable of Launceston Castle; President of the Society of Antiquaries, of the Royal Geographical Society, and a member of the Royal Astronomical and other learned societies; President of the Westminster and Middlesex Hospitals; President of the Seamen's Hospital Society; President of the Westminster General Dispensary; President of the Royal National Life-boat Institution; President of the Royal United Service Institution; President of the Royal Institution of Great Britain; Vice-President of the Royal Humane Society; Vice-President of the Royal Naval Benevolent Society; Vice-Patron of Charing-cross Hospital; a Director of the British Institution; and a Trustee of the British Museum, was the younger son of Hugh, second Duke of Northumberland, K.G., by his second wife, Frances Julia, third daughter of Peter Barrell, Esq., of Beckenham, Kent, sister of Peter, Lord Gwydir. He was born Dec. 15, 1792, and was educated for the naval profession. He entered the Royal Navy in March, 1805, on board the Tribune frigate, commanded by Captain Robert H. A. Bennett; he was afterwards Midshipman in the Flame, in which ship he was actively employed on the coast of Catalonia, in 1809; and, as Midshipman of the Hydra, commanded a gun-boat, in co-operation with the patriots, on the coast of Andalusia in the following year. As acting Captain of the Caledonia, he took part in a partial action with the French fleet off Toulon, in 1813, and was present at the taking of Genoa, in 1814. He became a Captain in August, 1815; Rear-Admiral in 1850; a Vice-Admiral in 1857; and an Admiral in October, 1862. On retiring from active duty in the Navy, he devoted his time to literature and science. He was, on the 27th of November, 1816, created a Peer by the title of Baron Prudhoe, of Prudhoe Castle. His Lordship passed many years in foreign travel, and in investigating the remains of ancient Egypt and the Holy Land, and he learnedly wrote on those subjects. He succeeded to the high family honours and princely estates of the Dukes of Northumberland on the death of his brother, Hugh, third Duke, on Feb. 11, 1847. He married, on Aug. 25, 1842, the Lady Eleanor Grosvenor, eldest daughter of Richard, second and present Marquis of Westminster; but by her (who survives him) he leaves no issue. His Grace was a Conservative in politics. He held the office of First Lord of the Admiralty from March to December, 1852. He was, in 1852, made a Privy Councillor, and in 1853 a Knight of the Garter. He was appointed Constable of Launceston Castle in 1847; and for a short time in 1852 he was Special Deputy Warden of the Stannaries. On his succession to the dukedom his Grace took an active part in the control and improvement of his extensive property. He was a nobleman not only of princely position, but of a princely soul. His liberality, benevolence, and desire to do good to all within his reach were unceasing. He was ever looking to, and spending large sums of money in promoting, the comfort of his poorer tenantry. He erected ten new churches at his own cost in populous but neglected districts. He, at enormous cost, restored and beautified Alnwick Castle, the grand old feudal residence of the Percys of Northumberland. He was, moreover, a munificent patron of men of letters and science. To the general public regret and to the grief of all who knew him, his Grace died, on the 12th inst., at Alnwick Castle. By his death the barony of Prudhoe becomes extinct; the barony of Percy—a barony in fee—devolves on the Duke's grand-nephew and heir general, John James Hugh Henry, seventh and present Duke of Athole, in whom the above-mentioned coheirships also vest; while the other honours descend to the deceased Duke's aged cousin and heir male, the first Duke of Northumberland's grandson, the Earl of Beverley, now (in addition to his prior titles) Sir George Percy, fifth Duke and sixth Earl of Northumberland, Earl Percy, Baron Warkworth, and a Baronet, who was born in June, 1778, and married, in 1801, Louisa Harcourt, third daughter of the Hon. Archibald Stewart Wortley-Mackenzie, and sister of James Archibald, Lord Wharncliffe, and has issue Algernon, Lord Lovaine, M.P.; Lord Josceline William Percy; Colonel Lord Henry Hugh Manvers Percy, V.C., Aide-de-Camp to the Queen; Lady Louisa Percy; and Margaret, Lady Hatherton. The historic and illustrious house of Percy is of origin as far back as the old duchy of Normandy itself; and by its alliances with the blood Royal of England, Scotland, France, and Spain, and by its great achievements, stands pre-eminent in rank and renown. The modern Dukes of Northumberland descend, in the female line, from the old noble race of Percy, thus—The Lady Elizabeth, only surviving child of Josceline, eleventh Earl of Northumberland, who succeeded to the baronial honours only of the family, married Charles, the sixth and proud Duke of Somerset, and their son Algernon, seventh Duke of Somerset, having been summoned to Parliament as Baron Percy, was created Earl of Northumberland, with remainder (having no male issue) to Sir Hugh Smithson, who had married his daughter and sole heiress. Sir Hugh, who thus succeeded to the earldom of Northumberland and assumed the surname of Percy, in 1750, was created Duke of Northumberland, Oct. 22, 1766. He was grandfather of the Duke just dead and of his successor, the Earl of Beverley, the present Duke. After lying in state at Alnwick Castle, and at Northumberland House, Strand, the remains of the deceased Duke will be interred to-day (Saturday) in the family burial-place, Westminster Abbey. In honour to his memory, as its late valued President, the Royal National Life-boat Institution has instructed all its branches throughout the British Isles to hoist the flags of the life-boats half-mast high from daylight to sunset on the day of the funeral. We give on page 177 a Portrait of his Grace, from the painting by Thomas Grant, R.A.

CARDINAL WISEMAN.

His Eminence Nicholas Wiseman, D.D., Cardinal Priest of the ancient Church of St. Pudentiana at Rome, one of the most eminent Catholic prelates of modern times, was the scion of a highly respectable Irish family, apparently a branch of the old Essex line, of which the present Sir William Saltonstall Wiseman, Bart., is the male representative. The first settler in Ireland was Symon Wiseman, of Bandon Bridge, in the county of Cork, whose eldest son, William Wiseman, represented the borough of Bandon in Parliament, in 1634. His first wife was no less a personage than Catherine, eldest daughter of Edmund Spenser, the poet. The Cardinal, through his mother, was descended from the ancient family of Strange, of Waterford, which can be traced in the annals of that city to a remote period. Nicholas Strange, some time Sheriff of Waterford, died in 1637; and from him the Christian name of Nicholas came to the Prelate just dead. Cardinal Wiseman was himself the son of James Wiseman, Esq., of Waterford, of the firm of Wiseman Brothers, merchants of note and high standing at Seville, in Spain, by his wife Xaviera, daughter of Peter Strange, Esq., of Aylwardstown Castle, in the county of Kilkenny. He was born at Seville, on Aug. 2, 1802. He was sent from Spain, at an early age, to school at Waterford. Thence, when about seven years old, he went to St. Cuthbert's Catholic College, Ushaw, near Durham, of which the celebrated Dr. Lingard was the Vice-Principal. He proceeded, in 1818, to the English College at Rome, in company with five other youths, and was well received by Pope Pius VII. He there soon gave proofs of extraordinary abilities. At eighteen years of age he published, in Latin, a work on the Oriental languages, "Horæ Syriacæ," and bore off the gold medal at all competitions. Having obtained holy orders, the youthful priest, by wish of Pope Leo XII., preached at Rome a course of sermons in English. Under Leo XII., also, he was a Professor in the Roman University; and he succeeded in restoring the English College at Rome, and was named its President. Here he educated many priests for ministering in England. He was then also agent of the English Vicars Apostolic with the Holy See. In 1835 Dr. Wiseman, whose fame as a preacher had extended, came to lecture at the Sardinian Chapel in Lincoln's-inn-fields on the doctrines of his Church; and in the following year he preached a course of Lent lectures at Moorfields Chapel. These discourses made a great public sensation. Dr. Wiseman, on the 8th of June, 1840, received episcopal consecration from Cardinal Franzoni, being made Bishop of Melipotamus in partibus infidelium, and coadjutor Vicar Apostolic of the Midland District. He was also named President of St. Mary's College, Oscott. Dr. Wiseman displayed much literary power at this time in his articles in the Dublin Review and other publications. The year 1850 brought about the most remarkable event of his life. There had been four vicariates in connection with the Roman Catholic Communion up to 1840, when the number was doubled—the titles being the London, the Western, the Eastern, the Central, the Welsh, the Lancastrian, the York, and the Northern districts. In the autumn of 1850 the British public were startled by the announcement of the re-establishment of the Catholic Hierarchy in England. On the 29th of September, 1850, the Papal brief was issued; and in a Consistory, held on the 30th of the same month, Dr. Wiseman was made a Cardinal and Archbishop of Westminster. The new Cardinal forwarded the Papal brief to England, accompanying it with the famous pastoral from himself, dated from the Flaminian Gate, no prelate but the Pope, as Bishop of Rome, having a right to date letters or pastorals from the Eternal City itself. In addition to the archbishopric of Westminster, twelve other sees were marked out—viz., Southwark, Birmingham, Northampton, Beverley, Hexham, Clifton, Liverpool, Newport and Minevia, Nottingham, Plymouth, Salford, and Shrewsbury. A perfect whirlwind of indignation burst forth from the Protestant population of England at this "Papal aggression," ending in the passing of the Ecclesiastical Titles Assumption Act. The Cardinal was enthroned, on Dec. 6, 1850, in St. George's Church, Southwark. He then lost no time in endeavouring to throw oil on the troubled waters, by the publication of "An Appeal to the Reason and Good Feeling of the English People on the Subject of the Catholic Hierarchy." He continued in the peaceable exercise of his ecclesiastical functions, and often wrote or lectured upon matters of taste and science. His lectures on art especially, and his work the "Recollections of the Four Last Popes," attained considerable popularity. The Cardinal was a poet and also a dramatic writer. In 1859 "The Hidden Gem" was performed, with great applause, at the jubilee of the Roman Catholic College, Ushaw. He was the author of "Fabiola," a novel, dramatised by the Rev. Frederic Oakeley. The Cardinal was a foreign member of the Royal Society of Literature and a corresponding member of the Royal Asiatic Society. His Eminence was not only a thorough master of English, but also an admirable linguist with regard to Italian, French, Spanish, and most other Continental, and many Oriental, languages. He died, after a lingering and painful illness, on the 15th inst., at his town house, 8, York-place, Portman-square. He may be well said to have been, like Wolsey, "from his cradle a scholar, and a ripe and good one, exceeding wise, fair-spoken, and persuading;" but, unlike the great Cardinal of the Tudor age, the Prelate of the time of Victoria was nowise "lofty and sour." The remains of the deceased Cardinal lay for some days in state in his house in York-place. They were thence removed to his pro-cathedral, St. Mary's, Moorfields, and were on Thursday last interred, with much and very splendid religious ceremony, in the Roman Catholic cemetery at Kensal-green. Our portrait of Cardinal Wiseman, on the preceding page, is from a portrait by Messrs. Moira and Haig.

SIR WILLIAM CUNNINGHAM CAVENDISH DALYELL, BART.

Sir William Cunningham Cavendish Dalyell, seventh Baronet, of Binns, in the county of Linlithgow, Captain R.N., and a Commander of Greenwich Hospital, who died on the 16th inst., at his residence in Greenwich Hospital, was the fourth son of Sir Robert Dalyell, the fourth Baronet, by his wife, Margaret, eldest daughter of William Cunningham, twelfth Earl of Glencairn. He was born in 1784, and entered the Royal Navy in 1793. He there shared in much hard service. He was mate of the Seine at the capture of the French frigate La Vengeance, in 1800; he obtained official note for his conduct with the Antelope and Rattler, and he was severely wounded while gallantly endeavouring to cut out the Vimerieux from St. Valery in 1805. He became a Captain in 1814, and with a pension for wounds. He was subsequently made a Commander of Greenwich Hospital. He succeeded, in 1851, as seventh Bart., his brother, President Sir John Graham Dalyell, the distinguished writer on science and history. He married, in 1820, Maria, daughter of Anthony Teixiera Sampayo, Esq., of Peterborough House, Fulham; and had two sons, the younger of whom, Lieutenant Osborne William Dalyell, R.N., died in 1862, from the effect of wounds received at Sebastopol; and two daughters, Maria Christina, married to Lieutenant-Colonel Charles J. Du Prat, R.A., Equerry to the Queen, and Elizabeth Grace, married to Gustavus G. Cornwall, Esq., Secretary to the Post Office, Ireland. Sir William is succeeded by his elder and only surviving son, now Sir Robert Alexander Osborne, the eighth Baronet, a barrister-at-law, and British Consul at Jassy, who was born in 1821. This family, in the male line, is one of the oldest in Scotland, representing the ancient Earls of Monteith; and, in the female line, springs from the celebrated Cavalier-General and rough soldier (celebrated by Sir Walter Scott in "Old Mortality"), Sir Thomas Dalyell, Commander of the Forces in Scotland at the Restoration, who was created, in 1685, a Baronet, with limitation to his heirs of entail. He was great-great-grandfather of the Baronet just deceased.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will of the Hon. Penelope Powys was proved in London, on the 3rd inst., under £9000. The testatrix was the relict of the Hon. and Rev. Littleton Powys, Rector of Titchmarsh, who died in 1842, and was the daughter and coheir of James Hatsell, Esq., and sole surviving representative of John Hatsell, Esq., of Warden Park, Bencher of the Inner Temple, and Chief Clerk of the House of Commons. Her son Littleton, in 1853, took by Royal license the additional name of Hatsell. The testatrix has left some small charitable bequests—viz., to the Church Missionary Society, the Bible Society at Thrapstone, and St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington, each £10.

The will of William Bide, Esq., of Yeovil, Somersetshire, was proved in London under £70,000 personalty. The executors are Henry G. Andrews, of Rimpton; Francis Berryman, of Shepton Mallet; and Henry Marsh Watts, of Yeovil. To each of them there is a legacy of £100. To his wife he leaves an annuity of £1000 and a legacy of £1200, also the residue of his property, together with his residence and furniture, for her life; which, upon her decease, he bequeaths to his nephew, Thomas William Dampier, to whom he leaves an annuity of £500, and appoints him reversionary residuary legatee of both the personal and real estates, including his freeholds in the counties of Somerset and Dorset. There are annuities of £250 to each of his two nieces, Elizabeth Bide Dampier and Mary Ann Whetham, who are to receive £6000 each out of the residue upon the decease of the relict.

The will of William Sollory Grey, Esq., merchant, of Cullum-street, City, and of St. Leonards-on-Sea, was proved in London under £45,000 personalty; the acting executors and trustees being his partners, John Alexander Russell and Timothy Horsman Coles, Esqrs. The other executor and trustee appointed, John Grellier, Esq., of the Royal Exchange, renounced. To each of the executors he leaves a legacy of £200, free of duty. To his wife he has bequeathed the sum of £20,000 and the furniture, carriage, &c., and leaves her the estate he lately purchased called Malcolm Peth, at St. Leonards. He leaves liberal legacies to his sister-in-law, Elizabeth Grey, and to other relatives and friends; and to Ragonath Abbajee, of Bombay, £200. To the Benevolent Society of Blues, £100. The residue of his property he leaves to his brother-in-law, the said John Alexander Russell.

The late John Hayes, Esq., of Shepherd's-bush, died intestate. His personal property was sworn under £30,000, and letters of administration were granted to his nephew, the Rev. Charles Hayes, of Edgingswell House, Torquay.

A physician, occupying a high official position in Massachusetts, says that since the beginning of the war there has been a remarkable decrease in cases of insanity among women, attributed by him to the various charitable and benevolent operations occasioned by the war, which have excited the sympathies and received the support of women.

In a communication made to the British Meteorological Society Mr. Glashier stated, as a result of an elaborate inquiry, that our climate during the last hundred years has altered—that, in fact, the temperature of the year is two degrees warmer now than it was then; the temperature of the month of January has increased still more, and the winter months are all much warmer.

During the homeward voyage, in November last, the Cunard Royal Mail Steam-ship Canada, while coming up the Irish Channel during a fearful gale, fell in with the disabled barque England, of Newcastle-on-Tyne. Captain Hockley, of the Canada, determined to try and rescue the crew of the England, who had been almost reduced to despair, and, by the aid of a volunteer boat's crew and at great risk to all concerned, his purpose was successfully accomplished. The Liverpool Shipwreck and Humane Society, in recognition of this gallant conduct, has presented a sextant to Captain Hockley, a silver medal to Mr. Neville, fourth officer, and £5 each to three seamen of the Canada. A silver medal was also presented to Mr. Wilton, of Deptford, who joined the volunteer boat's crew.

A deputation from the British North American Association had an interview yesterday week with Mr. Cardwell, at the Colonial Office, with reference to the colonisation of the British territory in the north-west of America. Several gentlemen addressed Mr. Cardwell, urging the importance of the opening up of the vast territory lying between Canada and British Columbia. The immediate object of the deputation was to place before the Colonial Minister the facts in connection with a proposition which had been under consideration by the late Duke of Newcastle in July, 1863, for making arrangements between the Colonial Office and the Hudson's Bay Company for the colonisation of the vast territory lying between the Canadian boundary and British Columbia, known as Rupert's Land. The present unsettled state of the territory, which threatens the safety of the populated portion known as the Red River Settlement, renders it imperatively necessary to adopt prompt measures for the establishment of a Crown colony, with a view to avoid the risk, disorganisation, and danger to life and property. Lord Wharncliffe stated that, having been all through the country, he could bear his testimony to the absolute want of government at the Red River Settlement. In reply to the deputation Mr. Cardwell expressed the deep interest he felt in the colonisation of the north-west territory, and stated that, as soon as the arrangements now in progress with the Hudson's Bay Company were completed, provision would doubtless be made to create the Red River district into a Crown colony, as a first step to its admission into the contemplated confederation of all the British North American provinces. He had not yet received definite information from the Government of Canada on the subject, but he hoped that the whole matter would shortly be put in train for a final and satisfactory adjustment.

FINE ARTS.

GENERAL EXHIBITION OF WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS.

A free water-colour exhibition has at last been organised; and the first display, just opened at the Dudley Gallery, Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, has taken even artists by surprise. Whether our painters have advanced or retrograded since the days of Reynolds and Hogarth, Gainsborough and Wilson, the appreciation of, or, at all events, the desire to possess, their works has increased fifty or a hundred fold. The new and eminently English branch of art, painting in water colours, has chiefly evoked this increased demand, with its corresponding cultivation. Fashion and the speculative spirit have, it is true, probably contributed to these results. Many of the merchants of London and the North seem to buy collections of paintings merely as an investment; and a large proportion of the great middle class may purchase pictures, and especially water-colour drawings—which go so well with the light papers of the modern drawing-room—as a superior kind of upholstery. A vast amount of talent, either naturally mediocre or condemned so to be by a too ready market, is certainly absorbed in furnishing the cheap luxury and gratifying the rivalry of the new race of dwellers in suburban villas. Most assuredly, however, the demand having so greatly increased, it is but fair that the medium for supply should be similarly extended. Yet this has not been the case. Even since the establishment of the new society (now the Institute), the number of buyers has probably nearly doubled. Yet both water-colour societies, unlike other bodies of painters, have maintained the character of close monopolies, in so far that they admit no works for exhibition but those by a stated number of elected members. The water-colour artist not a member of either society has, therefore, been compelled to send his performances to exhibitions such as those of the Royal Academy and British Artists, where they run great risk of exclusion, and, if admitted, occupy a subordinate place, and are seen to much disadvantage in proximity to oil paintings. Then, again, there are restrictions imposed on membership of either water-colour society, to comply with which would be against both the inclination and interest of men who, perhaps of eminence as painters in oil, yet occasionally work in the handier medium of water. And this fact must be prominently kept in view. Let it not be supposed that this new exhibition consists only of works by young artists and unsuccessful candidates for admission into the old societies; though among the latter, as among those outside the pale of the Academy, there are many of far greater ability than the "members" who were not only elected long since, when the applicants were few, but who are now in their natural decline. So far from this, a very large portion of the drawings in this general exhibition are by artists of long-established reputation as oil painters.

That such an exhibition was urgently needed is by the event proved with unexpected force. The present collection comprises upwards of five hundred drawings of remarkably high average quality; and we understand that the enormous number of nearly twelve hundred drawings, &c., have been excluded from insufficiency of space. The Dudley Gallery—still so named from having formerly contained the fine collection of pictures belonging to Lord Ward, otherwise Dudley and Ward—has proved quite inadequate to fully and fairly carry out the intentions of the "promoters;" and whole classes of works proposed to be received have been declined. We regret, besides, to find some appearance of those expressed intentions not having in other respects been impartially carried out. It is to be observed that a "committee" has been formed, consisting almost entirely of artist contributors, and (while admitting the ability of these self-elected gentlemen) it yet seems a coincidence open to challenge that nearly every one should be represented on the walls more numerously and prominently than the great bulk of exhibitors—to say nothing of the army of rejected, and to shut our eyes to any suspicion of favouritism towards the relations and friends of the "committee." It is obvious that as this "committee" approaches in character an exclusive "society," so will the evil be repeated which a "general" water-colour exhibition should obviate. Of course, in a novel undertaking of this kind, and one that has proved of unexpected magnitude, there are many excuses for errors of detail. A great mistake was, probably, the allowing so little time for selection and arrangement. On this account we will merely mention that the "hanging" is very questionable. For the same reason also we would say nothing of the unexampled mass of errors in the catalogue, only that it is necessary to caution the visitors that, at least, the first edition contains innumerable inaccuracies in numbers, names, and titles, and that there is no attempt at arranging the index in alphabetical order.

The more than ordinary dearth of figure-subjects seems to bear out observations already made. It is immeasurably more difficult to draw a human being than a tree passably. Any slight bit of greenery will satisfy moderate tastes and purses; but we are all critics of the face and figure. Nevertheless, among the comparatively few figure-subjects are several of much merit. To come to particulars, after our long exordium, let us select for first mention two drawings of high-land shieling interiors, with an old fellow in each, by Mr. J. Richardson, which are freely and purely painted, as well as very characteristic and luminous. In one (see No. 48) Sandie is practising on the bag-pipes, and nothing can be more humorously truthful than the expression of contented enjoyment with which—his long upper lip distended, baboon fashion, and his small grey eyes half closed—he listens to that music which Haydon compared to all the devils in Hades singing through their noses while squeezing them with finger and thumb. Mr. G. J. Pimwell, who has recently illustrated an edition of "The Vicar of Wakefield," has, like Mr. F. Walker (of the old society) and other of our designers for the wood-engraver, exhibited a drawing the subject of which is taken from the book he had illustrated in simple black and white. The resemblance to Mr. Walker is still closer, for Mr. Pimwell's drawing (225) seems directly imitative of that artist's style; therefore, our admiration for its merits is less cordial than it would otherwise be. Anything more charmingly felicitous in its way than a small drawing (210), near the preceding, of a girl pursuing a butterfly, by Mr. George Thomas, we hav seldom seen. More ambitious in aim is Mr. W. B. Scott's repree sentation (69) of the return, after long absence, of a Crusader-who, half knight, half palmer, presents an appearance so, grotesque as to be scarcely recognised by his astonished wife. This drawing, while it affords traces of that antiquarianism and fertile inventiveness which give interest to this artist's wall-paintings at Wallington illustrative of Northumbrian history, betrays also in the feeble drawing of the conventional faces those technical shortcomings which detract much from the value of all his works. Mr. Cave Thomas, also, though a painter of high theoretic culture, does not heighten our anticipations of the mural paintings upon which he is engaged in the Marylebone Church, by a drawing, hot in tone, from an incident in the life of Dante (131), a subject treated some years since by Mr. Elmore; and a scene from an old play, the legs of the figures being obviously out of proportion. Great praise is due to Mr. Simeon Solomon for his strenuous efforts at an originality in choice of subject and conception, which makes us forget some mere eccentricities of composition and treatment, and some want of what may be called naturalness. We especially commend to the visitor's attention the genuine art-feeling in this young artist's subject from the Old Testament (455), representing the nocturnal visit of a "Son of God" to one of the daughters of men; and his "Antinous Dionysiacus" (239), where the beautiful youth (acting what he addresses) so much resembles the statue of the wine-god to whom he is offering libations. By Mr. J. A. Pasquier there is a picturesque drawing, rich in colour and tone, of an armed and corsleted "Escort" (87) on the road after sundown. Mr. J. Burr has a too pinky but clever study of "An Old Castilian" (252), very droll in character; and there is an artistic study of a Malay-looking woman (280), by Mr. H. W. Phillips.

Mr. E. J. Poynter is not seen to so much advantage as a figure-painter in the simpler vehicle of water as in oil. Perhaps his best drawing in this class here (we shall speak of his landscapes later) is "Beware!" (376)—a girl at the edge of a fish-pond in the terraced garden of an old red-brick mansion, holding a net in one hand as she casts crumbs to the unwary fish with the other. But this, with some very good qualities, is somewhat heavy, and "woolly" in texture. Mr. J. Jopling (whose "Fluffy" we some time since engraved) is the only artist, as far as we have observed, of either of the established societies who has contributed sketches to this gallery.

A sweet head of a girl (53), by Mr. E. Taylor (reminding us of similar studies in oil by Mr. Eddis); an effective fencing scene (106), by Mr. A. H. Marsh; the "Lullaby" (119), by Mr. G. G. Kilburne, promising for its imitative carefulness; as likewise may be said of a study of an old woman (178), by Mr. J. Pelham; a scene of child-life (146), by Mr. J. A. Fitzgerald, which we like better than his supernatural subjects; a study for an exhibited picture (277), and other drawings by Mr. C. Rossiter; a small girl's head, by Mr. W. Gale; and a masterly sketch (473) by Mr. C. W. Andrews, incidentally illustrative of the costumes and vegetation of the Philippine Islands; a large head, called a "German Free Lance" (431), by Mr. J. D. Linton (the flesh broad and good in tone); and pen-and-ink drawing by Mr. J. Charles—all deserve notice.

The ladies are well represented in this department. Miss J. Russel, though leaving something to desire in the faces, takes a distinguished place as a colourist in a scene from "Othello" (58), with Emilia finding Desdemona benumbed with terror at the first explosion of her lord's jealousy; and in a drawing of a gallant "Waiting" (93) at the place of assignation, somewhat doubtful of treachery. A drawing, illustrative of Keats's "Isabel" (139), by Miss L. Wormald, seems to have fine qualities, though hung too high for fair examination. We regret to see Miss R. Solomon forsaking a walk of art in which she did exceedingly well for subjects, or rather treatment, which, even if it looked original, would be a poor exchange. Miss O. P. Gilbert's "Spanish Lady" (164); "A Study" (197), by Miss C. M. Beresford; drawings by Miss Eliza Martin; and "The Hop-picker" (205), by Miss Edith Dunn, are to be commended for their assured merit as well as promise.

Two drawings, in which the interest is divided between figures and landscape, leave a distinct impression. The one called "Shade and Sunshine" (124), by Mr. R. Tucker, is startlingly truthful. The scene is on the Devonshire or Cornish coast. In the foreground shade a sturdy fisherman mends a lobster-pot as he talks to his little daughter; within the harbour formed by a jetty are some fishing-smacks; and out beyond, in the sunshine, gleams the turquoise sea, at the foot of a promontory which rears itself with wonderful sharpness through the perfectly impalpable atmosphere. The other drawing, styled "Ite Domum—venit Hesperus" (24), represents a party of Roman peasants on their way home across the Campagna at the approach of night with its treacherous malaria. This work is by an Italian artist, M. J. Tapiro, and is valuable, not only for breadth and vigour of execution, but for its accurate presentment of the Roman peasant without the usual picturesque embellishment, and for its depiction of the great Roman plain at a season when travellers seldom see it.

The great drawback to enjoyment, more especially of the mass of landscapes and still-life by new aspirants for public favour here, is the number of reproductions, ad nauseum, of the styles of popular painters. There are scores of close imitations of Foster, Duncan, W. Hunt, F. Tayler, and the rest. This is in every way a mistake, even on the low pecuniary ground. People buy names nowadays, and will pay anything for them; but they will give little for a counterfeit, even if it should be better than the original. A painter must have a manner of his own—it matters little what. If he can only make himself notorious—say, as a sort of artistic Brother Ignatius—so much the better; he will find not only purchasers but critics disposed to discover endless beauties, thereby, of course, showing their own superior taste.

To record all the instances of imitation in this gallery would be waste of time; let us rather continue to make known the proper merit of artists with whom the public should be better acquainted. Mr. G. Mawley, then, takes a foremost place among the "new men" in landscape, with several rustic subjects, ranging from the chill, cheerless gloom of a late autumn evening (88) to the brightness of midsummer (452 and 460) and the sultry sunniness of harvest-time in the field (207), and in an old barn interior (211). The last is an extremely fine drawing, unsurpassed for rich, glowing effectiveness. One or two of the others may be reminiscent of Birket Foster; but if so, the reminiscence is in their favour, for they are less finical in their elaboration. A small drawing, by Mr. J. W. North, of a picturesque "Old Court, Somerset" (263), with the low sun lingering on the quaint old house, has splendid depth of gemlike colour, and a figure in the foreground shade is touched in with exquisite delicacy. The landscapes by Mr. Poynter, though looking as if painted from photographs, and in the case of two views at Pau leaving us in doubt almost whether daylight or moonlight is intended, nevertheless evince, especially where colour is less subordinated to breadth of shadow, as in the "Salmon Pool on the Conway" (322), much delicate and artistic observation.

Mr. J. Nash, jun. (son of the well-known painter), is a young artist who will certainly win a distinguished position. He exhibits, besides a large drawing of Glencoe, a view (173) of Nice from the neighbouring heights (described as "The Ardgour Hills" in the catalogue), which, though some would call it a little pre-Raphaelitic, is admirably drawn, singularly true in effect, and thoroughly conscientious in the realisation of detail. Mr. H. Moore is represented by a large and important drawing, though rather spotty in effect, "Lochian Elan" (141); he also sends some excellent etchings. We find comparatively-matured mastery, and that grasp of broad gradations which generally comes only with long practice, in a drawing by an artist, Mr. J. H. Scott, whose name is new to us. We allude to "Evening in the Valley of Lauterbrunnen" (67), where the vast spaces of sharply-defined shadow and sunlight, so difficult to preserve in relative value, are very successfully rendered. By the same there is a good study of "The Oldest Oak in Surrey" (382). Mr. A. Severn contributes a sunset view of Rome (where, by-the-way, the artist's father is English Consul); together with several large drawings of London from the Thames, seen under its too common aspects, and in one instance after sundown; also a still larger study of waves breaking on a solitary shore by moonlight—truly a "wild waste of water." Let us at once admit the feeling shown in this selection of themes, and let us thank the artist specially for indicating the subjects of weird mystery and gloomy grandeur afforded by London and the Thames mantled with all their smoke and fog. But, on the other hand, it seems to us that the great test of such representations of exceptional effect is not so much whether they are very specious at first sight, for this result can be got by mere artistic tricks (witness a charcoal or pastel sketch), but rather whether they will grow in verisimilitude, as grows our recollection. If Mr. Severn's drawings will not bear the application of this test, it must in fairness be remembered that to succeed perfectly in representation which must of necessity be drawn to a great extent from memory demands powers and genius of the very highest order.

A long list remains of names belonging either to well-known water colourists or oil painters, whose generally familiar qualities are more or less reflected in their drawings. Bare mention of their appearance will therefore suffice. Such are Messrs. R. Redgrave, R.A., represented in an autumnal view (299); Vicat Cole—a scene in Surrey, as usual (341); G. Wolfe—in seacoast pieces; J. Mogford, who, in his large view off the Land's End (202), takes at once, in water colours, the position he has been slowly winning in oil; G. Hering, J. Peel, W. Gosling, J. W. Oakes; Harry Johnson—drawings of those Grecian subjects by which he is best known; Frank Dillon—interesting views in Austria, Egypt, and Madeira; C. F. Williams—a well-remembered representation of "Afterglow, Southampton Water" (191); F. Walton and N. O. Lupton (both winners of the Academy Turner medal); R. Beavis—a refined drawing, "On the Coast of Northumberland" (389); H. Holiday, E. Hargitt, C. E. Johnson, C. P. Knight, C. J. Lewis; and Miss Blunden, whose Devonshire views, though a little crude, have striking truthfulness. Very well deserving notice, also, are the drawings (though reminding one of a popular mannerism easy of imitation) of Messrs. W. Coleman, C. Earle, and W. P. Burton; those of Mr. J. Needham, which derive, however, some of their prettiness from undue forcing of colour; good examples of tone by Messrs. T. Hart and R. T. Pain; the broad and powerful effects of Mr. F. Powell; marine pieces and coast scenes by Messrs. S. Vincent, W. R. Beverley, the well-known scene-painter; C. R. Aston, A. E. Stannus, and G. M. Atkinson; together with contributions by W. Moore, G. Barnard, A. Ditchfield, W. H. Millais (brother of the well-known painter), A. W. Weedon, T. J. Soper, A. Hammet, F. G. Reynolds, J. Hitchins, and J. C. Robinson; drawings of or with animals by C. Haucock, T. G. Cooper, and H. Birtles; some good views in Caen by T. R. M'Quoid, and other architectural drawings by G. J. Niemann and Miss V. Colkett; and still-life pieces by J. Sherrin (by whom are some of the best), S. T. Whiteford, R. P. Burcham, and Miss H. Coleman.

MUSIC.

This evening is the last of the season at Her Majesty's Theatre. There only remains Mr. Harrison's benefit, which is announced to take place on Thursday, the 9th of March.

At the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden, Gounod's new opera, "The Mock Doctor" ("Le Médécin Malgré Lui"), has been for some time in active preparation, and will, it is expected, be produced next week.

Mr. Ella, the able director of the Musical Union, has, according to custom, issued the "Record" of the last (the twentieth) season of that distinguished society. The "Record," we may remind our musical readers, is by no means a mere book of the concerts of last season, though it includes them all, and contains, moreover, additional matter of much interest to every amateur of music, the whole forming a pamphlet of permanent value, which ought to have a place in every musical library. The books of each concert of last season contain critical remarks, full of taste and discernment, on the various works performed and other information respecting them. The pamphlet now issued includes new matter, which will render it an important book of reference. In addition to what has already been given to the public, this record of last season contains a general view of the state and prospects of the Musical Union; a biographical notice and portrait (an admirable likeness) of the late lamented Meyerbeer, and an analysis of his chef-d'œuvre, "Les Huguenots," both from Mr. Ella's pen, full of interesting matter, and containing particulars respecting that illustrious man hitherto unknown to the public. From the dedication to the Right Hon. Sir George Clark, Bart., the chairman of the committee, we learn with much satisfaction that Mr. Ella's plan of establishing an institute in connection with the Musical Union approaches its full accomplishment. On this head Mr. Ella says:—"The Musical Union Institute continues to afford to young and meritorious artists the assistance of its library; also an opportunity of displaying their talent, and friendly advice as to their musical career. Should the projects contemplated at Kensington, in the interests of music, hold out a certainty of permanent accommodation for a public musical library and institute, which I have so long and urgently desired to accomplish, I shall be fully prepared to fulfil those conditions set forth in the prospectus of 1860, irrespective of further donations—viz., the presentation of my library and musical instruments, and at my decease £1000 in money. The opulent dilettanti of this country, who lavish their millions upon works of the sister arts, will, I hope, second my efforts, and bestow some of their surplus riches for the encouragement of music, the professors of which are proverbially bountiful in the exercise of their talent in the cause of charity."

The first trial of new orchestral pieces composed for the Musical Society of London took place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Wednesday evening, last week. The following pieces were tried:—Symphony in C major—Arthur O'Leary; Introduction and Allegro for pianoforte and orchestra—Alice Mary Smith; Overture ("King Lear")—Frederic Archer; Symphony in C—Henry Gadsby; Two marches—C. A. Barry; Overture—James Lea Summers. Conductor, Mr. Alfred Mellon. All these pieces evinced much talent and were favourably received. The largest share of applause was bestowed upon Mr. Gadsby's symphony, and the next upon Miss Alice Mary Smith's solo for the pianoforte, accompanied by the orchestra; the success of this last piece being heightened by the admirable manner in which it was performed by the young lady herself. The second trial of new orchestral works is to take place, at the same place, on the 22nd of November next.

The concerts of the Philharmonic Society this season are, as usual, to be eight in number, and to take place on the following Monday evenings:—March 20, April 3; May 1, 15, and 29; June 12 and 26, and July 10. The terms of subscription for the season and the prices of admission to single concerts are the same as heretofore.

At the Monday Popular Concert of this week the instrumental pieces consisted of Mozart's quintet in G minor, for two violins, two violas, and violoncello; Beethoven's pianoforte Sonata Pastorale in D, op. 28; Tartini's violin sonata, "Didone Abbandonata;" and Beethoven's sonata in G, for the piano and violin. Herr Strauss was the principal violinist, and M. Hallé the pianist. The singers were Miss Edith Wynne and Mr. Cummings. Miss Wynne sang Gounod's "Ave Maria" and Mr. Harold Thomas's song, "Wind of the Western Sea," a charming composition, which was warmly applauded. Mr. Cummings sang two beautiful songs by Benedict—"The Lullaby" and "L'Addio del Marinare." The hall was quite full.

The 124th anniversary festival of the Madrigal Society was held at Freemasons' Hall on Thursday, last week. This time-honoured society (the oldest musical association in England, and probably in Europe) was founded in the year 1741, and from that time to this has pursued the even tenor of its way, in spite of all the vicissitudes of taste and fashion. The class of music to which the Madrigal Society devotes itself is for all time, and will live in England as long as there is a taste for the finest vocal harmony in existence. The meeting of last week was as animated and agreeable as usual. The chair was occupied by the president of the society, Sir George Clark, Bart., a zealous Madrigalian and an accomplished gentleman; and there was a goodly attendance of members and visitors. A fine selection of pieces, from the works of Palestrina, Ward, Ravenscroft, Wilbye, Boyce, Luca, Marenzio, Morley, and other great masters of the olden time, was sung in the antique fashion by the company as they sat round the table, the time being given with great firmness by M. Cipriani Potter.

The Beethoven Society, which continues to give its weekly concerts at Willis's Rooms, is—we will not say a formidable rival of but an effective coadjutor to the Monday Popular Concerts. The two establishments are similar in plan, and similar, too, in the way in which the plan is carried out. The Beethoven Society gives admirable selections of the most classical chamber music, instrumental and vocal, and in its performances the most accomplished artists are uniformly employed. At the concert of Saturday last the programme included Haydn's 81st quartet in G; Beethoven's pianoforte sonata in D, op. 16; Mendelssohn's pianoforte caprice in E; and Beethoven's posthumous quartet in C sharp minor. The performers of these pieces were—violins, Messrs. Sainton and Pollitzer; viola, Mr. Doyle; violoncello, Mr. G. Collins; and pianoforte, Mr. Otto-Goldschmidt. The vocal performers were Mdme. Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Rose Hersee, and Signor Garcia. At the concert of this evening Mdme. Arabella Goddard is announced to appear.

Mr. Amott, the organist of Gloucester Cathedral and conductor of the Triennial Festival of that city, died suddenly a few days ago. His untimely death is much regretted; for he was not only an excellent musician, but a worthy and amiable man.

THE THEATRES.

As the season progresses, the management of Drury Lane develop their programme. On Monday Sir E. Bulwer Lytton's drama of "Richelieu" was performed, and Mr. Phelps supported the character of the Cardinal with his usual power. The cast is otherwise efficient. Mr. Marston, as Baradas; Mr. Edmund Phelps, as De Mauprat; and Mr. W. Lacy, as the Sieur de Beringhen, leave nothing to be desired. The heroines are not of equal importance, but they are well provided for. Mrs. H. Vezin was Julie de Mortemar, and Miss H. Howard Marion de Lorme.

The indisposition of Miss Bateman continues, and, accordingly, Mr. Webster himself has come to the rescue. "Masks and Faces" is now performing; and, with the manager as Triplet and Mrs. Stirling as Pegg Woffington, cannot fail of being attractive. Mr. Toole, also, adds to the hilarity of the evening in the amusing farce entitled "Ici on parle Francais."

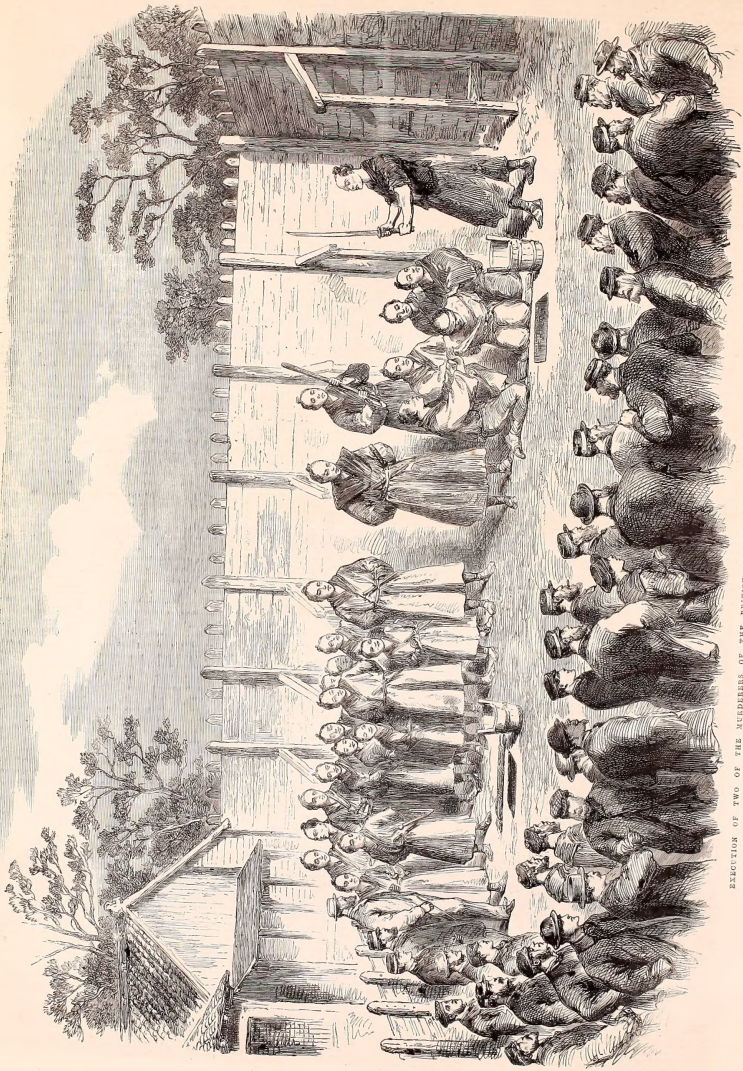
The Frankfort Journal recently announced that the Swiss Confederation had prohibited the publication of the encyclical in Switzerland. The Bund contradicts this news by stating—first, that the Federal Council has not adopted any such measure; secondly, that it would have had no authority for doing so, had it wished.

Archæology of the Month.

ARCHÆOLOGY has lost a munificent supporter by the lamented death of the Duke of Northumberland. His Grace, for many years, took unceasing interest in the explorations of the Roman Wall which have been carried out from time to time. When the Archæological Institute visited Newcastle-upon-Tyne, in 1852, the Duke ordered a complete investigation to be made of the station of Bremenium, which was executed and made the subject of a communication to the society by Dr. Bruce, whose work on the Roman Wall the Duke also assisted with his purse. He likewise had made at his cost a survey of the Roman wall and roads in Northumberland, by Mr. Mac Lauchlan, whom he also, according to the Builder, "deputed to make a chart of the county, showing the numerous British camps and consequent points of occupation by our pre-historic predecessors, a task not yet completed." The third edition of Dr. Bruce's "Roman Wall," with the results of the excavations of the last ten years, and a map of the wall from Mac Lauchlan's survey, and additional illustrations, has just been announced for publication. The Duke's permanent commission to the late Mr. Wykeham Archer to draw other antiquities in Northumberland we mentioned in our recent notice of that artist. His Grace also had printed for private distribution illustrations of the architecture of Alnwick, Prudhoe, and Warkworth Castles, by Jewitt, Le Keux, and Delamotte; besides a large volume "On the Military and Feudal Architecture of Northumberland," with illustrations of the peculiarities of Northumberland castles and peles. The Duke also spent considerable sums of money in making excavations at Greaves Ash and other early British camps in the fastnesses of the Cheviot Hills. His Grace distinguished his accession to the dukedom by commencing the restoration of his principal seats—Sion House, Northumberland House, and Alnwick Castle: upon the latter, intrusted to Mr. Salvin, and in which the rebuilding was very extensive, the Duke is said to have expended a quarter of a million sterling, the Prudhoe Keep Tower being the great distinctive and memorial work. Nearly 800 workmen are said to have been employed on some occasions at Alnwick. Visitors to the British Museum cannot fail to remember the Prudhoe Lions, which indicate the early study of the Duke (then Lord Prudhoe) of Egyptian antiquities on the banks of the Nile; and one of the towers at Alnwick contains a museum of relics, chiefly the result of his travels and discoveries. A glance at the memoir of his Grace in our Obituary column will show that these refined pursuits did not divert his Grace from the philanthropic work of benefiting his tenantry by the erection of churches and cottages, the latter at an expense of £100,000.

At the recent meeting of the Archæological Institute was read a paper, by Mr. J. Burtt, "On a Book of Ordinances of the City of Worcester." Among those of popular interest are annual payments, dating from very early times, for ringing "day-bell" and "bow-bell"—the latter being the same as the curfew, although now rung at eight instead of nine, as at the time of the ordinance. There is no local explanation of the term "bow-bell;" but Mr. Burtt considered reasonable the suggestion of Mr. C. Wolff, Town Clerk of Worcester city, that, as the curfew of London was rung at Bow Church, the name of that church was adopted in other places and applied to the bell. Mr. W. H. Tregelles gave an elaborate description of the encampment on Wimbledon-common, popularly known as "Cæsar's Camp." Mr. Tregelles considers it to be impossible to settle definitely the period to which these remains belong; but he described and criticised the different views which have been put forth on the subject by various authorities, and expressed a hope that the camp—whether it was originally the scene of a village and cattle inclosure of the Britons, or an encampment of the Romans, or the stronghold of Saxon or Danish warriors, or of each in succession—should not be destroyed; but that, in making any future arrangement for the allotment of the common, this interesting relic, round which many historic associations cluster, should be preserved, or, at worst, be adapted as a promenade or pleasure-ground. In our early notice of the Wimbledon Park movement we advocated the conservation of the form of this circular intrenchment, which the country people have long called the "Rounds," and modern map-makers have set down as Cæsar's camp. The late Dr. Roots, F.S.A., recollected this designation for sixty years; he possessed several antiquities, apparently Roman, found on Wimbledon-common; he was strongly of opinion that Cæsar crossed the Thames at Kingston—ancient Moreford, or the great ford—at least with his infantry, and that he occupied this intrenchment whilst preparing for the conflict. This opinion of so accredited a local antiquary as Dr. Roots, undoubtedly, strengthend the popular designation of "Cæsar's Camp;" and he imagined the fierce struggle with the troops of Cassivelaunus to have taken place on the Middlesex bank of the river immediately above Kingston, where many relics of a warlike description have been found by the ballast-heavers, similar to those discovered in this neighbourhood, as explained by Dr. Roots in the Archæologia, vol. xxx.; and in vol. xxxi. is a paper by A. J. Kempe, F.S.A., respecting the intrenchment. A few of the relics are engraved in Brayley's "History of Surrey," vol. iii.: one is a spearhead of bronze, found on Wimbledon-common, near Kingston-hill, on which, in Aubrey's time, stood the gallows, "in a dry gravel-ground, where they often find Roman urns."

We may here mention that Dr. Guest has opportunely reprinted, for private distribution, the able memoir which he read to the Archæological Institute in 1863, on "Julius Cæsar's Invasion of Britain," to which a fresh interest will be imparted by the publication of the Emperor's "Histoire de Jules César." Dr. Guest, it will be recollected, adopts Deal as the place of Cæsar's landing.



The Librarian to the Corporation of London, at Guildhall, William Turner Alchin, died on the 3rd inst., after a few days' illness, at the age of seventy-six. He formerly practised as a solicitor at Winchester, and during the latter part of his residence there he was engaged in the compilation of indexes to the ecclesiastical registers, &c., of Salisbury and the former city, which labours have been of the utmost importance to the genealogist and antiquary. Upon the retirement of Mr. Herbert from the Guildhall Library, in 1845, Mr. Alchin succeeded to the office, which he held at the time of his death. He was much esteemed for his courtesy to visitors to the library. His valuable indexes to the ancient records of the Corporation, and his calendar of the wills enrolled in the Court of Hustings of London, attest his untiring industry and usefulness in the position he so long and so ably occupied. Mr. W. H. Overall, who has officiated as librarian for six years, is, we understand, a candidate as Mr. Alchin's successor.

The "Ragged Regiment," or "Waxwork," at Westminster Abbey, which was withdrawn from public exhibition, and has been shut up in presses, over Abbot Islip's Chapel, since 1839 (see "Curiosities of London," p. 753), has just been resorted to for artistic accuracy by Mr. Maclise, in painting the figure of Nelson for his nearly-completed picture for the House of Lords; the painter having borrowed the hat from the effigies of the great Admiral for the above purpose. It has been suggested that the Art Department should borrow other relics from the same quarter for exhibition at South Kensington.

The Museum of Autographs and Literary Curiosities formed by Mr. John Sainsbury has just been dispersed by auction. Among the Shakspeare documents disposed of were the following:—

Indenture of bargain and sale between Henry Walker, citizen and minstrel, of London, and William Shakespeare, of Stratford-upon-Avon, in the county of Warwick, gentleman; William Johnson, citizen and vintner, of London; John Jackson and John Hemyng, of London, gentleman, for £140, of a house or tenement, with the appurtenances, situated within the precincts of the late Black Fryers, London, &c., March 10, 1612—£55 (Mr. J. O. Halliwell. Conveyance of the premises in Blackfriars (described in the preceding document) by John Jackson and John Hemynge, of London, to John Greene, of Clement's Inn, and Mathew Morrys, of Stratford-upon-Avon, in the county of Warwick, gentleman, according to the true intent and meaning of the last will and testament of William Shakespeare, deceased, late of Stratford aforesaid, gentleman, &c.—£50 (Ellis).

A new autograph of Shakspeare has just been added to the treasures of the Bodleian Library. In the middle of the titlepage of a small 8vo. Aldine edition of Ovid's "Metamorphoses," published in 1502, is inscribed in small letters Wm. Shr. in ink, which has faded to a reddish brown colour. It was purchased at the recent sale of Mr. Edkins's library, at the price of £9. From a minute examination of the autograph, detailed in the Athenæum, No. 1944, it appears that this little volume had belonged to Shakspeare at an early period of his life; then, when old, he gave it away, at that time writing his contracted name on the titlepage; that the volume subsequently passed into the possession of W. Hall, and was given by him to Thomas Nash, sixty-four years after Shakspeare's death.

EXECUTION OF TWO OF THE MURDERERS OF THE BRITISH OFFICERS IN JAPAN.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

EXECUTION OF TWO OF THE MURDERERS OF THE BRITISH OFFICERS IN JAPAN.

OUR Special Artist and Correspondent at Yokohama has sent us the sketch we have engraved of the scene at the execution of two Japanese supposed to have been accomplices in the murder of Major Baldwin and Lieutenant Bird. His letter, dated Dec. 17, describes the affair as follows:—

"Yesterday, at one o'clock, Consul Vyse, accompanied by several members of the Legation, came to me and told me to put paper and a pencil in my pocket, to mount my horse and follow him, to see the execution of two Japanese connected with the murder of Major Baldwin and Lieutenant Bird. After half an hour's ride, we arrived at the place of execution, outside of which were about one hundred horses, belonging to officers and merchants of Yokohama, who had already assembled inside the inclosure. We dismounted, and walked through the large wooden gateway. We were shown into a courtyard surrounded by high bamboo palisade, where numerous spectators were waiting, smoking and talking. In the court were two oblong holes, and near these holes was a matting of straw for the victims to kneel upon, the holes being intended to receive their heads; on the right side of the holes were two buckets of water and ladles. Several Yakunin were walking about and talking with some of the officers of the Legation. After waiting more than an hour, we heard the Judges reading the judgment to the prisoners, who, when the lecture was over, gave a most unearthly yell, which, accompanied by shuffling of feet, caused the Europeans to fancy that the devil had broken loose, and for a moment there was quite a panic. However, the Japanese interpreter explained to us the reason, and all was quiet again. The first prisoner's eyes were then blindfolded and his arms firmly bound by cords. He was led in by four men, and he knelt on the straw with his head over the hole. Four men held him, though he appeared as cool as possible, never moving a muscle. The executioner, who appeared delighted with his occupation, had a sword with a bamboo scabbard handed to him. He dipped his hands in water and wound a piece of white cotton round the hilt. He then took off the scabbard and placed himself in position. The four men who were holding the prisoner now bared his shoulders. I confess that I felt sick at all these preparations, and while the executioner made several feints I turned my head away; but I heard a dull thud and looked round, and where the man had before been kneeling a headless trunk lay bleeding. The executioner had severed the man's head with one masterly blow, and as easily as one would cut a carrot. The man's head fell into the hole; water was thrown upon it, and the next victim was then carried in, for he, being wounded by several sword cuts, one in the leg, was unable to walk. He was not so steady as the other, and asked the executioner several times if it was not yet time (madosoi?). His head went off at one blow, like the other. The heads were washed and put into mat bags. As you may believe, I was glad to get away. In making the sketch I have chosen the moment when there was nothing to shock the spectators. These two men, it seems, were friends of the murderers, and had avowed their intention to kill some foreigners. They had left their province in company with the other two. After the murder they were traced to the Hakoni Mountains, where they were captured; but the elder one fought with his captors, which accounts for the several cuts that he had received. It is said that they have given some clue as to where the actual murderers may be discovered; and it is very probable that the other two will also be brought to justice. This is the first time since Japan has been opened to us that executives have been executed in consequence of misdeeds against foreigners. This, it seems, is a sign that the Tycoon's Government is desirous of continuing friendly relations with foreigners."

THE DAIBODDH, OR COLOSSAL BRONZE IMAGE OF A BUDDHIST IDOL, IN THE TEMPLE OF KAMAKURA, JAPAN.

THE BUDDHIST IDOL DAIBOODH, IN THE TEMPLE OF KAMAKURA, JAPAN.

IT will be remembered that the two British officers, Major Baldwin and Lieutenant Bird, of the 20th Regiment, who were murdered near the Temple of Kamakura, in Japan, two or three months ago, had ridden to that place from Yokohama for the purpose of seeing the "Daibootz," or "Daibeuh," a colossal bronze image or Buddhist idol, which is one of the greatest objects of curiosity to all foreign visitors. We present an Engraving of the Daibooth, from a drawing by Mr. F. L. Bodwell. The image is about 60 ft. high, and so large that five persons can stand in the two palms of the hands, and five more can sit across the joined thumbs. The bronze is hollow, and at the base of the figure is a cell which serves for a shrine. The idol, which was formerly gilt all over, is cross-legged, and with folded hands, in an attitude of meditative repose, in the midst of a garden inclosed by massive walls. It rested originally upon an immense lotus-flower, and was sheltered beneath a wooden edifice supported by nearly a hundred pillars. On each side of the gateway was an image, 24 ft. high, with the face of a lion; that on the left side having its mouth open, and its hands stretched out, while the image on the right side has its mouth shut, and its hand drawn back. These figures were meant to represent the two great principles of nature—those of action and sufferance, giving and taking, generation and corruption, life and death—which are an essential part of the Buddhist creed. The Daibooth itself is an embodiment of Amida, the Supreme Being, as conceived by the prevalent religious opinion of three hundred millions of mankind.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

Travels in Central Asia. By Arminius Vámbéri. (Murray.) The "accursed hunger for gold" scarcely exercises upon men a more powerful influence than the unquenchable thirst for knowledge. Even avarice would sometimes fear to seek its glittering prey through Asia deserve especial consideration. The style of writing is simple and unaffected; and the tone of frankness and dry humour observable throughout is particularly agreeable. Nor must the spirited illustrations which adorn the volume miss their due meed of praise.

Norse's History. By Magdalene Thoresen; translated by the Rev. M. R. Barnard, B.A. (Chapman and Hall.) A Norwegian tale—a tale of the land where the fjord is deep and the field is high; where the spert is good, though the toil is great; where love smiles forth from bright blue eyes and the sunlight tarnishes yellow hair. But, though external nature under Northern skies has its own peculiar characteristic features, man is the same both there and elsewhere; maidens have to undergo trials before they can win lovers' hearts; beauty is wooed and won, and wronged. And so it was with luckless Signe. The story is, if not as old as that of Dinah and Shechem. Mr. Barnard appears to be a good translator, but his original evidently contained little, except descriptions of local scenery and local customs, to which the charm of novelty belongs. There is here and there a rural freshness, and even a rustic simplicity, here and there an exotic quaintness which give the reader great interest; but, on the whole, the story is not remarkable for much beyond a conf used mass of tragical incidents, a disappointment of expectations, a single instance of true love requited, a flow of spasmodic utterances, and a frequent but irreverent use (according, no doubt, to "the custom of the country") of that name "at which every knee" should "bow."

The Siberian Overland Route. By Alexander Michie. (Murray.) All who have been moved either by "the charming narrative of John Bell of Antermony, who, in the reign of Peter the Great, travelled from Petersburg to Pekin, in the suite of a Russian Ambassador," or by their inward impulses to travel "the Siberian overland route from Pekin to Petersburg," and would do so in an easy-chair, without the inconvenience of dust and dirt, street obstructions, wind and rain, comfortless encampments, downbreaking camels, obdurate mules, vicious ponies, vexatious delays, dangerous roads, "pourboires," and the other countless annoyances of personal locomotion, would do well to avail themselves of Mr. Michie's book. They will have but to run their eye over the route marked out on his excellent map, but to examine his curious illustrations, but to read his straightforward narrative, and they will have accomplished the journey, they will have "done" many of the "lions," and they will probably know more about the places and peoples through which their pilgrimage is made than they would have known had they undergone the fatigue of actual peregrination. Mr. Michie modestly says of his book, "it has no pretensions to any higher merit than that of being a plain narrative of the journey, and an impartial record of my own impressions of the people among whom I travelled;" but that is exactly what reasonable beings desire, and they will learn, in addition to much else which is interesting and new, that "those English residents in Siberia with whom" he "conversed assert that the Polish exiles enjoy a degree of peace, comfort, and prosperity that they were altogether strangers to in their own country." In an obvious comment, of course, is, what must their condition be in their own country! But Mr. Michie says positively, "the fate of the exiles is by no means such a hard one as is too commonly supposed."

By the Sea. By the Author of "Hester Kirkland," "Adam Graeme," &c. (Smith, Elder, and Co.) Mr. Smith's novels are readable things, and that fact is exemplified in "By the Sea." The gift of drawing charming characters, and the touches of humour, which were especially noticeable in "Chesterford," are traceable also here. The author, however, seems to us to have been unfortunate in selection and treatment. A faithless and unmerited bank-clerk, and his dolefaced, silly, querulous wife are not promising subjects for romance; nor, though slighted love revenges itself in forgetting marriage vows, is that the most romantic which is known as kidnapping, particularly when nothing terrible comes of it. The two naval officers are well conceived; but the execution is not equal to the conception. The pretty, hot-blooded, jealous, self-styled widow is admirable in some respects; and the scenes between Phœbe, the French smuggler, and her mother are powerful, piquant, and amusing. The interest of the story would have been much increased had more attention been paid to probability and coherence.

A Year at the Shore. By Philip Henry Gosse, F.R.S. (Strahan.) A delicious book, deliciously illustrated. The study of natural history is always interesting, and Mr. Gosse is a genial and enthusiastic instructor. It is well to take a stroll with him—even in print—along the seaside, and learn from him how wonderfully made is every tiny creature, even the smallest mollusc that skulks beneath the stones. He will show us how they breathe, and move, and have their being; how one excels another in beauty; how one is carnivorous and another not; how the dog whelk drills the tiny hole in his victim's shell and sucks thereout a savoury meal. He is, perhaps, a little too prone to "improve the occasion," to pour forth pious commonplaces, and to introduce polemics unnecessarily: this is particularly noticeable in his last two or three pages which, in our humble opinion, might have been omitted with advantage. His arrangement of his subject into twelve chapters, corresponding to the months of the "year by the shore," gives a pleasant idea of harmonious sequence, and the quotations and anecdotes with which he enlivens his pages are very acceptable. Would that he had avoided certain unpleasant expressions, such as (p. 10), "if you could dissect out one of these points," and as (p. 154), "a perfectly dependable naturalist, Mr. Charles Darwin;" the latter suggests an unpleasant connection between Mr. Darwin and the gallows.

Our Tropical Possessions in Malay and India. By John Cameron, F.R.G.S. (Smith, Elder, and Co.) This is "a descriptive account of Singapore, Penang, Province Wellesley, and Malacca; their peoples, products, commerce, and Government," adorned by several elegant coloured illustrations, of which not the least striking is that which represents the notorious Alabama at anchor in New Harbour, Singapore. The author says, "the following pages have been written under the belief that the possessions of which they treat are about to come under the direct control of the Imperial Government, and with a view to afford the people of England some glimpse of the great beauty, some conception of the valuable commerce, and some grounds upon which to estimate the importance, in a political point of view, of the tropical country to which they are about to be drawn in the ties of a nearer relationship. And I do not think I have claimed for my subject more attention than it deserves." It certainly deserves the greatest attention, and the author has given his information in very readable style. He claims indulgence on the ground that he has had no opportunity of revising his work since it was printed, but there appears to be little need of revision (unless facts have been misstated, which we have no reason to suppose), except in a few cases of verbal eccentricity, as when a gentlemen is stated to "feel" a smell; and, after all, a smell may be sufficiently pungent to be painful. The author gives the following specimen of a note (wherein for "picnic" read "gambling"), in which a Chinaman invites his friend to an unlawful amusement. "Mr. Quang Toon Lee presents his best compliments to Mr. Tan Gee Wok, and requests the pleasure of his company to picnic entertainments on Sunday next, the 20th inst., at Salang Tiga, Bukit Timah Road, plantation of Kim Tiang Hoo, next door of Beng Lee's plantation, and also be requested all his amiable visitors will start at five a.m. punctually on that day. An answer will oblige." The last sentence but one is not very intelligible; but the meaning of the whole composition is that Mr. Quang Toon Lee is anxious to make up a party to indulge in the interdicted vice of gambling.

Faces for Fortunes. By Augustus Mayhew. (Tinsley.) The title and the three volumes to which it is prefixed seem to forbode a novel, but the foreboding is not verified. The three volumes contain a number of disconnected essays, a sort of literary calendar—i.e., a collection of stories or sketches (together with a charade and a drawing-room opera) "containing vast information and full guidance for mothers and daughters during each month in the year," and a farrago of sentiment, satire, anecdote, and facetiæ. There is much ado about valentines, courtship, marriage, dresses, and all that women are supposed to hold dear. The object of the book is explained in the preface, which is short, and runs thus:—"There is no sound in this world so beautiful as the laughter of women. In the hope of hearing it this book was written." Then, "place aux dames!" For our part, we must confess to having been rather bewildered than amused.

SITE OF THE ERUPTION AT MOUNT ETNA.

THE ERUPTION OF MOUNT ETNA.

THE eruption of Mount Etna, which began on the night of the 30th ult., and continued many days, discharging two streams of lava from a newly-opened vent at Monte Frumento, some miles to the north of the great crater, was briefly mentioned in our last. Mr. John J. Jeans, the British Vice-Consul at Catania, has favoured us with a drawing from which is engraved our map of the mountain and its neighbourhood, showing the direction taken by the streams of lava, and the perilous situation of the villages of Piedimonte and Linguaglossa, which lie at the foot of Etna on that side. From the town of Catania nothing was visible but thick clouds of smoke by day, and by night the reflection in the sky of the glowing lava and the burning woods. A low roaring sound was continually heard, with louder explosions now and then, like the report of guns at sea. All the eastern slopes of Etna are highly cultivated, abounding in vineyards and plantations of oranges, lemons, and almonds. It was distressing to think of the havoc which might be caused in this fertile and populous region by the further advance of the fiery river which slowly crept down from the new outlet of the volcano. Happily, the result has not been so destructive as was at first apprehended, and the lava has stopped short of the village of Piedimonte, which had seemed to be in the greatest danger. Mr. Jeans, in a letter dated the 9th inst., gives us the following account of a visit which he made to the crater of the burning volcano a few days before:—

"We left this on Saturday last, our party consisting of Sir ——, a Sicilian friend, and myself, in a three-horse carriage, bound for Piedimonte, a village situated high up on the eastern slope of Etna, at about thirty miles from Catania, and considered the best starting-point to see the eruption. This place we reached at eight in the evening. The only inn was so crowded that it was impossible to find accommodation. Our Sicilian friend, however, foreseeing difficulties, had provided himself with an introduction, and we were soon ushered into a private dwelling, meeting with that courteous hospitality which I have never found wanting in Sicily during a fifteen years' residence there. Not only did our host undertake to procure the necessary guides and mules, but he himself and his brother volunteered to accompany us. After partaking of a hasty meal, we made ready for a start at nine o'clock; the party, including guides, numbered about a dozen persons. We were well provided with plaids and wrappers, which was a judicious precaution. On preparing to mount we found, to our dismay, that there were neither saddles nor stirrups, each mule being merely provided with a high and broad canvas pad, upon which, after several unsuccessful efforts, we succeeded in hoisting ourselves. Proceeding in single file up the steepest of mountain paths, and sometimes across country, through vineyards and ploughed land without any vestige of path, a ride of two hours and a half brought us to Monte Crisimo, situated about two miles N.E. of Monte Frumento, at the base of which the eruption begins. During the ascent our party had been overtaken and joined by another, consisting of the colonel of one of the Italian regiments quartered at Catania, his wife, two other officers, three orderlies, and their guides, so that we formed a numerous cavalcade. Up to this time the night had been magnificent and the moon unclouded; but, on reaching the foot of Monte Crisimo, we were suddenly enveloped in a dense white mist. The guides, fearing a change of weather, held a consultation, and declared it unsafe to proceed. Selecting, therefore, a suitable spot for a halt, we dismounted and kindled a large fire, the materials of which were furnished by a young oak growing in the vicinity. No sooner had these preparations been completed than the mist, much to our relief, cleared off as suddenly as it had appeared, and, leaving our mules at the encampment, we continued the ascent on foot. In half an hour we had reached the summit of the Mount, whence a glorious sight awaited us. Opposite, on a level with us, in a south-westerly direction, stood Monte Frumento, with the new crater at its base, and stretching far away to the left were visible the different streams of red-hot lava, bordered with blazing trees. There appeared to be several vents to the crater, but only two principal ones; and these, at intervals of a few seconds, alternately vomited forth vast volumes of flame, in the midst of which, of a deeper red, were seen showers of red-hot stones, or rather masses of scoriæ, propelled to an amazing height. The roar was almost incessant, making the earth tremble at every fresh explosion. During the brief intervals of silence was heard the peculiar metallic sound produced by the lava in its advance. Altogether, it was one of those scenes which baffle description, and impress man with his utter littleness in the presence of such huge forces of Nature. After gazing upon it for some time in silent wonder, we reluctantly retraced our steps to the bivouac, looked up our plaids and wrappers, heaped a fresh supply of fuel upon the fire, and, seating ourselves round it, shared what provisions we had brought with us. The moon had set, and the guides positively refused to return before daylight by the precipitous paths we had ascended; so there was nothing to be done but to remain where we were, making ourselves as comfortable as we could. It was bitterly cold, and well it might be, for we must have been at an elevation of between 6000 ft. and 7000 ft. above the level of the sea. After waiting for five weary hours, during which the roaring of the mountain and the constant earthquake precluded anything like sleep, dawn at length appeared. The lady, who had borne the hardship and exposure without a murmur, and my English friend, finding themselves unequal to undergo further fatigue, started off on their mules for Piedimonte, accompanied by a party of guides and the soldiers. The Italian officers, my Sicilian friend, and myself, with our host of Piedimonte and the remainder of the guides, struck off on foot across country to the left, for the purpose of exploring the different streams. These we visited in succession. They are no less than nine in number, the most northerly threatening Linguaglossa; five running in the direction of Piedimonte, to the eastward; and the remainder towards Mascali, Annunziata, and Macchia, to the south-east. Their progress was slow—not exceeding, according to the guides, an average of two metres per hour. The formation of a lava stream is too generally known to need much explanation. I cannot better compare those I saw than to immense causeways of scoriæ and ashes, their width and height varying according to the nature of the ground. The progressive motion is from beneath, where the lava is in a state of fusion, and the stones gradually roll over from the top and sides as the stream advances. Where impediments are encountered, the current either deviates or accumulates until the level of the obstacle is surpassed.

"Up to this time no very great amount of damage had been effected, the lava having scarcely reached the highly-cultivated region; but a large extent of waste and forest land had been devastated, together with a few of the higher vineyards. Some farm buildings and wine-presses had also been destroyed. A body of sappers sent from Messina are employed pumping out the cisterns in the threatened districts, for, whenever lava comes in contact with water, the expansion of the steam causes fearful explosions. In this manner sixty-nine persons were either killed or seriously injured near Bronte during the eruption of 1843. Having satisfied our curiosity, we descended to a spot where our mules were in waiting, and reached Piedimonte at eleven in the forenoon, after an absence of fourteen hours. After settling with our guides (the expense for our party amounting to about £2) and taking a cup of coffee, we ordered the carriage, and started for Giarre. The view commanded by this road is magnificent, embracing, as it does, the bold promontories of Taormina and St. Alessio, and the distant coast of Calabria from the Straits of Messina to Cape Spartivento, whilt at our feet lay the fertile plains of Mascali and Giarre, bordered by the blue Mediterranean. This view is inferior only to that from Taormina, one of the finest in Europe. Reaching Giarre at one o'clock, we breakfasted with our friend the Colonel, who, with his party, had preceded us, and by six in the evening we were at Catania, delighted with our trip but rather knocked up for want of rest. Since my return the eruption has continued with unabated violence; and, whilst writing, I hear that a deplorable accident has happened by an explosion caused by the contact of burning lava with some cistern or watercourse, by the effects of which a number of sappers are reported to have lost their lives but the particulars are not known."

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE admirers of early race-meetings have had to share the coursing-men's troubles; and in Lincoln the horses seem to have been trotting about the town for exercise—as Epirus did in Regent-street at early dawn, while he waited three days in the metropolis for a horse-box, in the era of railway plant simplicity, the week before he won the Wolverhampton Stakes. Still, at Lincoln they seem to have been rather better off, as they could always "finish" their preparation in Lord Henry Bentinck's covered ride, which was placed freely at their service. There has been little or no alteration in the Derby betting, but Liddington is a very "hot" favourite for "The Guineas." Lord Uxbridge's twelve lots averaged about 270 gs. at Tattersall's on Monday. Old General Hess, the once great trial horse, was bought for 300 gs. by Godding's stable; and the Marquis of Hastings gave 700 gs. for the highly engaged two-year-old Black Prince, by Voltigeur.

The present Waterloo Cup nominations number forty-three English, thirteen Scottish, and six Irish. With the exception of Rainbow, Master Burleigh, and Good Idea, whose places are supplied by Blush Rose, Master Sweeny, and Jacob, the sixty-four of the first and second draws are identical. Not one of the first couples have been drawn together again. Calabaroona leads off with Bonus instead of Bonnie Venture; King Death (who may be said to be the belt-holder) with Donald instead of Henchman; Clasper with Blush Rose instead of Bessow; Rebe with her final victress of 1863, Chloe, instead of Grecian Girl; Jem Mace with Glendower instead of Samuel; and Johnny Cope with Bubwith instead of Deodora. The dogs from a distance have been doing their work principally on the sands at Southport, almost the only soft spot to be got, and not inappropriate to such martyrs, as trainers consider themselves, to "that Admiral Fitzroy."

The tenth volume of the "Stud Book," which has just been published, shows an increase of about 700 registered thoroughbred mares within the last ten years. Exportations have been very large in 1861-4, considering that the American market has been virtually closed. The East India Company alone have cleared off eighty-four; the French took seventy-four brood mares and seven sires; and Germany and Austria fifty-eight sires, including Saunterer and two Derby winners, and 122 mares. The spirited China merchants, who stand at no price to win a cup, were very unlucky, as three of their best horses, Buckstone, Dictator, and Investment, died on the passage out, or soon after they landed. Still we have plenty of good blood left, as there are at present in the United Kingdom eighty-six brood mares by Birdcatcher, thirty-seven by Flying Dutchman, thirty-three by Harkaway, thirty-six by Lanercost, sixty-eight by Melbourne, eighty by Orlando (who is not to be sold, but to be left to die at the Royal stud), fifty-two by Sweetmeat, twenty-three by Sir Hercules, forty-seven by Stockwell, and no less than 106 by Touchstone. It is said that own brother to Thunderbolt—a roarer and a cribber, and once a 500-guinea Doncaster yearling—is drawing a coal cart near Rufford; and the new "Stud Book" reveals a somewhat similar fate of a Touchstone mare, which has been "given away to some gipsies."

The Fitzwilliam had five capital days before the frost, and killed four foxes. On one day they had four runs and killed two foxes. The Brocklesby scent improved between the two frosts, and they had a very clipping fifty-five minutes, with a kill in a coalhouse. The Heythrop have had a capital season so far, and their run of the season was on the 9th. The Quorn had four or five very good things before the frost came, including a hard day on the 6th from Curate's Gorse, and a fast forty-five minutes next day from Long Buckby. The Cheshire have suffered very severely from frost, but contrived to get a capital one hour thirty-five minutes with a second fox from Hurleston Gorse in the short respite of three or four days. The best run that the Bramham Moor have had of late ended with a kill in the heart of the York and Ainsty; and the best that the latter pack have had was a fast forty-eight minutes to ground in Lord Middleton's.

Mr. T. J. Giles to be Paymaster in her Majesty's Fleet.

Experiments are being made in Aldershott camp with the South American "jerked beef," with a view to its introduction in the Army if found desirable. The beef at present does not find favour with the men.

The following days have been fixed for Army examinations:—Admission to the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, Monday, June 19; admission to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, Monday, July 3; admission to the Staff College, Thursday, July 20.

A series of official despatches relating to the destruction by fire of her Majesty's ship Bombay was published in the Gazette of yesterday week. Our readers are, however, already in possession of all that is known relative to this calamity.

Charles Forbes, M.D., of her Majesty's ship Topaze, and Andrew Graham, M.D., of her Majesty's ship Agamemnon, have had awarded to them the gold medal founded by Sir Gilbert Blane, for the excellence of their reports.

The Armstrong and Whitworth committee resume their trials of the rival 70-pounders this week, "after which," says the Army and Navy Gazette, "it is anticipated that their report will be made within a month, and that the relative qualities of the muzzle-loading guns will be pronounced in it as nearly equal."

The Navy estimates for the year 1865-6 were issued on Tuesday. The net decrease, as compared with last year, is £316,427, the total amount required being £10,392,224, against £10,708,651. It should be stated, however, that the sum thus voted last year includes the votes in the supplementary estimate for increasing the full pay and for the extension of naval retirement of officers of the Navy, amounting to £61,041, and the supplementary estimate for purchase and completion by contract of the El Tousson and El Monassir, iron-clad ships, amounting to £220,000. The items of decrease are as follow:—Coastguard service, &c., £16,323; scientific branch, £1234; her Majesty's establishments at home, £159; ditto abroad, £334; wages to artificers in home establishments, £116,509; section 1 in naval stores, Storekeeper-General of the Navy, £29,528; section 2, Comptroller of the Navy, £317,512; and half-pay, &c., to officers of the Navy and Royal Marines, £5370. On the other hand, the wages to seamen and marines are increased by £15,093; victuals and clothing for ditto, £21,575; Admiralty Office, £7352; artificers abroad, £3380; new works, &c., £83,687; medicines and medical stores, £450; miscellaneous services, £1605; military pensions and allowances, £17,010; civil pensions and allowances, £14,050. The estimated amount for the coming year of extra receipts and repayments to be paid to the exchequer is £239,319, which reduces the net amount of the Navy Estimates to £10,152,905, against the net amount last year of £10,507,792. With regard to numbers, the number of officers, petty officers, and seamen to be voted for the coming year is 38,000, against 38,500 last year. There are also 7000 boys; and 7000 men in the coastguard service, against 7500 last year, making the total 52,000, against 53,000. The marines are in all 17,000—viz., 8000 for service afloat, and 9000 for service on shore, being 1000 less than in 1864-5. The civilians for the coastguard service are 750 against 950, leaving the total force in the fleet and coastguard service 69,750, against 71,950 last year.——A return has been published of the number of steam-ships afloat and building, together with the number of effective sailing-ships, on the 1st of the present month. The total of steam-ships afloat is 445—being 357 screw and 88 paddle; 26 screw-ships are building; 69 effective sailing-ships are afloat; making the total of steam and sailing ships 540. The building of three line-of-battle ships, one corvette, four gun-vessels, and four gun-boats is suspended.

The Army Estimates for the year 1865-6 were issued on Monday. They set forth a prospective diminution of charge for the coming year of £874,639. Last year the total amount voted was £14,844,088, from which a sum of £1,324,442 for extra receipts being deducted, the expenditure appeared as £13,519,646. This year the sum to be asked for amounts to £14,348,447; while the estimated amount extra receipts is £1,703,440, reducing the prospective expenditure to £12,645,007. The saving is to be made with the effective services, for which £12,241,647 will be asked, as against £12,737,931 last year. For the non-effective services £2,106,157 were voted last year; this year the sum estimated for this division is £2,106,800, a slight increase, which appears to have resulted from the greater number of reduced and retired officers and out-pensioners who have become chargeable on the lists, as well as from a small amount more than last year estimated as rewards for military service; in other categories of this class a saving is set forth—viz., pay of general officers, widows' pensions, &c., pensions to wounded officers, superannuation allowances, and disembodied militia. In the effective services there will be a decrease, for the general staff and regimental pay, of £274,416; commissariat and movement of troops, £113,247; clothing and supplies, £22,438; barrack establishment, £1265; Divine service, £1098; martial law, £14,249; medical establishment, £15,672; enrolled pensioners and army reserve, £3580; manufacturing department, £131; warlike stores, £87,519; military education, £10,383; miscellaneous services, £15,403; and administration of the Army, £10,584; while on the following there will be an increase:—disembodied militia, £2617; yeomanry, £3914; volunteers, £6640; and for superintending establishment and expenditure for works, buildings, and repairs at home and abroad, £60,530. The several sums to be asked for in both classes are as follow:—General staff and regimental pay, £5,434,567; commissariat and movement of troops, £1,205,800; clothing establishments, £574,256; barrack establishment, £609,900; Divine service, £44,335; martial law, £26,300; medical establishment, £246,544; disembodied militia, £786,400; yeomanry, £91,000; volunteers, £334,900; enrolled pensioners and Army reserve, £46,000; manufacturing departments, £972,900; warlike stores, £485,000; superintending establishment of and expenditure for works, buildings, repairs, £811,400; military education, £163,500; surveys of the United Kingdom, £88,345; miscellaneous, £107,700; administration of the Army, £212,800; rewards for military service, £26,100; pay of general officers, £74,200; reduced and retired officers, £455,000; widows' pensions, &c., £162,100; wounded officers, £28,200; in-pension, £33,200; out-pension, £1,168,000; superannuation, £131,000; and disembodied militia, £29,000. The general staff, regimental, and military educational establishments will number this year 142,477 men, as against 146,766 last year—a decrease of 4289; while the native Indian troops employed on the British establishment will be reduced from 1582 men last year to 178 men.

THE VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT.

Among the recruits who have lately joined the London Scottish as privates are the Earl of Aberdeen, the Hon. F. Charteris (son of Lord Elcho, M.P., commanding officer of the corps), and Mr. Edward Ross, late Captain in the Cambridge University Rifles.

A committee has been formed in London, consisting of officers of metropolitan volunteer corps, for promoting an Enfield all comers' rifle-match between the volunteers of Canada and of Great Britain.

The fifth competition took place on the 11th inst., at the regimental ranges, for the challenge cup presented by Mr. F. R. Jackson to the Post-office division of the Civil Service Corps. Private J. O. Beales was the winner. He won it at the first competition also.

Last Saturday a contest took place at Astley for the company challenge cup of the 1st Manchester. The companies competing were No. 3 and No. 9. The latter were again victorious, beating their opponents by thirty-seven points.

A contest took place last Saturday between No. 4 and No. 9 companies of the 3rd Manchester, on the range of the regiment at Barton Moss. No. 9 won by sixteen points.

The Manchester Guardian states that Lord Londesborough has arranged to have another gathering of the East Riding Volunteers at Londesborough Park on the 20th of July next. The invitations to the artillery and rifle corps seem general. Lord Harewood, with his regiment of yeomanry, has been invited, and are expected to be present.

The opening of a new armoury and drill-shed at Selby, constructed for the use of the 38th West York, was celebrated yesterday week with great rejoicings. In the afternoon the members of the corps and a large party of gentlemen dined in the new building. The chair was occupied by Lieutenant-Colonel Lord Londesborough. The rejoicings ended with a ball held in the armoury.

Lord Hartington, by a circular dated the 10th inst., informs commanding officers of volunteer corps that, by the order of Earl De Grey and Ripon, the new army regulations for musketry instruction are to apply to the volunteer force. By these regulations important alterations are made in the classing targets and revising, which are now nearly assimilated to the "Wimbledon" systems. There are to be outers, centres, and bull's-eyes in the first, second, and third periods instead of in the first only, as formerly; and the points are to be two, three, and four for outer, centre, and bull's-eye respectively. The third-class target is to be 4 ft. wide (the same as before); the second class, 6 ft. instead of 8 ft.; and the first-class 8 ft. instead of 12 ft. Regiments armed with the Enfield will only fire up to 800 yards, instead of to 900—the first-class ranges for this arm now being 650, 700, 750, and 800. The ranges in the other classes are unaltered. The "points" for the Enfield are—third class, 36; second class, 30; and in the first, to obtain the marksman's badge, 20. The "best shot" (badge of rifle and three stars) is the rifleman who makes most points in the second and first classes (the second and third periods) combined. The same targets are to be fired at by the regiments armed with the Whitworth, but this arm will have to fire at 900 yards, and not 750. The points to be made are—third class, 42; second, 40; and first, 32. No volunteer regiments are yet armed with the Whitworth. Officers and sergeants may shoot with long or short Enfields, but they must finish the course with whichever weapon they begin it.

The winter general meeting of the National Rifle Association is fixed to be held at Willis's Rooms, on March 4—the Duke of Cambridge, K.G., President, in the chair. The association have just issued the report for 1864, showing operations and progress for the past year. In reference to the last meeting at Wimbledon, the Council congratulates the volunteers generally on the accuracy and safety of Mr. Hill's system of marking, and dwells very strongly on the advantages which resulted to all from the establishment of the tramway, the whole cost of which, including plant, was £404; and although the line was only opened six whole days, produced receipts amounting to £44 14s. 11d. The success of the associated camp on the ground is also a subject of congratulation, and it is hoped that the present year the space of ground at disposal may admit of a large extension, although the total number of persons encamped last year amounted to 1374. On the subject of prizes, the report states that the list showed a considerable increase both in number and value as compared with that of 1863, in which year there were 333 prizes, valued at £4368; whilst in 1864 there were 627 prizes, valued at £5978, while the total value of prizes competed for at the national and county associations in connection with it reached £15,976. There is an excess of income over expenditure of the current year of £2730 10s. 6d., which, added to the surplus of £3780 9s. 8d., makes a total in favour of the association of £6511, and this exclusive of all money invested in stores, storehouses, butts, &c., and in permanent improvements of the common. The total income of the year from all sources amounts to £16,183, and the total expenditure to £13,453; whilst the previous year the income was £12,054, and expenditure £11,174. The report is altogether of a most satisfactory character, and the prospects for the present year are exceedingly hopeful and cheering.

The crew of the Confederate cruiser Florida, captured at Bahia by the war-steamer Wachusett, were released from Fort Warren, in Boston Harbour, on the 3rd inst., and placed on board the steamer Canada, from which they were duly landed at Liverpool.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

WHITE KNIGHT.—The first game is vitiated in the beginning by one party losing a piece, and both are below the ordinary mark of correspondence games.

WESTON.—It shall be examined, and reported on shortly.

W. BOSHING.—The defence in question is no novelty. It has been often adopted of late years, and by one player especially, with eminent success.

MATEO DE ZAMORA.—Perfectly correct, as you will by this time have found from the published solution.

C. H. TAYLOR.—A king must not, under any circumstances, be moved into check.

L. H. L.—It shall have due attention.

F. R. B.—The solutions—at least, those which we can conveniently spare room for—shall be given next week.

G. H., Amersham.—1. Drawn games do not count in a match, unless by special agreement. 2. Assuredly. 3. If he has not ceased to hold the piece he can play it elsewhere.

The following Games were played between Mr. THOROLD and Dr. WILSON, two highly-proficient English amateurs (Allgaier Gambit):—

WHITE (Dr. W.)	BLACK (Mr. T.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P
3. Kt to K B 3rd	P to K Kt 4th
4. P to K R 4th	P to K Kt 5th
5. Kt to K 5th	Kt to K B 3rd

(Opinions are now divided on the superiority of this or the ingenious defence suggested by Mr. Paulsen—5. B. to K Kt 2nd. We are disposed to prefer the move in the text. It appears to us quite as safe as the other, and it certainly leads to a more spirited game.)

WHITE (Dr. W.)	BLACK (Mr. T.)
6. B to Q B 4th	P to Q 4th
7. P takes P	B to Q 3rd
8. P to Q 4th	Kt to K R 4th
9. Kt to Q B 3rd	B to K B 4th
10. Kt to K 2nd	P to K B 3rd
11. Q Kt takes K B P	Kt takes Kt
12. B takes Kt	P takes Kt
13. P takes P	B to Q B 4th
14. P to Q 6th	Kt to Q B 3rd

(Q to Q 2nd would, perhaps, have given Black a better chance of extricating himself, but in any case his position must be a difficult one.)

WHITE (Dr. W.)	BLACK (Mr. T.)
15. Q to Q 5th	Q to Q 2nd
16. Q takes B	P takes P
17. P takes P	Castles on Q's side
18. Castles on Q's side	K to Kt sq
19. K R to K sq	K to R sq
20. B to Q Kt 5th	R to Q B sq
21. R to Q 5th	K R to K sq
22. R to K 7th	R takes R
23. P takes R	Q takes P
24. B takes Kt	Q takes Q
25. R takes Q	B to Q 2nd
26. B takes B	R takes R
27. B takes K Kt P	R to Q B 5th
28. P to K Kt 3rd

and White won the game.

(Allgaier Gambit.)

BLACK (Mr. T.)	WHITE (Dr. W.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P
3. Kt to K B 3rd	P to K Kt 4th
4. P to K R 4th	P to K Kt 5th
5. Kt to K 5th	P to K R 4th
6. B to Q B 4th	R to K R 2nd
7. B takes P (ch)	R takes B
8. Kt takes R	K takes Kt
9. P to Q 4th	B to K R 3rd
10. B takes P	B takes B
11. Castles	Q takes K R P
12. R takes B (ch)

(The bookish reader will call to mind a brilliant game at this opening between Mr. Cochrane and Captain Evans, wherein the moves thus far are the same as in this partie.)

BLACK (Mr. T.)	WHITE (Dr. W.)
12.	K to Kt 2nd
13. Kt to Q B 3rd	P to Q B 3rd
14. P to Q 5th

(Well played. Threatening to win a piece.)

BLACK (Mr. T.)	WHITE (Dr. W.)
14.	P to Q B 4th
15. P to Q 6th

BLACK (Mr. T.)	WHITE (Dr. W.)
15.	Kt to Q B 3rd
16. Q to Q 5th	Kt to K B 3rd
17. Q takes Q B P	Kt to Q sq
18. P to K 5th	Kt to K R 2nd
19. Q R to K B sq	Kt to K 3rd
20. R to K B 7th (ch)	K to Kt sq
21. Q to K 3rd

(This was impolitic. He should have played the Queen to Q B 4th, and then he would have been completely master of the situation.)

BLACK (Mr. T.)	WHITE (Dr. W.)
21.	P to K Kt 6th

(The advance of this Pawn ought to have been jealously guarded against. It puts Black at once upon his defence.)

BLACK (Mr. T.)	WHITE (Dr. W.)
22. Q R to K B 3rd	K Kt to Kt 4th
23. Q to Q 3rd	Kt takes R (ch)
24. R takes Kt	Q to Q 5th (ch)
25. Q takes Q	Kt takes Q
26. R takes P (ch)	K to B 2nd
27. R to K Kt 5th	P to Q Kt 3rd
28. Kt to Q 5th	B to Q Kt 2nd
29. Kt to Q B 7th	R to K Kt sq
30. P to K 6th (ch)	P takes P
31. R takes R	K takes R
32. P to Q 7th	Kt to Q B 3rd
33. Kt takes P	B to Q R 3rd
34. P "Queens" (ch)	Kt takes Q
35. Kt takes Kt and the game was resigned as a drawn fight.

An American journal states that one of the most wonderful migrations known to history has been going on silently, while all Christendom has been looking only at the prosecution of the greatest war known to history. Colorado, Arizona, and Idaho have received more of this internal migration than Nevada, which owes its earlier admission into the Union to its being older by two or three years. In the summer an almost continuous line of colonists' waggons extended from the Missouri River to Fort Laramie. At one crossing 4000 teams and 6000 tons of freight were passed in six weeks. At another, 1000 teams were at one time waiting their turn at the ferry, the line extending back into the country two or three miles. Nevada is, par éminence, the silver territory, yielding already from fifteen to eighteen millions per annum. The precious ore is cast into the shape of "bricks," worth something over 1000 dollars each.

SCIENTIFIC NEWS.

During March Venus (in Pisces and Aries) will be an evening star. Mercury (in Aquarius and Pisces) will be a morning star at the beginning of the month, invisible till the 19th, and then an evening star till the end. On the 15th Mars (in Taurus and Gemini) passes the meridian at 5h. 53m. p.m.; Saturn (in Virgo) passes the meridian at 2h. 22m. a.m.; and Jupiter (in Scorpio) rises at 2h. 22m. a.m. The Moon's changes are:—First quarter, March 4, at 0h. 19m. p.m.; Full Moon, March 12, at 10h. 42m. a.m.; last quarter, March 20, at 0h. 36m. p.m.; New Moon, March 27, at 5h. 28m. a.m. The constellation Ursa Major and part of Leo will be on the meridian about midnight in the middle of the month.

At a recent meeting of the Geological Society a paper, by Mr. E. Ray Lankester, was read on the sources of the mammalian fossils of the Red Crag, and on the discovery of a new mammal, allied to the walrus, in that deposit. Mr. Lankester gave reasons which render it probable that these various mammalia were not indigenous to the Red Crag, but were derived from the breaking up of earlier strata. He described the tusks of the animal allied to the walrus, but probably much larger, which he proposed to call Trichecodon Huxleyi. At the same meeting Professor John Phillips, F.R.S., communicated a note on the geology of Harrogate, illustrated by diagrams, showing the strata exposed in consequence of the cuttings made for the North-Eastern Railway, which have enabled him to trace the range of the millstone grit and other strata; and which have thrown light on the relation of the Permian to more ancient rocks, and on the source of the mineral springs.

A new saccharometer (an apparatus for determining the quantity of sugar in any substance by means of polarised light) has been described by M. Wild. It is said by good authorities to be much more delicate than Soleil's, the instrument in general use. In Wild's apparatus the incident light is polarised by means of Foucault's calc spar prism, which is capable of being turned round its axis, the amount of rotation being measured by means of a vernier applied to a small graduated circle. Professor Wolcot Gibbs considers the new instrument to be a most acceptable addition to physical cabinets.

Mr. Harvey B. Hull's elaborate paper on the geological structure of the Malvern Hills, accompanied by illustrative diagrams, appears in the new number of the Journal of the Geological Society. He discusses the origin and structure of the crystalline rocks, gives the result of an examination of the superimposed palæozoic strata immediately adjacent, and endeavours to show the chronological relationship of the several events in their geological history. In conclusion, he expresses his opinion that these hills are of extreme antiquity; that they are of metamorphic origin, and belong to the pre-Cambrian, azoic, or Laurentian age, and may have "stood up as an island in the primordial sea, while, as it subsided, Cambrian and Cambro-silurian strata were accumulated around it."

As some of our readers may desire to repeat the remarkable electrical experiment of Franklin, bearing on the myth of Mahomet's coffin hovering between heaven and earth, and lately performed by Professor Tyndall in one of his lectures "On Electricity," at the Royal Institution, we give the points of a description which Mr. W. F. Barrett, the professor's assistant, has inserted in the Reader. A piece of gold leaf, 2½ in. long and 1¼ in. wide, was cut into the form of a kite or fish, placed on a piece of paper, and presented to the knob of a large Leyden jar charged with electricity. When detached by a knife the leaf sprang towards the knob, but stopped within two inches and remained hovering in the air, the tail waving like that of a fish. When the jar was moved the gold leaf followed, and continued to float for nearly an hour. The experiment may be made with a smaller jar and smaller pieces of gold leaf.

At a recent meeting of the Academy of Sciences at Paris, M. Edmond Becquerel read a note on his new thermo-electric pile, formed with metallic sulphurets, and at the same time presented some Bunsen couples constructed by M. Ruhmkorff, formed of plates of sulphuret of copper. MM. Bunsen and Becquerel appear to have prosecuted their researches simultaneously, and the former may lose some of the credit due to him. M. Becquerel states that by his arrangement he obtained an electric current sensibly constant, presenting an electro-motive force nearly equal to that of a Daniell's element of sulphate of copper. At the same meeting a note by M. Ch. Tellier was read setting forth the industrial advantages which would accrue by the application of gaseous ammonia in the production of a vacuum. We have no space for his process. M. Guérin-Méneville presented a specimen of new silk, obtained from the Faidherbia bauhiniæ of Senegal. The silk is brilliant and very solid, but coarse in the threads. M. Charles Ste-Claire Deville communicated a letter from M. Longobardo, Consul at Catania, describing the eruption on Feb. 1 at Mount Etna, which had remained calm since August, 1852. He recommended that means should be taken for studying the phenomena at this favourable opportunity. The noise is compared to cannonading. On Feb. 2 there were two torrents of red-hot lava, the largest 15 metres high and between 250 and 300 wide.

Dr. A. T. Machattie's paper "On the Chemical Composition and Calorific Value of Fuel," for which he received the silver medal of the Royal Scottish Society of Arts, is printed in the new part of the Society's Transactions. It contains a summary of experiments, with tabulated results. The fuels examined were dried wood and peat, coal, charcoal, and coke. The elements of these fuels in producing heat are carbon, oxygen, hydrogen, and a little sulphur. The useless and injurious elements are nitrogen and mineral ash. By means of a calorimeter, Dr. Machattie ascertained the relative powers of the combustible elements, and has printed in a tabulated form the units of heat each can produce and the quantity of water which one pound of each can convert into steam from the temperatures of 32 deg. and 60 deg. Fahrenheit. He finds that the calorific value of all kinds of fuel is not the same, either in regard to the quantity or intensity of heat produced; and that we must therefore consider them in regard to their steam-raising and thermal or pyrometric effects. In our furnaces a loss of heat is sustained by the latent heat of water vapour when fuel is damp, by the latent heat of the water vapour when the fuel contains hydrogen, and by permitting the gases produced during combustion to escape by the chimney at a high temperature. Carbon is decidedly the best substance for fuel, and the nearer our fuels approach pure carbon the better they are. It requires so little oxygen for combustion, and therefore produces so little carbonic acid, and does not involve a large quantity of nitrogen from the air.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

Professor Tyndall began his ninth lecture on electricity on Tuesday last with the exhibition of an ingenious apparatus for lighting gas, being an application of the principle of the electrophorus which had been sent to Professor Faraday by Mr. Baker, of Philadelphia. He then proceeded to the main subject of his lecture, the remarkable phenomena of electric and magnetic induced currents, discovered and studied by Professor Faraday within the walls of the institution. Professor Tyndall showed by experiment that the currents of the voltaic battery which flow in the same direction attract each other, and that those which flow in an opposite direction repel each other; and that when a current begins to flow it excites in an adjacent conductor a current having an opposite direction, but when the current is interrupted it excites a current similar to its own. These induced currents are of momentary duration. It was also shown that when a wire carrying a current was caused to approach a second wire with its ends united, a current was excited in the latter opposed to the exciting current; and when a wire carrying a current was withdrawn from a second wire with its ends united, another current was excited having the same direction as the exciting current. It was furthermore shown that the approach and withdrawal of the poles of a magnet from a closed conductor produced similar effects. Professor Tyndall stated that every change of magnetism within a wire helix produced a current in the latter; and he defined a magnetic line of force as that along which the single pole of a magnet tends to move, and as also that along which the two poles of a magnet are pulled in opposite directions, therefore as that line along which a magnetic needle will set itself. He stated, also, that when a closed conductor is caused to cut the lines of magnetic force, whether of an artificial or a natural magnet, or of the earth itself, considered as a magnet, currents of electricity are always produced. The phenomena of induced currents were exhibited by means of various coils, especially by a large induction constructed by Ruhmkorff; and a machine for the medical application of induced currents (termed abroad "faradisation") was also shown in action. The gas sunlights of the lecture were lit by means of apparatus, employing the spark from the induction coil. The lecture was concluded with the brilliant exhibition of the induction spark in exhausted glass tubes and bulbs—those of uranium glass exhibiting phosphorescence and fluorescence.

On Tuesday next Dr. A. W. Hofmann will commence a course of six lectures, being an introduction to the study of chemistry. On Friday next the evening discourse will be given by Mr. James Fergusson, F.R.S., "On the Temple and Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem." Professor Tyndall's concluding lectures on electricity will be given on Mondays, Feb. 27 and March 6.

The cabs of Paris are about to be fitted with machines for marking the distance travelled over.

We learn from a minute of Sir Robert Montgomery that tea-planting is making great progress in the Western Himalayas. Four years ago not an acre was under tea cultivation there, except in three experimental State gardens. Now there are upwards of fifteen square miles covered by seventeen great tea estates, belonging to Englishmen.

An official copy of the resolutions relating to the proposed British North American Confederation agreed to by the Quebec Conference has been forwarded to the Colonial Office, and laid before both Houses of Parliament. A few verbal alterations seem to have been made on a final revision; and the 43rd resolution, which, as first published, gave the local Legislatures power to make laws on certain specified subjects, "and generally on all matters of a private and local nature," has now added to it the words—"not assigned to the General Parliament." An additional resolution appears at the end—"That her Majesty the Queen be solicited to determine the rank and name of the federated provinces."

5. RIVER SPRITE.—MORI.

Specially prepared Lists of Vocal and Instrumental Music on application. All New Music sent at Half-price.

CRAMER and Co. (Limited), 201, Regent-street.

For the Pianoforte Department, see other advertisements.

CRAMER and CO. (Limited) LET on HIRE the following PIANOFORTES for three years, after which, and without any further payment whatever, the instrument becomes the property of the hirer:—
28-guinea Pianette, in rosewood or walnut. 10 guineas per annum.
40-guinea Drawing-room Model Cottage, rosewood or walnut 15 guineas per annum.
60-guinea Semi-oblique, rosewood or walnut 20 guineas per annum.
Every instrument is warranted of the very best manufacture, inferior Pianofortes being entirely excluded from the stock.
Quarterly payments are required.

PIANOFORTE GALLERY (the Largest in Europe), 207 and 209, Regent-street, W.

CRAMER and CO. (Limited) Let on Hire the following Harmoniums for three years, after which, and without any further payment whatever, the instrument becomes the property of the hirer:—

24-guinea, 7-stop, in oak, rosewood, or walnut	2 guineas per quarter.
36-guinea, 11-stop, oak, rosewood, or walnut	3 guineas per quarter.
48-guinea, 13-stop, oak, rosewood, or walnut	4 guineas per quarter.
60-guinea, 19-stop, oak, rosewood, or walnut	5 guineas per quarter.

Every instrument is warranted, by Debain, of Paris, and of the very best manufacture.

HARMONIUM GALLERY, 201, Regent-street, W.

CRAMER'S ENGLISH PIANETTE. 22 guineas. Cramer and Co. manufacture this capital small instrument. It has all the requisites of the best Pianoforte—check action, solid touch, agreeable tone. The case is of polished ash or pine. In practising on this Pianoforte the fingers of the player will be strengthened much more rapidly than on an old instrument loose in the key and worn in the hammer. In rosewood or walnut, 26 and 28 guineas.
Purchasers are particularly requested to observe that this instrument has not the common or single action, but the double or check action; and that Cramer and Co. were the original manufacturers.

BROADWOOD'S NEW DRAWING-ROOM GRAND, price 135 guineas in Rosewood, and 165 guineas in Walnut.—CRAMER and CO. (Limited) beg to direct attention to these extremely elegant and greatly admired new Pianofortes. Cramer and Co. have selected the very finest specimens, and they will be found to fulfil all the requirements of the most fastidious performer. The prices the same as those charged by the manufacturers themselves—the public having the advantage of the very choicest instruments. These Pianofortes may be had on Cramer and Co.'s system of hire, which after three years gives the instrument to the hirer without further payment.—Pianoforte Gallery (the largest in Europe), 207 and 209, Regent-street.

COLLARD'S NEW SEMI-GRAND, price 110 guineas.—CRAMER and CO. exhibit the largest selection to be seen in London. Pianoforte Gallery (the largest in Europe), 207 and 209, Regent-street.

COLLARD'S NEW BOUDOIR GRAND, price 135 guineas in Rosewood, and 150 guineas in Walnut.—CRAMER and CO. have now in their Gallery a large number of these very powerful and remarkably effective Pianofortes. The cases are of walnut and rosewood, and very elegant. The tone and touch are everything that can be wished for. These Pianofortes may be had on Cramer and Co.'s system of hire, which after three years gives the instrument to the hirer without further payment. Pianoforte Gallery (the largest in Europe), 207 and 209, Regent-street.

ERARD'S NEW BOUDOIR GRANDS, in Rosewood, 135 guineas; in Walnut, 155 guineas.—CRAMER and CO. have selected from the manufactories of these celebrated makers the most perfect instruments, both as regards tone and touch, that have yet been produced. They are very greatly in advance of the older class of instruments, and come very near the power and fulness of the largest grand. These Pianofortes may be had on Cramer and Co.'s system of hire, which after three years gives the instrument to the hirer without further payment.—Pianoforte Gallery (the largest in Europe), 207 and 209, Regent-street.

CRAMER and CO. LET on HIRE new COTTAGE PIANOFORTES, by Broadwood, Collard, and Erard, at from 20 to 25 guineas per annum, and at the end of three years the instrument becomes the property of the hirer without further payment. Hire paid quarterly.—Pianoforte Gallery (the largest in Europe), 207 and 209, Regent-street.

CRAMER and CO. (in answer to numerous inquiries) beg to intimate that they extend their system of three year's hire to all parts of the United Kingdom, satisfactory references and a quarter's hire in advance being the only indispensable preliminaries.—Pianoforte Gallery (the largest in Europe), 207 and 209, Regent-street.

INDIAN PIANOFORTES.—CRAMER and CO. (Limited) manufacture for India a superior COTTAGE PIANOFORTE, in solid mahogany, with metallic bracings, and all other appliances necessary to resist the effect of extreme climates. Unusual skill and attention are bestowed upon the manufacture of these instruments, which, for their excellent quality of tone and durability, have obtained the highest commendation. Cramer and Co. deliver these instruments, f. o. b., packed in cases lined with zinc, at any home port, for 50 guineas. Size:—Height, 3 ft. 11½ in. width, 4 ft. 4½ in.; depth, 2 ft. 1½ in.
Pianoforte Gallery, 207 and 209, Regent-street, London.

MAGIC LANTERNS and DISSOLVING VIEWS. The £5 Set of Magic, Microscopic, and Phanta Apparatus comprises a 3½ in. improved Achromatic Lantern, producing 12 ft. figures; a microscope, throwing upon a screen animalculæ; ten slides, containing forty subjects; eight movable comic slides; one panorama, with shipping in motion; one photograph; and one chromotrope, with view and revolving watermill. S. and B. SOLOMONS, Opticians, 39, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly.

THE PLANET JUPITER, when magnified 250 times with the new £5 TELESCOPE, appears seven times as large as the moon is to the naked eye; and the other planetary bodies proportionately. It will also distinguish the face of a sheep and features of a man four miles, shot marks upon a target two miles, and time by a church clock ten miles. This instrument is guaranteed, in writing, to perform the whole of the above, and to be equal in the most important respects to telescopes costing £70. It has a 3-in. superior achromatic object-glass, two eyepieces, &c., with portable metal tripod stand with jointed claw feet. Persons are invited to apply for a diagram, with other particulars, and eight sheets of testimonials from scientific and other gentlemen, including Lord Rosse. Sent free by book post.—S. and B. SOLOMONS, 39, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly. Powerful small pocket Telescopes, opera, race, field, and general outdoor glasses.

A NEW High-power BINOCULAR GLASS, the cheapest, lightest, most powerful, and portable ever produced. Weighs three ounces, and occupies less room than a card-case. Price 21s., sent post-free. This glass is especially arranged for the combined purposes of the opera, race, and general outdoor use.—S. and B. SOLOMONS, Opticians, 39, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly.

THE MESSRS. SOLOMONS' NEWLY-INVENTED TINTED SPECTACLES are patronised by the majority of the nobility, including Viscount Palmerston. They give by day and night extraordinary relief to weak, dim, and defective vision.—39, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly.

DEAFNESS.—The SOUND MAGNIFIER and INVISIBLE VOICE CONDUCTOR, for Deafness. It fits into the ear not perceptible, removes singing noises in the head, and enables deaf persons to hear distinctly at church and at public assemblies.—S. and B. SOLOMONS, 39, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly.

THE PRETTIEST GIFT FOR A LADY is one of JONES'S LEVER WATCHES, at £11 11s.; for a Gentleman, at £10 10s. Rewarded at the Exhibition for cheapness of production. Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House.

WATCHES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, WATCHMAKERS, 11 and 12, Cornhill, London (opposite the Bank). First-class Patent Detached Lever Watches, with the latest improvements and maintaining power to continue going whilst being wound, recommended for accuracy and durability.

BREAKFAST BEVERAGE.—Homœopathic practitioners, and the medical profession generally, recommend COCOA as being the most healthful of all beverages. When the doctrine of homœopathy was first introduced into this country there were to be obtained no preparations of cocoa either attractive to the taste or acceptable to the stomach; the nut was either supplied in the crude state or so unskilfully manufactured as to obtain little notice. J. EPPS, of London, homœopathic chemist, was induced, in the year 1839, to turn his attention to this subject, and at length succeeded, with the assistance of elaborate machinery, in being the first to produce an article pure in its composition, and so refined by the perfect trituration it receives in the process it passes through as to be most acceptable to the delicate stomach. For general use Epps's cocoa is distinguished as an invigorating, grateful breakfast beverage, with delicious aroma. Dr. Hassall, in his work, "Food and its Adulterations," says:—"Cocoa contains a great variety of important nutritive principles; every ingredient necessary to the growth and sustenance of the body." Again, "As a nutritive, cocoa stands very much higher than either coffee or tea." Directions:—Two tablespoonfuls of the powder in a breakfast cup filled with boiling water or milk. Tin-lined ¼ lb., ½ lb., and 1 lb. labelled packets. Sold by grocers, confectioners, and chemists. Each packet is labelled "J. Epps, Homœopathic Chemist, 112, Great Russell-street, 170, Piccadilly; 48, Threadneedle-street; Manufactory, 398, Euston-road, London."

FRY'S CHOCOLATE FOR EATING, in Sticks and Drops, &c.
The increasing popularity of J. S. Fry and Sons' Chocolate is the best proof of its superiority over other kinds of sweetmeats.
Few articles of confectionery embrace so many advantages. It is very delicious and sustaining, and is thus peculiarly adapted for persons who require light refreshment in a portable and convenient form.

Sold by Grocers, Confectioners, and Druggists.
FRY'S CHOCOLATE CREAMS,
an exceedingly delicious Sweetmeat, rapidly increasing in public favour.

Made by J. S. FRY and SONS, Bristol and London.
FRY'S HOMŒOPATHIC COCOA,
in Packets, secured in tinfoil.
The purity, delicacy of flavour, and nutritious properties of this Cocoa, as well as the great facility with which it is made, have rendered it a standard article of General Consumption.
It is equally adapted for Invalids and others, and is highly approved and strongly recommended by Medical Men.

OSWEGO
for Puddings, Custards, Blancmanges, &c.,
Manufactured and Perfected by
T. KINGSFORD and SON,
of Oswego, State of New York.
It is the original preparation from the farina of maize, established 1848, commands the highest price from the trade, and offers the best value to the consumer.
It is stronger than any of the imitations, has a finer grain, and is more delicate.
The Oswego has the natural golden tinge, and not the chalk white produced by artificial process.

LETTERS PATENT, 1823. PRIZE MEDAL, 1862.
ROBINSON'S PATENT GROATS is the most valuable preparation for making pure and delicate gruel. Modern chemistry has shown that this food is easy of digestion and rich in nutriment.
ROBINSON'S PATENT BARLEY makes a delicious custard-pudding, directions for which have been given by Mons. C. E. Francatelli. It is appreciated as a non-inflammatory drink, is excellent for mothers nursing, and has long been used with great success for rearing children by hand.
KEEN, ROBINSON, BELLVILLE, and CO., London.

KEEN'S GENUINE MUSTARD.
First Manufactured A.D. 1742,
ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY YEARS.
This well-known brand of Mustard has been sold by the trade of Great Britain for more than a century, and is held in high estimation for its purity and pungency of flavour. The qualities that are recommended for family use are the Double Superfine and the Genuine, both of which can be obtained from most Family Grocers, in canisters of 1 lb. and ½ lb. each.
KEEN, ROBINSON, BELLVILLE, and CO., London.

PURITY AND EXCELLENCE OF QUALITY.
COLMANS' PRIZE-MEDAL MUSTARD bears their trade mark, the Bull's Head, on each package.
It is the only Mustard which obtained a Prize Medal at the Great Exhibition, 1862.
For domestic purposes nothing finer can be produced. Their "genuine" and "double superfine" are the qualities particularly recommended.
Retailed in every town throughout the United Kingdom.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 1304.—VOL. XLVI. SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1865. WITH A SUPPLEMENT, FIVEPENCE

THE CONDITION-OF-IRELAND QUESTION.

We are not amongst those who complain that the state of Ireland has obtained priority of attention from the House of Commons in this the last Session of the present Parliament. The subject is, perhaps, of all others likely to be brought under their notice, the most important, the most urgent, and the most intimately connected with the future destinies of the empire. It is not, at any rate in its present stage, a local question, and it ought not to be treated as if it were. It had its origin in Imperial causes, it affects in its progress Imperial life and vigour, it can only be closed by Imperial legislation. Let those in whose minds an Irish debate invariably excites a feeling of impatience reflect whether a land, from which the inhabitants are escaping in a continuous stream of emigration, carrying with them to their future country the bitterest enmity to England, in which population is rapidly decreasing, and of which that portion of it which remains at home is deeply tainted with a spirit of disaffection, does not present a problem worthy of the highest statesmanship to entertain with seriousness, to examine with care, and, if possible, to solve with advantage to all parties. It is worse than useless, it is unmanly, to shrink from an onerous obligation on account of the acknowledged difficulties it may impose. The truth is apparent to all the world that we reign in Ireland but do not govern it. Why is that? Is it or is it not capable of being governed? If not, why not? If it be, what can better become or better employ Parliament than a resolute effort to find out the way to do it, and to provide that it shall be done!

It is impossible to believe that the case of Ireland results entirely from natural causes, or causes altogether outside of the sphere of legislation and political government. Her geographical conformation, her climate, her race, her religion, have been successively referred to by those who would shift responsibility from their own shoulders as accounting for her depressed condition; but each of them, when brought to the test of parallel facts gathered elsewhere, signally fails to prove the conclusion for which it was adduced. It is quite as impossible to beget by any common-sense line of argument the conviction that Ireland's grievances are chiefly those of her own imagination, and that in spite of her own apprehensions she is doing well. The people of a thriving country do not ordinarily run away from it, nor do two or three bad seasons usually convert distressed yeomen and labourers into angry exiles. Let it be admitted that there are in Ireland a few more cattle, sheep, and pigs, and a few more acres of land under tillage for flax, than there were two years ago; yet, if the human inhabitants are utterly despondent, one can hardly avoid the inference that something must be seriously amiss. After all, the evidence of good government must be sought in the temper of the people. If five and a half millions of inhabitants (not many years back upwards of eight millions) can be divided into two classes—those who are going to quit the land of their birth and their ancestry, and those who would go if they could—some other than natural causes, which are permanent, must be assigned for the fact. Such general disaffection to England could hardly have gained head if the distress of Ireland were due mainly to the dispensations of Divine Providence, and not to misgovernment. It is better that we should open our eyes to actual facts. The troubles of Ireland are the legacy of our forefathers. They nipped off the germs of Irish prosperity, and we inherit the consequences of their crime. It is not this Government, it is not the last, it is not any Government of the present generation that can be justly accused of treating the sister isle with deliberate injustice. All has been done for her, perhaps, that would have been done, if needed, for Scotland or England. All has been done for her that her case would have required if her condition had been normal and not previously damaged by a long course of virulent impolicy. It is the past which is the real obstacle to the present. Mischief has been done which we cannot speedily repair. Our will may be good, but our power has been fettered. The policy inflicted on Ireland by unjust British legislation cannot suddenly cure. This is one reason for our want of success.

But this is also a reason for approaching the Condition-of-Ireland question with a good deal of patience and with discriminative indulgence. He who, by a long course of inexcusable oppression, has seriously impaired the vital stamina of a dependent relative, has put himself under obligation to do something more than desist from the oppression which has grown to be ashamed of it. He is bound to treat with forbearance the infirmities which he has largely contributed to develop, if not to originate; and he has no right to anticipate, much less to demand, that the evil consequences of his own misdoings upon the character and habits of the person he has maltreated should cease to show themselves from the moment that he ceases to perpetrate injustice. The policy of England towards Ireland for the last thirty years may be fairly characterized, as we believe it has, by a sincere desire to extricate her from the slough of misery into which the policy of the forty-preceding years and fifty years before had driven her. It takes longer than was expected to set her on her feet again, and reassure her, and inspire her with a spirit of trust, hopefulness, and self-reliance. England will scarcely be justified in abandoning the effort in disgust, or in punishing the victim of her own rapacious, vindictive, and intolerant rule upon the inevitable arrangements of an all-wise Providence. No doubt there are natural and irremovable causes to which the comparative depression of Ireland may be due; but the disposition of her people to succumb to those causes, instead of cheerfully and manfully battling with them, has been superinduced by a long course of ill-treatment.

These considerations have not always pressed with all their legitimate weight upon the mind of the Imperial Legislature. Whilst there has been an honest intention of dealing with Ireland as equally entitled with Scotland and England to rightful and liberal legislation, the fact has been that, down until the trust of Ireland has been won, even sound laws will be of little avail to her. Her exceptional state requires to be exceptionally met. Not, indeed, that she should be indulged by the concession of privileges which, granted immediately grateful, would but increase her weakness and sense of dependence: but that, by the patient attention with which her cases are considered to, the painstaking inquiries by which they are followed, the sincere sympathy displayed towards her in regard to disadvantages which no human laws can remove, the occasional relaxation in the belief of rules which it is the wisdom to uphold in the sister kingdoms, and, above all, a general demeanour indicative of readiness to repair by personal kindliness the evils consequent upon past misdoing, Parliament should evince a disposition calculated to impress the mind with the belief that she has her proper place in England's heart.

We are not without hope that the recent debate will conduct towards this desirable end. It was certainly pervaded by a tone of candour and moderation calculated to win for it the admirable speech of Lord Palmerston, with which it was wound up—admirable alike for its spirit and for its practical wisdom—cannot fail, we should imagine, to soothe in some degree the irritability of a sensitive and suffering people. The rejection of a Select Committee, if impartially conducted, may issue in such a statement of the whole case as will satisfy Ireland that her condition is fully known, and may point to such practical measures as will prove to her that she has a bright future in store. But no delaies, no inquiries, no suggestions will be of permanent use, unless the personal sentiment of the Irish people be generously recognised and treated with respect. If, for good or woe, Ireland is to be one of the family which we call the United Kingdom, everything which marks her position as inferior must be rooted out of the way: to be one and not two, or no brilliant, she may, nevertheless, feel that her rights are as sacred, and as sacredly deferred to, as those of the sister kingdoms with which she is associated.

The Queen has approved of Mr. J. C. Prost as Consul-General in New South Wales for his Majesty the King of the Netherlands.

The ducal palace at Brunswick caught fire on Thursday se'nnight, and was almost entirely burnt down.

The Queen-Mother of the Netherlands died at the Hague on Wednesday. All the members of the Royal family were with his Majesty's brother when she died.

The Indo-European Telegraph was opened throughout on Tuesday, and on Wednesday morning a telegram was received in London from Kurrachee announcing the fact—the distance of the transmission being less than nine hours. Sir Charles Bright, announcing the receipt of the telegram, states:—"The service on the line between Kurrachee and Fao, at the head of the Persian Gulf and Kurrachee, is performed by the best English signallers, and is excellent: but the delays and difficulties caused by the administration of the Turkish line can be so organised as to render the communication equally reliable."

The Government emigrant-ship Tarquin, which sailed from Plymouth on Aug. 29 last, and the Bucklers Hard, which sailed and arrived in Adelaide, South Australia, the former on Dec. 3, with 277 emigrants, and the latter on Dec. 20, with 299 emigrants. Two births and two deaths took place in the Tarquin, and two births and one death in the Bucklers Hard. The Tarquin, which left the Mersey on Aug. 28, arrived at Sydney, New South Wales, on Nov. 29, with 284 emigrants. No casualty occurred on board.—The Hastings, with 350 emigrants, sailed from Aug. 30, arrived at Fremantle, Western Australia, on Dec. 17, with 41 emigrants, no death having occurred on the voyage.—The ship Sunda, 1361 tons burden, belonging to Messrs. T. M. Huskey and Co., sailed on the 8th ult. from Gravesend, and 26th from Queenstown, for Queensland; Captain Flynn, commander; Surgeon-Superintendent Dr. Paynter, assisted by Mrs. Mercer, matron. The Sunda is the fifty-first vessel that has sailed on the land-order system of emigration, under the immediate direction of the Queensland Government. She contains 366 souls, divided into paying, assisted, and free passengers, and consisting of 177 members of families, 160 single men, and 189 single females.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

The Moniteur, in its evening edition of Saturday last, published the preface to the Emperor's "History of Julius Cæsar." A translation of the preface is given on page 219. A paragraph in Wednesday's Moniteur announces that the "History" will be published in the early next week. Presentation copies have, however, been sent by the Emperor to the Empress, the Prince Imperial, the Ministers and members of the Privy Council, and, it is stated, to MM. Thiers and Lamartine. On the copy given to the Prince Imperial is written the inscription:—"A mon fils, témoignage de ma vive tendresse.—NAPOLEON. From the special copies thus distributed several have been found their way into print. The copyright in the Russian edition of the "History" has been purchased by M. Theo Cr. Chin. The translation is intrusted to M. Starewitch, a professor of the University of St. Petersburg.

The business of the Chambers has been as yet only of a formal nature. The committees appointed to examine the projects are drawing up the forms of the addresses.

The Emperor received in state, in hall at his Roman House, Avenue Montaigne, to the Imperial family and his immediate friends. Invitations are issued for Thursday next, the 2nd inst., to meet M. Ollivier.

The Museum of the Louvre has purchased for 150,000f. payable in six years, the collection of Gallic coins formed by M. de Saulcy, senator. The collection, which was acquired from M. de Lagoy, Consul in Egypt, various Egyptian and Babylonian pieces, for 24,000f., payable in three years.

The total amount for which the Great and Etruscan vases of the Prince's Collection have been sold is 82,200f.

The Academy have elected Count Gladstone a member, in the place of the late Mr. M'Culloch.

The proprietors of the Bœuf Gras, in Paris, began on Sunday, according to time-honoured custom, and, as the weather was dry and mild, enjoyed a most successful procession of their ox.

The large rollers drawn by horses, with which road-metal is smoothed down, are now being superseded by others to be impelled by steam-rollers.

Official dispatches received at Paris from Mexico announce that General Bazaine has completed the investment of Ojuca. It is expected that the army of Puebla will not be able to escape.

SPAIN.

Yesterday week, Senor Alejandro Castro, the new Minister of Finance, introduced a bill authorising the issue of bonds to the amount of 300,000,000 of reals, secured on the Customs.

Marshal Narvaez declared on Saturday in the Congress that the country was in a state of tranquillity. He would not consider it confirmed when the present Ministry assumed office. He added that it was necessary to put down the Carlist bands found there in every country. The address to the Queen was then passed by 161 against eighty-four votes.

The relinquishment of the Royal property by the Queen has excited considerable enthusiasm in the Kingdom.

PORTUGAL.

The Duke de Loulé and the other Ministers have resigned, and the Marquis de Sa Bandiera has been charged by the King with the formation of a new Cabinet.

ITALY.

King Victor Emmanuel arrived at Turin on Thursday week. He was received by the municipal body and by deputations from the working classes. There was a grand display of popular enthusiasm. During the day the King received the National Guard, by whom he was escorted to the Royal Palace. His Majesty has signed an amnesty for all persons implicated in the recent riots. On Sunday he appeared in the Queen, and was enthusiastically received. In short, the reconciliation between the King and the city would seem to be complete. A short time before it was thought, the opposite to be complete. On Wednesday the King arrived at Florence, and was met by the civic authorities and the artisan societies. The National Guard paraded. The streets were illuminated, and everywhere the greatest crowd assembled.

Royal decrees have been issued ordering the canonisation of Germain Cousin, of Solesa, and Peter Arbries, of Saragossa, martyred in 1485. The Pope has also issued a decree that parish priests in Rome on the principal duties of ecclesiastics in the present time.

AUSTRIA.

The Minister of State has addressed a letter to the Financial Committee of the Lower House stating that no representative of the Government will be present at the sittings of that body or its committees until the House shall have decided whether it intends to come to some understanding with the Government in regard to the vote on the Budget. The Financial Committee, in reply to the Minister's letter, issued a declaration reserving the rights of the representatives to full and free discussion of the Budget.

The greater part of the Polish refugees who were imprisoned in Austria have arrived at Paris. Count Zamoyski is the ex-Dictator Langiewicz, who has left for Switzerland.

A telegram has been sent from the conference between the delegates from the Zollverein and the Austrian Plenipotentiary has resulted in an arrangement for a new commercial convention. The signature of the treaty of commerce between Austria and the Zollverein will, therefore, shortly take place.

PRUSSIA.

The Financial Committee has finished the discussion of the general report on the Budget, during which no sub-committee. Most of the propositions of the report, including those which have not been discussed, were agreed to.

THE SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN QUESTION.

The assembly of delegates from the various associations of Schleswig and Holstein, which met at Rendsburg, has addressed to the effect that the inhabitants of the duchies should leave to the Duke of Augustenburg the task of the Diet of the succession and of such treaties with Prussia as would be for the interest of the whole of Germany.

Prussia has put into form the demands which she is resolved to make as conditions to a final settlement of the Schleswig-Holstein question. She asks for the right to send soldiers in the duchies for her navy; the cession to her of the territory requisite for the construction of the Kiel Canal, to connect the German Ocean and the Baltic by the placing of the postal and telegraphic departments of the duchies under her direction; and the concession, as shortly as possible, of the forces of the duchies with those of Prussia. At each month of the canal her demands will be increased. Austria has also protested to the reception of Prussian men-of-war. It does not seem quite clear to what, if all these concessions are made, the sovereignty of the Duke of Schleswig-Holstein is to amount.

Austria and Prussia, it has been stated, have agreed upon the flag for the neutralised marine of the Confederation. It is composed of three horizontal bands, the upper one blue, that in the middle white, and the lower one red. The blue band is to have a yellow square by the side of the staff.

RUSSIA.

The country bordering upon the States of Central Asia, extending from the Sea of Aral to Lake Issik Kol, has been formed into a Russian province, under the title of Russian Turkistan.

TURKEY.

The Government has instituted a system of advanced schools, open free to all classes of the native population. The Government has also under its consideration the question of the secularisation of the mosque property.

The Marquis de Moustier, the French Ambassador, is leaving Constantinople, to be succeeded by M. Benedetti.

AMERICA.

By the Inman steam-ship City of London, we have news from New York to the 18th ult., when gold was quoted at 164½ per cent premium.

General Sherman occupied Branchville on the 8th ult. According to the statement of a Federal courier, who was said to have left General Sherman's army and to have ridden across the country to Fayetteville, on the north bank of Cape Fear River, the occupation of Branchville was preceded by three days' hard fighting; but the Richmond journals made no mention of any engagement, and stated that Branchville was abandoned of its own accord because the Federals had occupied Orangeburg, and that General Beauregard had taken up a new line for the purpose of covering Columbia. The latest accounts from Richmond stated that the vanguard of General Sherman's army had reached the north bank of the Lumber River at a point a few miles east of Columbian; that the Confederates had fallen back to the north bank of the stream, and that a battle was imminent. Sherman, under a flag of truce, had brought from Richmond rumours (not very trustworthy) that General Sherman had been checked and General Beauregard killed.

Nothing further of importance had occurred in the neighbourhood of Richmond or Petersburg. General Grant was busily engaged in fortifying his new position on Hatcher's Run. He has extended his pickets to Shiney Creek.

The Federals were continuing their operations against Wilmington. General Terry had made another descent on the Confederate lines at Sugarloaf, north of Cape Fear River, all of which, though assisted by a powerful fleet, the Confederates still continued to maintain. The result of a reconnaissance at Wilmington was, we are told, the capture of the Federal position for three miles. The new guns had been and works thrown up on it as strong as those to which the Confederates had retreated. Another account, however, nothing makes mention of the obstructions opposite Fort Anderson, crossed the obstructions, passed on to Wilmington, and made a complete examination of its wharves and shipping. He also proceeded to Charlotte, North Carolina, and destroyed all the railroad property there.

Three thousand Federals had effected a landing at James Island, within three miles of Charleston. The object of the movement was unknown.

General Thomas had arrived in New Orleans; but it was not known how large a part of the force he had taken with him, or whether his operations were to be directed against Mobile or against Texas.

At the meeting of Congress on the 6th ult. General Mc Lauralin, the Secretary of State, delivered a speech strongly enforcing the necessity of employing negroes as Federal soldiers. The Richmond journals, however, has taken a different view of affairs; and, while that body has decided upon the enrolment of 40,000 negroes in a menial capacity in the army, it has voted down the proposal to arm and equip them as soldiers.

The plan of the new Confederate flag, submitted some time ago by Major Bagnuet for the consideration of Congress, has been adopted by the Military Committee of the House and Senate, and will probably be the national emblem of the Confederate States. The change made in the flag consists in the addition of a red bar to the two stripes. A red bar in equal proportion, the red bar being at the outer end of the field.

President Lincoln has called an extraordinary session of the Senate for the 4th inst. He has also declared that he may send communications as may be made on the part of the Executive."

Mr. Fernando Wood, chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, a financial plan for the next fiscal year. It provides for the issue of a loan of 400,000,000 dols., in such form of bonds and such rates of interest, not exceeding 6 per cent, as may seem most advisable to the Secretary. The total public debt on Feb. 1 is officially announced at 2,000,140,000 dols., of which 1,500,000,000 dols. are bonds.

The Federal House of Representatives had passed a bill imposing a duty of 5 per cent. on the amount of an internal revenue of 5 per cent. on the amount of an internal revenue of eight cents per pound on cotton.

The Senate has passed an appropriation for the Niagara Ship Canal.

Congress has passed a bill for the establishment of a mail steam-ship line between San Francisco and China.

Captain Beadles, concerned in the Lake Erie affair, and sentenced to be hanged, has escaped.

Minnesota and Kansas have ratified the constitutional amendment, making a total of thirty-three who have adopted it. The majority report of the judiciary committee of the Kentucky Legislature recommends the rejection of the constitutional amendment. The minority report goes on compromising principles, and seems to precede the former.

Letters from Petrolia state that wells, rich and valuable, are being every week struck.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA.

A despatch from Quebec, of Feb. 16, says:—"The resolutions with reference to the confederation of the provinces are now occupying the attention of both Legislative Assemblies. In the Upper Chamber Sir A. T. Galt's motion for the Address in reply to the Administrator's Speech, in its favour, while speeches by the Hon. Mr. Curry, Mr. Sanborn, and others were opposed to the scheme of confederation. The debate will go on day by day until the sense of the House be taken on the question. It is said that the Ministers calculate upon the votes of twenty members of the Legislative Council. Should this prove to be the case, the probability is that the measure may be rejected. In the Legislative Assembly Messrs. J. A. Macdonald, Cartier, Galt, Brown, and McGee have brought the subject before the House, each declaring himself in favour of the confederation, financial, and social advantages to be derived from the contemplated federative union. The debate was subsequently exhausted by others, so far as one view of it is concerned. Some days are now granted to the Opposition to speak, and then the question is to come to a division and prepare their plan of attack.

Advices from Halifax, Nova Scotia, and British Columbia state that they are still discussing the project of union, but the latter will not concern itself unless Canada abandons the free trade policy to which Victoria desires to adhere.

The King of the Belgians has decreed the erection of a statue to Rubens, by the public subscription of the public servants of Antwerp. The State will contribute a sum of 10,000f. towards the cost. M. Dewin, a sculptor of Brussels, has received the commission for the work.

A very interesting series of stereographic views of Swiss mountain scenery, photographed by Mr. W. England, of St. Jame's-square, Notting-hill, has been dedicated, by permission, to the Alpine Club. They show many of the most famous and picturesque localities in the Bernese Oberland and the Cantons of Zeneh, Lucerne, Uri, and Unterwalden.

A telegram was received on Wednesday at Lloyd's to the effect that her Majesty's ship Galatea, Captain Maguire, of 26 guns, 3277 tons, and 4-horse power, with a crew of 319 officers and men, had been lost off Cape Henry, not far from the mouth of the Chesapeake, and that great anxiety existed as to the safety of the crew. The Admiralty have received no news of the Galatea's loss further than the report at Lloyd's, where it is not credited. Letters from Norfolk, of the 11th and 12th ult., state that she was in the roads, where she would be perfectly secure.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

ON Thursday week, at the Roman Catholic Church of St. Mary, Moorfields, I witnessed that wonderful Mass of Requiem for the repose of the soul of Cardinal Wiseman, the like of which has not been seen in this country since the interment of Cardinal Pole, in the days of Queen Mary. It was a most sumptuous show, and one that seemed to impress Protestants and Catholics alike. Magnificent music, countless candles, gorgeous vestments; albs, copes, dalmatics, mitres, crosiers and crucifixes; clouds of incense; a church hung in raven black; a crowded auditory, clad in deepest mourning; episcopal benedictions and precatory absolutions; the "Kyrie eleison" and the "Dies Iræ," and an eloquent and touching sermon by Monsignor Manning. Nothing was wanted towards the completeness of a superb and impressive spectacle. And yet, what a vain and transitory thing is human greatness—even the grandeur of him who was an Archbishop and Prince of the Church! The City Commissioner of Police was good enough to permit the representatives of the press to leave the chapel before the rest of the congregation. I had to walk from Finsbury to the Bank ere I could obtain a cab; and then, Moorgate-street being stopped up, I was taken a weary round, through the City-road, Pentonville, and Clerkenwell, in order to reach my destination, Bloomsbury. The streets were lined, for miles, by perhaps the blackest, most squalid mob I ever saw; and when I came to my goal the cabman begged hard for an extra sixpence, on the ground that he had come a long distance out of his way, in consequence of "Colonel Wiseman's funeral!" Colonel Wiseman! 4973 evidently knew nothing of the admirable Doctor, of the erst Rector of the Sapienza, of the author of "Fabiola" and "The Personal Recollections of the Last Four Popes;" of the poet, dramatist, lecturer, and theologian. One is reminded of Mr. Roebuck's husbandman, when he was told of the death of the great Duke of Wellington—"I 'se very sorry for he; but who wor he?"

I can mark on the tablets of my mind a good many funerals I have seen. Notably that of Napoleon I. (which I witnessed as a schoolboy trooping along the Champs Elysées, one bleak November day in '40, the mob shouting "Vive l'Empereur!" and the dead Emperor's nephew being then a captive, awaiting his trial before the Court of Peers); that of Arthur, Duke of Wellington, in St. Paul's, in '52 (what a great scrambling pageant that was! and how drunk London got the night before!); that of the good Prince Consort, in St. George's, Windsor; that of Lord Macaulay, in Westminster Abbey; and that of Archbishop Hughes, in St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York, in the year last past. The ceremonial just named very much resembled, in pomp, pride, and circumstance, that observed at the obsequies of Cardinal Wiseman; only, in lieu of a coffin closed and covered with a pall, the actual corpse of the deceased Prelate, clad in full robes, and with his mitre on his head, lay exposed to view on a gorgeous catafalque surmounted by a baldaquin as gorgeous. Mr. Brady, of Broadway, took a photograph of the remains; and a very ghastly picture it made. And yet, counting over all these majestic entombments, I cannot remember one that seemed to me more solemn and more pathetic, and that made a deeper impression on me, than the funeral of an English officer I remember, once, seeing at Dover. It was full five-and-twenty years since. He was but a subaltern in a marching regiment, who had been killed in a scuffle; but I shall never forget the mournfulness of the procession as it emerged from the cavernous entrance to the Shaft in Snargate-street. The dreary wail of the Dead March in "Saul"—the soldiers with arms reversed—his brother officers, with crape round their arms and their sword-hilts—the hat and sword lying on the coffin—and the poor little dog trotting after, his ears and tail depressed, as though he, too, had a share in the common sorrow.

Has a very curious coincidence been brought to mind between the locality where Cardinal Wiseman died and that where Cardinal Wolsey resided? At York-place, Portman-square, the Cardinal of Westminster lay in state; at York-place, Whitehall, the great Cardinal of York once lived. But here the coincidence ceases. The kindly divine who was born at Seville had little in common with the arrogant Prelate who first saw the light in Ipswich.

My Echoes, this week, are nothing if not funereal. On the Saturday following the entombment of Cardinal Wiseman I went to the funeral of Algernon Percy, the bounteous and warm-hearted Duke of Northumberland, in Westminster Abbey. The scene was a startling contrast to that which I had surveyed two days earlier. All was plain, frigid, and formal, wellnigh to nakedness. And yet, as a neighbour whispered to me, "Why should there not be some pomp of ritual in our venerable fanes?" 'Broidered vestments were worn in Durham Cathedral so recently as the year 1802; then, falling into shabbiness, they were disused and never replaced. At the coronation of her Majesty Archbishop Howley wore a purple velvet robe, richly laced, and Bishop Blomfield (vide Mr. Leslie's picture) a golden cope. There was not more pageantry at this, the burial of the great Lord of Alnwick, than at that of Robert Stephenson the engineer. It is better so, perhaps; the beautiful burial service of the Church of England, and the stately anthems of Croft and Purcell should suffice—for Protestants at least. But, at all events, let us be consistent. If pomp, and show, and symbolism are vain things, away with them; but, at the same time, let us banish the hideous mummeries of the undertaker. The British croquemort had it all his own way on Saturday. In mourning coaches-and-four and mourning coaches-and-six, in hat bands, scarves, weepers, brass-tipped staves, trays of feathers, black kid gloves, and red faces, he pervaded the Abbey, and the cloisters, and the Dean's-yard, and the Broad Sanctuary.

I went to this funeral in the pursuit of my professional duties, for the subscriber is, himself, a kind of undertaker, and has occasionally to "perform funerals." I asked about twenty vergers whether any accommodation had been reserved for the press. I knew there had been, in accordance with the instructions of the courteous Dean; but I wished to know its whereabouts. From not one of the twenty vergers could I obtain a definite answer. None of them knew anything. At length, one haughty functionary at the entrance to the choir remarked that he had seen "some of the men of the press about, but he didn't know where they were gone." I mildly ventured on the correction of "gentlemen.' "Oho!" sneered the haughty functionary, "we 're all gentlemen here." Fortunately, I met a colleague who knew that up a certain staircase, and by the side of the tribune appointed for the choir, there was a certain monumental tomb and some arched tracery in front thereof, through which we were privileged to look right down on the chapel where the Duke was to be buried. A few metropolitan policemen—who know the "men of the press" well—stationed at the doors would have saved much trouble and deprived the vergers of the pretext for being insolent. I hope Dr. Stanley reads his "Echoes" punctually; and that, when he has nothing better to do, he will deliver to his vergers a discourse on common politeness.

Yes; that new magazine I spoke of some time since is really to make its appearance on the 25th of April. But I am not so certain as to its being called the "Traveller." Some combination of the "Shilling" and the "Monthly" is said to have been fixed upon. What's in a name? But the "Traveller," it strikes me, was a very admirable one. However, a host of talent, it is said, is already secured for the new periodical, which, although it is to appear "once a month," will have, editorially, a not very indirect connection with "once a week."

Of Savile House, Leicester-square, with all its memories of Miss Linwood's inscrutable tapestry, the Poses Plastiques, the Café Chantant, the Eldorado, the Odéon, the Chicken-hatching Machine, Farini on the tight rope, and the "Shades," it must be written—fuit. Savile House was on Tuesday night "burnt up," as the Americans have it. Pennant's "pouting-house for princes" has been completely gutted. His Royal Highness the Prince made his first appearance as an amateur fireman at this notable conflagration. Royalty should not needlessly expose itself; but going to fires is, on the Continent at least, one of the Royal prerogatives. At every "first-class blaze" in St. Petersburg, for instance, a member of the Imperial family is expected to be present; and the late Emperor Nicholas was a devoted amateur of fires, assisting, in one instance, at the burning of his own house—the Winter Palace—in 1839. The common people, who adored their Sovereign, were making superhuman efforts to save the splendid furniture of the palace; when the Czar, seeing a peasant on the verge of destruction while trying to wrench a costly mirror from a wall, gave a proof of that rare presence of mind which so distinguished him by flinging his opera-glass at the mirror, and so smashing it. Perceiving that the article had become valueless, the loyal but prudent peasant thought he might as well look after his own safety, and timeously fled.

LATEST NEWS FROM ABROAD.

The following telegrams have been received through Mr. Reuter's office:—

AMERICA.

BY the arrival of the St. David (viâ Greencastle) we have received the following intelligence dated New York, Feb. 18, Evening:—

General Grant reports to Mr. Stanton this evening that to-day's Richmond Despatch says Sherman entered and took possession of Columbia yesterday morning. General Beauregard communicated this intelligence officially yesterday. From his despatch it appears that the Federals shelled Columbia on Thursday from the south bank of the Congaree. During the night they moved up the river, and on the following morning forded the Soluda and Broad Rivers. During the Federal passage of these rivers, Beauregard evacuated Columbia. The Federals soon after took possession. Two days previously, when it was decided not to attempt the defence of Columbia, a large quantity of medicinal stores was destroyed. The despatch presumes that the fall of Columbia will necessitate the evacuation of Charleston, which the despatch thinks has already commenced.

The general impression is that Sherman will now proceed to Charleston to establish his base; but the Despatch does not see what need he has of a base. He subsists on the country, and his army has not been exhausted by any battle. Since he left Savannah, Sherman declared his intention to march to Columbia, thence to Augusta, and thence to Charleston. This Beauregard considers was uttered as a boast to hide his designs. The Despatch thinks that he will next strike at Charlotte or at Florence. It was reported yesterday that the Federals had captured Augusta; but the Despatch discredits the report.

The Charleston Mercury announced a temporary suspension on Saturday, with the view to its removal to another point, this being rendered necessary by the progress of military events.

Captain Semmes has been made a Rear-Admiral with the command of the James River squadron. Gold, 204.

Philadelphia papers announce that the Richmond papers of Thursday state that Sherman's main columns had reached Kingsville Junction, twenty-five miles north-east of Columbia. The communication south of the Florence Railroad and on the Charleston Railroad is interrupted.

A Confederate flag-of-truce boat has been blown up on the James River. All on board were lost.

The House of Representatives has passed the Tariff Bill, and rejected the proposition to tax sales of merchandise. Mr. Stevens's proposed tax of 10 per cent upon gold sales has been defeated.

CANADA.—Quebec, Feb. 17.—The House in Committee has sanctioned the appropriation of 330,000 dols. for the expenses of the arrangements on the frontier to prevent raids. It has also appropriated 50,000 dols. on account of the money refunded to the United States in the case of the St. Albans raiders.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

A new chapel (Russo-Greek) for the Russian Embassy has been opened in Welbeck-street. It will hold about a hundred persons.

A fire in Whitechapel-road, on Sunday morning, destroyed three warehouses, a Dissenting place of worship, and six houses, besides damaging a school and seven other houses.

The premises of Messrs. Defries, glass chandelier merchants, Houndsditch, were seriously damaged by fire on Sunday night. The loss amounts to £30,000.

Yesterday se'nnight the premises of Mr. N. W. Jacobson, jeweller, No. 312, Oxford-street, were robbed of eighty gold and silver watches, seventeen bracelets, and a number of rings, of the value of £400.

The Princess of Wales has granted permission that the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company's bridge at Blackfriars may be named the "Alexandra Bridge," after her Royal Highness.

The Association of the Chambers of Commerce held their final sitting at the Westminster Palace Hotel, on Thursday week. Committees were appointed to inquire into the sugar duties, with a view to their readjustment; to investigate the differential rates of discount maintained by the Banks of England and France; and to consider the practicability of carrying out some scheme for the settlement of trade disputes by arbitration.

On Ash Wednesday the general annual meeting of the Royal General Theatrical Fund was held in the saloon of the Lyceum Theatre. Mr. Buckstone, treasurer, presided. The receipts of the year were £1601; the disbursements, £1042. The funded property of the association amounted to £12,696, which, with the balance in hand, makes a total in favour of the fund of £13,166.

Marquis Townsend presided on Wednesday evening at a meeting in St. Martin's Hall, to express sympathy with Poland. Several gentlemen addressed the meeting, enlarging on the struggle which the Poles had made for independence and pointing out the destitution in which many of the exiles were in Paris and elsewhere. Resolutions of sympathy with the cause of Polish nationality were passed and steps taken to raise subscriptions to relieve the distress of the Poles.

The ninth anniversary festival of the Dramatic, Equestrian, and Musical Sick Fund was held at Willis's-rooms, on Wednesday night, under the presidency of Mr. John F. Maguire, M.P. Ash Wednesday is the only day in the year, with the exception of Christmas Day, on which actors and actresses can attend a festival of this kind, and the gathering of ladies and gentlemen of "the profession," as it is somewhat curiously called, was unusually large. The subscriptions amounted to £300.

Savile House, Leicester-square, was on Tuesday evening totally destroyed by fire. Shortly after six o'clock there was an explosion of gas, which ignited the building, and the flames spread so rapidly that very soon nothing but the bare walls remained. The Prince of Wales, accompanied by the Duke of Sutherland, was present, attired in fireman's costume. Savile House was one of the most noteworthy of the buildings in London—not on account of its appearance, but for the associations connected with it. We intend to give next week an Engraving of the ruins; and we shall, at the same time, furnish some historical and descriptive details of Savile House.

The twentieth anniversary festival of the German Hospital, Dalston, was held at the London Tavern on Wednesday night, when about 200 gentlemen dined, under the presidency of the Duke of Cambridge, who was supported by Count Apponyi, the Austrian Minister; Count Bernstorff, Prussian Minister; Count Vitzthun, Saxon Plenipotentiary; Count Schleider (free city of Hamburg), and various other representatives of German States. The donations and subscriptions announced during the evening amounted to £2500. About 740 patients have been admitted to the hospital during the past year, while the association has been the means of relieving 18,528 cases out of doors.

The annual court of the governors of King's College Hospital took place, on Tuesday, in the board-room of the institution—Dr. Jelf, principal of King's College, in the chair. A report was read, which stated that the number of patients admitted into the hospital during the past year amounted to 1785, being an increase of 110 over those of the preceding year; and the number of out-patients who received advice and medicine amounted to 30,405. During the year 115 women had been confined in the Nightingale maternity ward, and the number of midwifery cases attended at the patients' own homes amounted to 714. The total ordinary receipts for the past year (excluding legacies above £100 and a sum of £1200 borrowed from the bankers) amounted to £7596; and the total expenses to £9130.

The thirty-second annual meeting of the Sacred Harmonic Society took place at Exeter Hall, on Tuesday—Mr. J. N. Harrison, president, in the chair. The report, besides passing in review the operations of the society during the past twelve months, contained allusions to several other matters of musical interest. After stating that the society had given fourteen concerts during the past year, and that the subscriptions were greater in amount and number than in any previous year, also that numerous donations had been made to the library, it alluded to the hearty commendation bestowed on the performances from all quarters during the season. The report then gave an abstract of the year's accounts, whereby it appeared that the general receipts have been £5451, and the payments £5185.

The births of 2290 children—1144 boys and 1146 girls—were registered last week. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1855-64 the average number (corrected) was 2080.——The number of deaths in London returned for the week was 1590, against a corrected average (for the eighth week of the year) of 1505. The mortality from scarlatina was less than it had been in many previous weeks; the deaths were thirty-four. Typhus, which also shows a decline in the week, was fatal in sixty-nine cases. Phthisis was fatal in 165 cases, bronchitis in 242, pneumonia in eighty-three, and heart disease in eighty cases. Sixty-seven persons died at the age of eighty years and upwards, two of whom were women who had attained the age of ninety-four years.

The 150th festival of "The Most Honourable and Loyal Society of Ancient Britons" was celebrated on Tuesday evening, at the Freemasons' Tavern. The chair was taken by Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, M.P. In the public mind, the Society of Ancient Britons is identified with the Welsh Charity School, which is located at Ashford, in Middlesex, and provides for the training and education of children of Welsh extraction connected with the metropolis and its vicinity. Since the establishment of the institution 2287 boys and 717 girls have been admitted; and there are at present in the school sixty boys and thirty-eight girls. About half these children were present, marched round the room immediately before the principal toast, and sang an ode appropriate to the occasion. The Chairman, in proposing "Prosperity to the Welsh Charity School," warmly urged the claims of the institution to the support of all Welshmen resident in the metropolis; and the result of the festival was an aggregate accession to the funds of about £1000, including a donation of one hundred guineas from her Majesty, and the same amount from the chairman.

LAW AND POLICE.—The Lord Chancellor has dismissed the appeal from the decree of the Master of the Rolls in the Matlock will case. The object of the appellant was to have the case reopened, it being alleged that fresh testamentary documents had been found, which went to confirm the disposition of Nuttall's property as laid down in the codicils which have on more than one occasion been pronounced spurious.

An action was tried in the Court of Queen's Bench on Monday, in which a servant sued her mistress for damages received from the bite of a dog. The defendant was an eccentric old lady, and had a fondness for vicious dogs, which she kept in her bed-room. The one in question was usually tied up, but the mistress let it loose while the servant was working about the room, and would not call it off when it attacked the plaintiff. The jury gave damages to the extent of £60.

Miss Julia Nichols, a cowkeeper at Lower Norwood, obtained a verdict in the Court of Queen's Bench on Tuesday morning, for £10 damages, against a medical gentleman in the neighbourhood, named Chapman, for having falsely charged her with stealing some straw.

There was an action for newspaper libel tried in the Court of Queen's Bench yesterday week. The Journal of Gas and Water Supply commented on some evidence given by Mr. Hedley, an engineer, in terms which that gentleman considered to pass the bounds of fair criticism. The jury were of the same opinion, and returned a verdict for the plaintiff, with damages £250.

A recent decision of the Exchequer Chamber declares that compensation cannot be claimed for loss of business during the making of a railway. A number of persons who have been injuriously effected in this way by the Metropolitan Railway met, on Monday evening, at the Assembly Rooms, Gower-street, and formed a committee to raise funds to carry an appeal against this decision to the House of Lords.

At the Central Criminal Court, on Thursday, Gregorio Mogni, an Italian, was placed in the dock charged with the manslaughter of Michael Harrington. The trial excited great interest, one man (Pelizzioni) having been convicted of murdering the deceased, and being in Newgate under sentence of death. The prisoner was found guilty, and sentenced to penal servitude for five years.

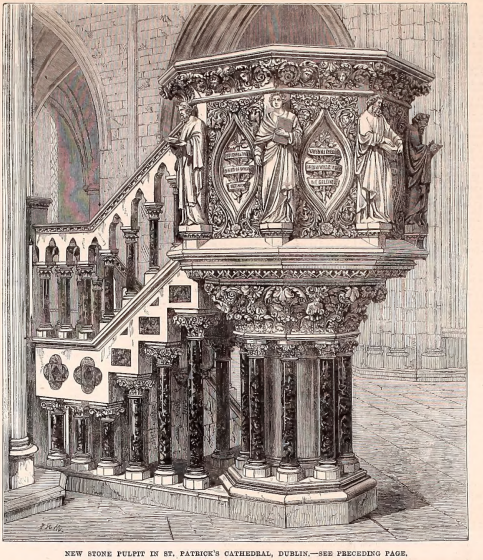
Yesterday week was appointed for Mr. Norton, at the Lambeth Police Court, to deliver his opinion in reference to the charge against the Oxford and Canterbury Hall Company of performing stage plays at the Canterbury Hall without a license. Mr. Norton said he had visited the hall and seen "Hodge Podge," the entertainment said to be a pantomime. He agreed that it was a pantomime, and therefore a stage play. Moreover, it was an exceedingly good one, and he thought it would be a great pity if the piece was stopped. He suggested that Mr. Morton should apply to the Lord Chamberlain to license the hall, and to give him time to do so he would suspend his final judgment.

A case of robbery, involving gross ingratitude, was before the Thames police magistrate on Tuesday morning. Mr. Henry Thomas, a manufacturer of seamen's beds, in Caroline-street, Ratcliff, some time since took a man named Tuffs, who was in a state of destitution, into his employ and into his house, supplying him with clothing as well as paying him wages, and last Saturday morning, during his master's absence, he took away twenty-nine beds. The magistrate sentenced him to six months' hard labour.

Several robberies have been committed by a confidential clerk, named Adams, in the employ of the London and North-Western Railway Company. He was taken up at the Marylebone Police Court on Tuesday morning, and an officer in the company's service said that he found at his residence two vases, which he acknowledged having stolen. There were also found in his bedroom nineteen duplicates for watches which the prisoner said he had brought from the office, and entries of which would be found in the books. On the officer returning to Euston station, the prisoner gave him thirty-five boxes, from each of which he said he had taken a watch. At the bottom of the cupboard in his bed-room was found a theatrical garment, which he said he had stolen, also some metal fittings for a chiffonier. A breast-pin and other articles were also found. He was remanded for a week.

A man named James Jones has died at Hackney from want of food. He was a labourer at the East India Docks, and earned 15s. a week. He lived by himself, and died yesterday week. In his room notes and gold amounting to more than £260 were found. The medical evidence showed that deceased had died from exposure to cold and starvation. The jury returned a verdict in accordance with this evidence. The money found in the deceased's room was impounded by the Coroner in the Queen's name.

Six persons, evidently engaged—if not as principals, as accomplices—in the late extensive burglaries, were cleverly captured, at the East-End, yesterday week. They are three men, and three women passing as their wives, by name William Henry Geoffrey, Martha Geoffrey, Thomas Caseley, Ann Caseley, Thomas Brewerton, and Louisa Brewerton. The arrest was made between two and three o'clock, but was not completed without considerable trouble. The police, having placed some of their body at every possible outlet of the house, 142, Whitechapel-road, entered, and at once captured the men Geoffrey and Brewerton, known as the "velvet lad," and the woman Geoffrey, though not without a struggle. The woman Brewerton ran up stairs and locked herself in a room, of which the door was forced, when she, too, was captured, after severely mauling the face of one of the officers, with sixty-five gold chains just crammed into her pockets! Having secured four of the prisoners, the police went to 13, Ely-terrace, Bow-road, where they apprehended the two Caseleys, and found fifty-two gold watches and a complete heap of similar valuables. There was also found £240 in gold, and deposit notes of the Westminster Bank for £400. Much of the property was identified as having been stolen from Walker's in Cornhill; some from Abraham's, in the Strand. Besides the jewellery and money, quantities of silk and shawls, supposed to have been stolen from warehouses in the City, were discovered. They had likewise a number of well-made implements and tools, such as might be used for burglary, some of them being of steel of the finest temper and finish. One of these, a hand gouge, they had been trying on a joist of a house in which some of them lived. It may be remembered that it was with an implement of that kind that a hole was cut in the floor of Sir Charles Crosley's office, by which access was obtained to the tailor's shop below, and thence from the cutting-room on the basement to the back shop of Mr. Walker, containing his iron "safe." The two houses in the occupation of the prisoners had been recently furnished in a costly manner, and both men and women had each a stock of fashionable attire when they were arrested. On Saturday the prisoners were taken to Bow-street Police Court for examination. Mr. John Thomas Walker identified the watches and chains which had been recovered by the police as a part of the stolen property. On Tuesday the prisoners, increased to ten, were taken before the Lord Mayor, the magistrate of Bow-street, before whom they were first taken, having consented to hand them over to the jurisdiction of the City magistrates. The evidence given did not advance the case of Mr. Walker's burglary much beyond the point to which it had been carried before; but the burglary at Mr. Johnson's, in Threadneedle-street, was also entered on. The prisoners seemed anxious to exonerate their wives, but they were all remanded without bail. It is understood that more than one of the prisoners is anxious to turn Queen's evidence. Brown, alias Scotty, alias Price, alias Miller (supposed to be the chief of a gang of burglars), was, on Tuesday, placed at the bar, at Bow-street, on the charge of burglary at Mr. Abrahams', in the Strand, and was committed. Inspector Potter stated that Scotty had, in 1851, been sentenced to ten years' imprisonment for burglary in Scotland. On Saturday the inspector went to Scotland for the purpose of arresting a man supposed to be a relation of Scotty. This man passes by the name of Miller, but his real name is said to be Barray. Mr. Potter succeeded in capturing him, and found on him a gold brooch, gold pin, and gold earring, all identified by Mr. Walker; a bank-book, on the Royal Bank of Scotland, in the name of Miller, and showing £55 paid in; and two shawls, which had been identified as a portion of the booty of a burglary in Lawrence-lane. Miller, or Barray, had also been transported for ten years. A remarkable discovery has been made in connection with the robbery at Mr. Walker's shop. The police engaged in the case, "from information they had received," determined to have the bed of the Thames near Blackfriars examined; and the result so far has been the recovery of six gold watches, which have been identified as part of the property stolen from Mr. Walker's shop. The search will be continued, and it is believed that the diver will succeed in picking up more of the missing jewellery. The presumption is that some of the confederates of the persons in custody, alarmed at their arrest, threw the remainder of the booty into the river, being unable otherwise to dispose of it, and unwilling longer to incur the risk of its possession.



THE CHURCH OF ST. DOULOUGH, NEAR DUBLIN.

THE ancient Church of St. Doulough, near Dublin, after having been thoroughly repaired, was reconsecrated a week or two since in the presence of a considerable number of clergymen and gentlemen, who had interested themselves in the preservation of, perhaps, the most unique specimen of ancient ecclesiastical architecture remaining in the kingdom. St. Doulough's has been described as a very curious mixture of the castle, dwelling-house, and chapel or church; which last, in fact, forms but a comparatively small part of the building. The date of its building is, probably, the latter part of the thirteenth century or the beginning of the fourteenth. In plan it is oblong, with a large square central tower, which has regular battlements of the usual Irish type, evidently intended for use and not for ornament; the windows are small loops, square-topped, and just the same as those of the ordinary tower-houses. The chapel forms the eastern limb of the ground floor of the building; it has an east window of two lights, with mouldings of the fourteenth century. On the north side are single lancet windows; on the south they are of two lights, of the same style as the east window. It has a stone vault, with habitable chambers above it in the roof, which is of ashlar masonry, and is remarkably high-pitched, reaching nearly to the top of the tower. There are other dwelling-rooms in the western division and in the tower. At the west end there are six small windows, one over the other, indicating that this portion of the building was divided into that number of small, low rooms. The doorway is in a sort of shallow porch, under a stair-turret projecting from the north-west corner of the tower, but extending only up to the second story; in this turret are several small windows, of single lights, trefoil-headed. The staircase is connected with the tower by a passage corbelled out in a singular way, and has loopholes in the upper part: there are fireplaces and other marks of habitation in the chambers. The whole dimensions of this very singular building are only 40 ft. long by 16 ft. wide, external measure. It is remarkably lofty in proportion to its size. Near the church is the well-room, a curious small octagonal building with a dome-shaped vault, from which project four pointed dormers with stone roofs, and each with a small lancet-window, the head triangular; and under each window is a large cruciform loophole, except on one side, where there is a door. The whole structure appears to be of the thirteenth century. Adjoining this is a small oblong chamber or bath-room, called "St. Catherine's Pond," which has a pointed barrel vault and a door-way, evidently of the thirteenth century also. Our Illustration is by Mr. T. Wakeman, of Dublin, author of "The Hand-book of Irish Antiquities," &c.

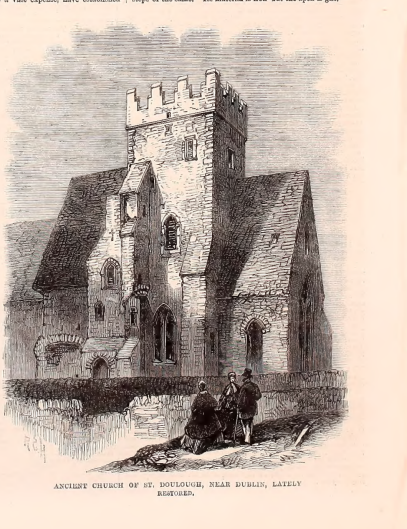
PUBLIC WELL AT IPSDEN, OXFORDSHIRE.



THE public well at Stoke Row, in the parish of Ipsden, Oxfordshire, is the gift of his Highness the Maharajah of Benares, who has thus appropriately shown his attachment to England and his sense of the honour conferred on him by the British Government in reward for his loyal services. In India to sink a well for the benefit of the wayfarer and of the poor is considered an especially meritorious act; but the idea of extending such beneficence to a distant land is a novelty; and it is believed that this is the first instance of the kind on the part of a native nobleman of India. The Maharajah, indeed, has amongst his possessions an extensive tract of hill and wilderness, in which he and his ancestors, at a vast expense, have established wells and reservoirs; but he had often heard that in certain districts of England, in several parts of the Chiltern range, wells were almost unknown, and that the poor inhabitants, generally dependent on ponds by the roadside, were reduced in seasons of drought to absolute distress. He therefore availed himself of the return to England of his old friend Mr. Edward A. Reade, of the Civil Service, who has retired to that neighbourhood, to express his wish that a public well should be sunk at his expense, and furnished with such appliances that all persons, especially the poor, should be able to supply themselves with pure water free of cost. Just at this time the common-land of Stoke-row, one of the highest points in the Chilterns, was under the operation of the Inclosure Act, and the commissioners readily granted a site. The undertaking was then commenced (an auspicious day being necessary on these occasions) by the Maharajah's direction, on the wedding-day of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and was completed as far as reaching the water and fixing the drawing apparatus before last summer, when its utility became manifest, especially to those who remembered that, in previous droughts, water had to be brought from the Thames, distant seven miles, at a heavy expense; and that, to eke out the scanty supply, that which was used in cooking passed from cottage to cottage as long as it could serve. The daily yield of 600 and 700 gallons, during this dry season, has been duly appreciated by the people of Stoke-row and for miles around, their sense of the boon being shown by their persisting to call it "the righteous well," for "the Rajah's well," its proper denomination. This well is 358 ft. deep, passing through 25 ft. of clay and gravel into chalk, and at a depth of 198 ft. and 228 ft. respectively, through belts of sand, each about 8 ft. in depth, the securing of which by masonry has been a work of much difficulty. Below this, at 300 ft. from the surface, the pure chalk rock has been pierced to the depth of 5 ft., under which chalk, interspersed with shells, obtains to the bottom. The drawing machinery consists of two buckets—the one ascending as the other descends—each capable of containing nine gallons. These are fastened to a galvanised-wire rope, passing over a central wheel fitted with shutters, which close on the rope as it rises and release it as it descends, the motion being communicated by a main wheel easily turned, and requiring the strength of an ordinary lad to draw up the full bucket in five or six minutes. The superstructure is an octagon, on a stone pavement, ascended by steps of the same. Its material is iron but the apex is gilt,

CRYSTAL PALACE.—GREAT TRIENNIAL HANDEL FESTIVAL.

SELECTION,	WEDNESDAY,	,, 28, ,,
ISRAEL,	FRIDAY,	,, 30, ,,

The Programme of arrangements, with the price of Tickets and the block-plan of Stalls, is ready for issue, and may be had, on written or personal application, from and after Monday next, the 6th of March, at the Festival Ticket Offices, Crystal Palace, and Exeter Hall. It may also be had at the principal Music Warehouses in London and in the Provinces; and, besides numerous other places abroad, at the offices of the South-Eastern and London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Companies, at Paris, Brussels, Cologne, Calais, Boulogne, Ostend, Ghent, Antwerp, &c.

The two Ticket Offices as above will be open from Ten a.m. on Monday, March 13, for the issue of vouchers securing seats according to the numbered plans, which will then be open to inspection. Written applications containing remittances, and arriving at either of the Ticket Offices on or before the first post on the 13th, will be attended to alternately with personal applications.

Crystal Palace and Exeter Hall. By order.
March 3, 1865.

NOTE.—Persons preferring seats in any particular block are recommended to apply for them as early as possible after the opening of the Subscription Books on the 13th of March. Even the Crystal Palace, with its vast space, has limits of accommodation which cannot be exceeded; and, the demand at each of the three previous Festivals for seats in particular blocks having been greatly in excess of possible supply, the necessity for the foregoing intimation must be apparent.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—Wet or Dry, always Charming.—Monday to Friday, One Shilling; Saturday, Concert and Promenade, Half-a-Crown.

LONDON: SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1865.

ANYTHING affecting that important personage the attorney must affect almost every other member of British society. For the attorney, either under that fine old name, from the Norman, or under the gentler title, consecrated by Desdemona, of solicitor, is present with us from the cradle to the grave; and we may almost defy Irishism, and say a little longer. If wrong be done us we fly to him for redress, and if we do wrong we fly to him rather faster to be proved right or saved harmless. He stands by us at our bridal with the grim skins that are to shield our widow; he draws up the bond that consigns our son to a profession or a trade; he fixes us in our house, fastening us there by an array of menacing covenants; he visits us when we are ill—unless we have been wise enough to visit him when we were well—and another whisper goes round the house, and witnesses look mysterious as they return to the servants' floor. And, lastly, "the fourth corner in the first mourning coach was occupied by the family solicitor." If we are of a litigious turn—or, as we should put it ourselves, if we are of a strange nature and tenacious of our rights—we see a good deal more of him than is good for us at other times; and if we happen to be rich and benevolent, and like Sir Epicure Mammon, eager to build "now and then a church," our friend is near us, corresponding with the Bishop's official about endowments. If we like to lay acre to acre for political purposes, or the dearer aggrandisement, the ring fence, he is there to show us how to borrow money at five per cent and lay it out in an investment that brings two, and he will be ready again with the mortgages which that eligible arrangement will suggest in a couple of years or so. In short, the attorney is our second self, and therefore we should be chary of blaming him for selfishness. Such accusations, however, belong to the old school of wit, and—with sneers at babies, matrimony, doctors, and the like—are now handed over to snobs. The solicitor has, even upon the stupid stage, which in England is the last place of refuge for vulgar conventionalisms, been recognised as not only the most clever member of most circles, but is, probably, one of the most highminded.

So the project of a law which is to reconstruct the arrangements between solicitor and client, in regard to remuneration, will be examined with personal interest by most of us. The Lord Chancellor has introduced a bill by which he proposes to sanction bargains between the attorney and him who employs that agent. At present, as everybody knows, there is a certain method of charging for work, and it cannot be departed from; or if it should be, there is a phalanx of officials whose business it is to "tax" the bill and restore it to the prescribed form. This system has advantages, but it has also great faults. One of these is that a lawyer's bill is really a sham. For the intellectual work—for the true service to the client—a lawyer does not charge, for he may not; but he must be paid, so he charges for a quantity of technical rubbish. He thinks for half a day over the form in which he shall prepare a letter whose demands or admissions may make you rich or denude you of an estate; and he charges five shillings for writing it, and a trifle more for "copy to keep," unless this has been lately prohibited. But do not be afraid lest he has wronged himself. The fine intellect which has worked so hard for you has also worked reasonably well for its master; and when you receive your bill, although you will not find any charge like that of the American lawyer, "Taking off my coat and thinking hard in your behalf," you will see a variety of preparations for that afternoon of thought, and a very decent total at the end of the document. All this complication is sheer nonsense. You wanted his thought and advice just as you want that of the doctor to whom you hold out your wrist; but the lawyer must not charge you in any other way than that prescribed by law. The doctor, of course, must not charge you at all; you make him a present out of sheer admiration of his genius and philanthropy; but if he might do so his practice would be parallel with the lawyer's, if your medical friend were to say, "I shall charge you nothing for the interview and prescription; but I had this room swept this morning as you were coming, and I shall ask you a guinea for the wear and tear of the broom and the carpet." It is to do away with this absurdity, as well as with other views, that the Chancellor proposes that the solicitor shall make a bargain, if he likes, with his client.

We have all read in Gay's Fables that

> You'd better take a portion small
> Than go to law and lose it all;

and a living ex-Chancellor, a Conservative, has said that a man ought to be put into Bedlam who goes to law for less than £1000. But, in spite of these wise and gay sayings, men will go to law and cavil on the ninth part of a hair. How many are ruined by this sort of thing, and yet do not believe themselves to have been extravagant and unkind to their families, it is needless to speculate. Many a man rushes at law, and, when he comes out half beggared, is by no means condemned by his friends, who would have called him all sorts of hard names if he had set up a horse for his daily exercise and the preservation of his health for the good of his children. Indeed, among the lower middle classes, there is a kind of superstitious reverence for a man who has been ruined by law—a feeling akin to that which makes the Swiss mountaineers revere idiots. Now, it is more than probable that many a man, even of the most absurdly quarrelsome character, would abstain from law if he knew exactly what he would have to pay if he lost, and even if he won, and that his bland and encouraging advisers would have a right to put him into prison, or take away his wife's pianoforte, if that sum in three figures were not paid. If, under the proposed new law, he can cry to his attorney, like the wife in the play, "Fight that man!" but can add, "and as far as fifty pounds goes, and no further, I will bear the cost," he knows the worst; and if his attorney replies that the sum must be doubled, the angry man will probably choose peace. So far the new project—as to which, however, we are as yet imperfectly informed by its learned author—may do good. But we do not believe that it will tend to cheapen law, and we are by no means prepared to say that if it would render litigation easier we should think it a scheme altogether worthy the Keeper of the Conscience.

Owing to continued ill-health, Lord Lyons, who came home a short time ago on leave of absence, has been obliged to resign the office of British Minister at Washington. Sir Frederick Bruce, who has for several years filled the post of Minister at Pekin, has been appointed his Lordship's successor. Sir F. Bruce is at present in England.

THE COURT.

THE Queen, with the junior members of the Royal family, continues at Windsor Castle, in the enjoyment of excellent health.

On Thurday week her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Louisa, and attended by the Marchioness of Ely, Lieutenant-General the Hon. C. Grey, Major-General the Hon. A. N. Hood, and Colonel the Hon. D. De Ros, went to London. The Queen travelled by special train viâ the Great Western Railway to Paddington, and drove thence to Baron Marochetti's studio, and afterwards to the South Kensington Museum, and thence to Buckingham Palace. Her Majesty returned to Windsor at one o'clock.

Yesterday week the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena and attended by the Marchioness of Ely, drove out. Princess Louisa, attended by the Hon. Emily Cathcart, took a drive. Prince Arthur, attended by Major Elphinstone, arrived at the castle from Greenwich Park. Field Marshal Prince Bariatinsky arrived at the castle, from London, and had the honour of an interview with her Majesty.

On Saturday last the Queen walked in the castle grounds. Prince Arthur and Prince Leopold went to Virginia Water. Subsequently their Royal Highnesses, attended by Major Elphinstone and Mr. Buff, went to London and visited the Prince and Princess of Wales at Marlborough House. In the evening the Princes were present at the amateur performance given by the officers of the brigade of Guards, at the Bijou Theatre, in the Haymarket. Their Royal Highnesses returned to Windsor Castle at twelve o'clock. The Judge Advocate General had an audience of the Queen. The Belgian Minister and Mdme. Van de Weyer and Earl De Grey and Ripon had the honour of dining with her Majesty.

On Sunday the Queen, Princess Helena, Princess Louisa, Princess Beatrice, Prince Arthur, and Prince Leopold attended Divine service in the private chapel of the castle. The Very Rev. the Dean of Windsor officiated and administered the sacrament of the holy communion. Earl De Grey and Ripon left the castle.

On Monday the Queen, accompanied by Prine Arthur, drove out. Princess Helena rode in the Home Park. Princess Louisa, attended by the Hon. Emily Cathcart, took a drive. In the afternoon Princess Helena, Princess Louisa, and Prince Arthur, attended by the Marchioness of Ely and Colonel the Hon. D. De Ros, went to Claremont to be present at a dance in fancy dress given by Queen Marie Amelie. The Princesses wore marquise costumes of the last century, with powdered hair. Prince Arthur wore a Highland dress of the same epoch, also with powdered hair.

On Tuesday the Queen went to London and held a Court at Buckingham Palace. Prince Albert Victor was taken to the palace to see her Majesty. The Queen returned to the castle at half-past six o'clock.

On Wednesday her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and attended by Lady Augusta Stanley, walked and drove in the grounds adjacent to the castle. Prince Leopold, attended by Mr. Buff, arrived at the castle from Buckingham Palace.

The Queen was graciously pleased to write a letter of condolence to Viscountess Combermere upon the death of the veteran Field Marshal Viscount Combermere.

The Queen will hold a Court at Buckingham Palace on Monday, the 13th inst. The invitations from her Majesty will be limited to the members of the Royal household and to a small number of the aristocracy.

The Duchess of Roxburghe has succeeded the Marchioness of Ely as Lady in Waiting to her Majesty. Lord Talbot de Malahide and Captain Sir W. Hoste have succeeded Lord Methuen and Lieutenant-Colonel Kingscote as Lord and Groom in Waiting to the Queen.

THE QUEEN'S COURT.

The Queen held a Court on Tuesday, at Buckingham Palace. Her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Helena, Princess Louisa, Princess Beatrice, Prince Arthur, and Prince Leopold, and attended by the Marchioness of Ely, Lady Augusta Stanley, Major-General the Hon. A. N. Hood, Colonel the Hon. D. De Ros, Major Elphinstone, and Mr. Buff, arrived at the palace at twelve o'clock from Windsor Castle. The Prince and Princess of Wales, attended by the Marchioness of Carmarthen, the Hon. Mrs. Stonor, Earl Spencer, Lord Harris, Lieutenant-General Knollys, Major Teesdale, and the Hon. R. Meade, arrived at Buckingham Palace shortly before three o'clock, from Marlborough House. The Queen's body guard of the Hon. Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms was on duty at the Court, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Wm. Topham. The Royal body-guard of the Yeomen of the Guard was on duty in the interior of the palace, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel C. Patterson. A guard of honour of the Coldstream Guards was in attendance in the court of the palace.

The Queen, accompanied by the Prince and Princess of Wales, Princess Helena, Princess Louisa, and the other members of the Royal family, entered the White Drawing-room at three o'clock. In attendance upon her Majesty were Earl Russell, the Duchess of Wellington, the Marchioness of Ely, Lady Caroline Barrington, Lady Sarah Lindsey, Lady Augusta Stanley, the Hon. Flora Macdonald, the Hon. Emily Cathcart, the Earl of St. Germans, Viscount Sydney, the Marquis of Ailesbury, Colonel the Hon. Sir C. B. Phipps, K.C.B., Viscount Castlerosse, Viscount Bury, Lord Proby, Colonel Sir T. M. Jocelyn, the Hon. A. Lyttelton, Lord Foley, the Earl of Mountcharles, Colonel Wynyard, Major-General F. H. Seymour, and Lieutenant-General the Hon. Sir Edward Cust, K.C.H. Countess Russell, the Earl of Ducie, and Viscount Gough were prevented by unavoidable circumstances from attending the Court.

The Queen wore a black silk dress, with train, trimmed with crape and jet; a Mary Queen of Scots cap, with long veil, the cap ornamented with large diamonds. Her Majesty wore, besides a necklace, cross, and brooch of diamonds, the ribbon and star of the Order of the Garter, the Victoria and Albert Order, and the Order of Louise of Prussia.

The Princess of Wales wore a petticoat of rich white satin, trimmed with plaitings of tulle and blue velvet, and tunic of tulle richly embroidered; train of blue velvet, trimmed with a border of rich blonde. Head-dress of blue velvet, ornamented with diamond stars, feathers and veil; necklace, brooch, and earrings of pearls and diamonds. Orders—Isabella of Portugal and Victoria and Albert Badge.

Princess Helena wore a train of rich green and white silk, trimmed with green and white ruches; petticoat of white glacé covered with grenadine, trimmed with ruches and bunches of pink roses and lilies of the valley. Head-dress, roses and lilies of the valley, with feathers and veil; ornaments, diamonds.

Princess Louisa wore a similar dress and similar ornaments.

Various members of the Corps Diplomatique had the honour of being invited to this Court, but a few were prevented by unavoidable causes from attending.

Previously to the reception the Queen gave an audience to M. Schleiden, the Minister Resident from the Hanse Towns, to which he was introduced by Earl Russell, K.G., and conducted by Lieutenant-General the Hon. Sir Edward Cust, K.C.H. Viscount Palmerston also had an audience of her Majesty. After the reception, Earl Russell and Lord Bloomfield had audiences of the Queen.

Her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Helena, Princess Louisa, and Princess Beatrice, left Buckingham Palace at half-past five o'clock, and returned to Windsor Castle.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales continue at Marlborough House.

On Thursday week the Prince, attended by Major Teesdale, rode out. Later in the day his Royal Highness visited the Exhibition of Photographs in the rooms of the Amateur Photographic Association, York-place, Portman-square. The Princess, attended by the Hon. Mrs. Stonor, drove out.

Yesterday week the Prince and Princess visited Mr. Weigall's studio, in Piccadilly. Their Royal Highnesses also visited the studio of Mr. Leighton, at Orme-square, Bayswater. The Prince attended the House of Lords.

On Saturday last his Royal Highness presided at a meeting of the Council of the Duchy of Cornwall, held at Marlborough House. There were present at the council Sir W. Dunbar, Sir W. J. Alexander, Colonel the Hon. Sir C. B. Phipps, and Lieutenant-General Knollys. Mr. Bateman, the secretary, attended as Clerk of the Council. Subsequently the Prince rode out. The Princess, attended by the Hon. Mrs. Stonor, took a drive. In the evening their Royal Highnesses honoured with their presence the amateur theatrical performance at the Bijou Theatre, Haymarket, in aid of the Guards' Industrial Home.

On Sunday the Prince and and Princess attended Divine service in the Chapel Royal, St. James's. The Lord Bishop of London, the Rev. J. V. Povah, and the Rev. Dr. Temple officiated.

On Monday the Prince, attended by Major Teesdale, hunted with his harriers near Windsor. The Princess, attended by the Hon. Mrs. Stonor, drove out. In the evening their Royal Highnesses were present at the amateur theatrical performance by the officers of the brigade of Guards at the Bijou Theatre, in aid of the Guards' Industrial Home.

The Hon. Mrs. Bruce has succeeded the Hon. Mrs. Stonor as Lady in Waiting to the Princess.

Lieutenant-Colonel Keppell has succeeded Major Teesdale as Equerry in Waiting to the Prince.

PRINCE ARTHUR.

His Royal Highness Prince Arthur, attended by Major Elphinstone, left Buckingham Palace on Wednesday, en route for Folkestone, on a tour in the East. The Prince left London at thirty-five minutes past ten, and travelled in a saloon carriage, attached to the South-Eastern Company's express tidal-train, from Charing-cross to Folkestone Harbour. Mr. Knight had charge of the train, and was thanked by the Prince for the arrangement made for his journey. His Royal Highness was received at Folkestone by Captain Bruce, R.N., and Captain Martleman. The Prince embarked at one o'clock on board a special steamer of the South-Eastern Company's fleet, The Lord Warden, in charge of Commander Paul, and crossed the Channel to Boulogne. A large number of the inhabitants assembled upon the quay and heartily cheered his Royal Highness upon his departure. The Prince very graciously acknowledged the salutations. His Royal Highness passed the night at Amiens and continued his route on Thursday to Paris, and thence to Marseilles, where he will embark in the Government steam-yacht Enchantress, Master Commander Petley, and proceed to Malta, thence to Alexandria. The tour in Egypt, the Holy Land, and other places will probably occupy about two months, during which time almost the same route will be passed over as that taken by the Prince of Wales.

The Hon. C. A. Murray, her Majesty's Minister at the Court of Saxony, and Mrs. Murray, have arrived at Claridge's Hotel.

The Duke and Duchess of Newcastle and family have left town for Clumber Park, Notts.

The Right Hon. the Speaker gave his second Parliamentary full-dress dinner on Saturday evening last to the leading members of the Conservative party, at his official residence in the New Palace, Westminster.

CHURCH AND UNIVERSITIES.

At Cambridge the Chancellor's medal for legal studies has been awarded to R. Swan, LL.B., of Trinity Hall.

The stipend of the Woodwardian Professorship of Geology at Cambridge is increased from £300 to £500 per annum.

On the 22nd ult. the parish church of St. Michael, High Ercall, Shropshire, was reopened, after restoration by Mr. G. E. Street.

Messrs. Ballantine, of Edinburgh, have been commissioned to furnish a stained-glass window, to be erected in Basford Church, Nottingham, as a memorial of the late Duke of Newcastle.

Dr. G. B. Arnold, organist of New College, Oxford, has been appointed organist of Winchester Cathedral, in the place of Dr. Wesley, who was appointed organist of Gloucester Cathedral on Saturday week.

The annual return relating to Queen Anne's Bounty, just published, shows that in the year 1863 the receipts were £258,184 16s. 5d., and the disbursements £250,657 5s. 7d., leaving a balance of £7517 10s. 10d. to be carried on to 1864.

The congregation of Trinity Church, Upper Chelsea, have presented a handsome clock, by Messrs. Dent, with a pair of bronze vases, Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible," and a purse of money to the Rev. R. J. Mooyart, M.A., who has left that parish for the incumbency of St. John's, Ladywood, Birmingham.

The Dean and Chapter of Westminster Abbey have appointed the Rev. Canon Conway Term Lecturer, in the room of the Ven. Archdeacon Wordsworth, D.D. The duty of the Term Lecturer is to preach in the Abbey on Saturday afternoons. The Rev. Canon Hawkins, D.D., is the new Proctor for the Chapter in the place of Archdeacon Wordsworth.

Hanslope Church, Bucks, was reopened on Tuesday week, after the restoration of the chancel at the hands of Mr. Street, architect. The cost of the work hitherto done, amounting to between £500 and £600, has been borne by Mr. R. Walpole, of Hanslope Park (who entertained the company to luncheon after the service), assisted by contributions from his friends.

A meeting of ladies was held on Monday, under the presidency of the Bishop of London, in the drawing-room of London House. The meeting was in connection with the Ladies' Diocesan Association, which has been lately established. The Bishop addressed them on the various objects of religion and charity now going on in the metropolis in which ladies could take a part, dwelling with especial emphasis on the good effect which the presence of lady nurses and lady visitors would have in hospitals and workhouses. Several of these were mentioned where the assistance of ladies was earnestly desired; and, though most of those present were already employed in works of benevolence, still a large proportion gave in their names as willing to engage visiting workhouses and hospitals.

The Bishop of London has appointed the following clergymen to preach in St. Paul's Cathedral on Sunday mornings in this month:—March 5, the Rev. James Lupton, Rector of St. Michael, Queenhithe, and Minor Canon of Westminster Abbey; 12, the Rev. John Edward Kempe, Rector of St. James's, Piccadilly; 19, the Rev. William Aldwin Soames, Vicar of Greenwich and Rural Dean; 26, the Rev. Robert George Baker, Vicar of All Saints', Fulham. The following will be the preachers for the special services during this month:—March 5, the Rev. C. P. Eyre, Rector of Marylebone; 12, the Rev. F. Temple, D.D., Head Master of Rugby School; 19, the Rev. J. Lawrell, Incumbent of St. Matthew's, City-road; 26, the Rev. E. Spooner, Vicar of Heston, Middlesex.

The following preferments and appointments have recently taken place:—Rev. P. W. Loosemore, of St. Augustine's College, Canterbury, to be Canon of Christ Church Cathedral, Montreal, Canada East; Rev. J. J. Merest to be Rector of Dorsington; Rev. E. R. Nussey to be Vicar of Longney; Rev. R. Smith to be Vicar of Nazing, Essex; Rev. A. J. Blagden to be Incumbent of Newbottle, Durham; Rev. J. P. Waldo to be Incumbent of Trinity Chapel, Conduit-street; Rev. J. S. Brownrigg to be Domestic Chaplain to the Duke of St. Albans; Rev. C. E. Donne, Curate of Holy Trinity Church, Paddington, to be Chaplain to Viscount Sydney; Rev. C. Lock, Curate of Puddletown, to be Chaplain to the High Sheriff of Dorset; Rev. J. J. Daniell to be Perpetual Curate of Langley, Fitzurse, Wilts; Rev. W. Eade to be Perpetual Curate of Wolviston, Durham; Rev. R. Lovett to be Perpetual Curate of Bedford Chapel, Exeter; Rev. W. F. Reynolds to be Curate of St. Mary-le-Tower, Ipswich.

The Earl of Harrowby presided at a meeting in the Egyptian Hall, Mansion House, on Tuesday, in aid of the Bishop of London's Fund, which was established in 1863, for the purpose of providing for the spiritual wants of the metropolis and its suburbs. The Bishop of London, in his remarks, stated that the sum in the treasurer's hands on Dec. 31, 1864, including interest on temporary investments, amounted to £100,456. He thought that was tolerably encouraging. At the same date a further sum of £72,000 had been promised, to which, he was authorised to state, would be added between £15,000 and £20,000 more, making in the whole £92,000 promised to the fund. As to what they had done with the money, the report showed that grants had been made for forty-eight missionary clergy, forty ordinary parochial curates, and eighty-eight additional clergy, to the already existing clergy of the diocese of London. The committee were very anxious to intrust the work to the right hands. Many would be ready to accept the appointments, but it would be a great omission on the part of the society if they did not take pains to secure the right persons to be placed over these important districts. Although, therefore, they had made grants for as many as eighty-eight additional clergymen, they had only appointed forty-six up to the end of the year. These forty-six would be sufficient for a population of 92,000; so that, when the remaining portion of the eighty-eight were appointed, provision would have been made for 176,000 people. The whole of the population with which they proposed to deal was 1,000,000, the tenth part of which was 100,000; but it appeared that, by God's blessing, they had in the first year of their labours provided for 176,000 of the spiritually destitute inhabitants of the metropolis. Taking that view of the matter, they had very good reason to think that their efforts had been so far blessed. The Right Rev. Prelate concluded by making an earnest and eloquent appeal to the inhabitants of the city of London to support the objects which they had been called together to promote, and then moved a resolution declaring the need for help. The resolution, supported by Mr. Göschen, M.P., and Sir R. Hanbury, M.P., was carried unanimously. The Archbishop of Canterbury moved a resolution declaring that the social, moral, and spiritual condition of the City was of deep national interest. The motion was seconded by the Earl of Shaftesbury, supported by the Rev. F. J. Rowsell, and unanimously carried. The Dean of St. Paul's moved and Viscount Sandon seconded a resolution, that new lists of subscriptions be opened in the City. The motion was agreed to.

COUNTRY NEWS.

The Right Hon. B. Disraeli, M.P., has accepted the presidency of the Royal Central Bucks Agricultural Association.

The Prince of Wales has appointed John Michael Williams, of Caerhayes Castle, Esq., Sheriff of the county of Cornwall.

Mr. Moore, Liberal, was returned for Tipperary on Monday by a majority of 1158 over Mr. Gill, the favourite of Young Ireland.

The Leeds Mercury records an instance of commercial honour. Mr. John Coates, formerly a teadealer in Hunslet, failed in 1859, and made an assignment under which 6s. in the pound was paid. Last week he paid the whole of his debts in full.

It appears by the new "Directory for Dorset" that of 196 professional and tradespeople in the Island of Portland twenty-one, or nearly one ninth, bear the name of Pearce. When a local corps of artillery volunteers was raised, fifteen out of the sixty men comprising it bore the name of Pearce.

The Sketching Club of Edinburgh has presented the committee for the relief of the sufferers by the late fire in the Theatre Royal with an album consisting of twenty-four highly-finished water colours, and these drawings have been gratuitously mounted. The Scotsman estimates the value of the drawings at £100.

A singular fact was made known at the meeting of the Liverpool Health Committee last week. It was stated that 3200 inhabited places in the borough, for which corporation rates were paid at the time, were omitted from the Census returns of 1861, making, as is calculated, a difference of 20,000 in the population of the borough.

The Levée at Dublin on Tuesday week was, in due course, followed by a Drawingroom at the Castle on Wednesday night, the second for this season. It was attended by nearly all those who were at the Levée, with the addition of ladies. Lady Wodehouse was attired in a magnificent robe of Ophelia poplin, brocaded with the Killarney fern in gold.

The Co-operative Society of Prestwich have set an excellent example. At a special meeting last year it was resolved to put aside 2½ per cent of the net profits of the concern for the purpose of founding a free library in Prestwich; and this resolution, responded to by friends in the neighbourhood, resulted in the opening of a free library on Saturday last.

In Liverpool the births last week were 386, the deaths, 372; in Manchester—births 255, deaths 223; in Salford—births 96, deaths 55; in Birmingham—births 271, deaths 176; in Leeds—births 236, deaths 136; in Bristol—births 113, deaths 84; in Edinburgh—births 118, deaths 111; in Glasgow—births 403, deaths 380; and in Dublin—births 162, deaths, 174.

The Crown authorities have recently taken possession of some curious old gold rings, found at Inverness, as treasure-trove. They are composed of twisted gold wire, without any soldering, but hammered at the ends, so as to be completely fastened. The gold is of the purest quality, and the workmanship, though rude, is not inelegant. They are of great antiquity.

At Cambridge, on Saturday last, two members of a local hunt were each fined 40s. and costs for trespassing on the Great Eastern Railway. It seems that all the members of the hunt had gone upon the line during the chase; but the defendants were selected for prosecution by the railway authorities because they did not quit the line at the first available place of exit, although warned of the consequences of not doing so.

A lady was recently committed to Bristol Gaol, arrested for a debt of £50, when the Governor informed her that in a month he would have to return her as a defaulter, when she would be adjudged a bankrupt, and her property, if any, divided amongst the creditors. She intimated she had no property, and therefore must abide the result. On being searched, according to the rules of the prison, £800 was found secreted in her dress.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.—On Monday evening there was an explosion at the gunpowder-mills of Messrs. Hall, at Faversham. No one was hurt, but a quantity of valuable machinery was destroyed.

The interior of a sugar refinery, eight stories high, near Edinburgh, fell on Monday afternoon, in consequence of the slipping of one of the pillars on which it was supported. Four men were killed, and several others injured.

On Tuesday afternoon two of the boats belonging to the training-ship Worcester, stationed off Erith, were sailing near the sewer outfall, when one of them capsized, and before the other boat could render assistance ten of the cadets were drowned. There were about sixteen boys in each boat at the time, and the remaining six were taken up by a boat and taken ashore, where they were restored to animation. Several heroic acts were performed. One boy, Denton, saved two, but, others clinging to him, he was drowned. Another lad, Beckwith, succeeded in saving two.

Duncan Marshall, the well-known hermit of Kilmun, Argyleshire, died a few days ago at Dunoon, aged eighty-four, and was buried on Tuesday week, according to his desire, underneath a flat on Rushfield-hill, two miles up from the public road, where his hermitage was situated.

Mrs. Thelwall, the widow of John Thelwall, who, with Hardy and Horne Tooke, was tried for high treason and acquitted, died on Monday, in great distress, at Windsor, not leaving funds enough to bury her.

The two men, Wilson and Hammond, who were charged with extensive robberies at Windsor Castle, were tried at the Berks Assizes on Monday, at Reading. Wilson was found guilty, but the Judge deferred sentence. Hammond was acquitted.

"CAUGHT."

THE title of a picture often becomes attached to it fortuitously, and some pictures, without having their character at all tainted, pass by several aliases. The title borne by the clever and humorous picture (see page 205) by Mr. Erskine Nicol, in the Exhibition of Modern Pictures in Pall-mall, is given at the head of this article, and it certainly must be admitted to be (without intending any play upon words) a taking one. When pictures pass through the hands of large dealers, more experienced than the painters of those pictures in fishing for public favour, the bait is often rendered more irresistible by the simple process of rechristening. But, besides the emphatic monosyllable "Caught!" the catalogue contains the additional intimation that we have here a portrait of "Jim Sourne, a celebrated sportsman on the Kilkenny Lakes." The name Kilkenny, however, is perhaps a misprint for Killarney. At all events, there are no considerable lakes in the county mentioned. Whether, too, the resemblance to the celebrity named is real or only imaginary we cannot say, for we have not the honour of that gentleman's acquaintance. But this we do happen to know, that the artist himself simply styled his work "Piscators"—a title, by-the-way, not without humour in its refinement as applied to such a pair of very rough Irish diamonds; and we know, further, that he merely sets forth his picture as representing a keen angler in the act of killing a good fish.

Of the nationality of this angler (whether or not it be Mr. James Sourne) there can be no sort of doubt. The painter, though a member of the Royal Scottish Academy, is, we should say—if we may say it without offence—himself a cognate Celt; since no native artist or author could show more intimate knowledge of, or complete sympathy with, the genuine Hibernian. Mr. Nicol's affection for the Patlander is constant as it is deep; and he has established quite a speciality by a long series of representations of the poor sons of Erin. In these works he has not only depicted with unrivalled drollery the bright side of their character, and the paintable manifestations of their eccentric yet matchless wit; but, also, with equally graphic power, and sometimes tragic intensity, the fierce passions awakened, or profound despair induced by their too-often hapless and helpless condition. Who but Mr. Nicol could compress into a face so much Irish character; an expression so strenuously alert, yet so collectedly restrained; a grin so sardonic, and of such ineffable self-complacency, as we find in the Piscator Major before us?

By the end of this week, and only a month after the meeting of Parliament, there will have been actually passed a bill, the first product of the Legislative season. On one evening the House of Lords concentrated all its force in passing this measure through a stage, and then, as it were affrighted, adjourned at once; their sitting having occupied eighteen minutes, the first fifteen of which were passed in a solemn silence which sometimes prevails during the quarter of an hour in which the Upper House is nerving itself for the exertion which it has usually to go through before the arrival of dinner-time. It is a pleasing sight to behold all the machinery of one of the Estates of the Realm brought into action, as it were, to break a fly upon its magnificent wheels; for this is preserving the very essence of the Constitutionalism under which it is our happiness to live. The fact of the first measure of the Session being an Irish one, is, naturally, very gratifying, although it be only an amendment of an "Amendment Act" of last year. It is only in keeping with that devotion to Irish affairs which has marked the proceedings of both Houses this year, and which seems to have inverted the order of things which was desired by the Repeal party of the sister kingdom, and, in its way, must be more of a triumph for them; for, whereas they sought to have an Irish Parliament sitting in College-green, Dublin, they have at present an Irish Parliament sitting in Palace-yard, London; a state of things typical of the conquest of England by Ireland. To be sure, there is an objection to this, and that was very pathetically stated one night this week by an Irish member—namely, that he and his colleagues have to cross the Irish Channel in order to take part in this triumph; a transit by which, according to the insinuation of the hon. member, they are physically most grievously discomposed.

It is, however, seriously, scarcely an exaggeration to say that Irish matters have almost exclusively occupied the attention of Parliament this Session. Before the solemn debate (an adjournment from one night to another of a discussion being a test of solemnity) on Mr. Hennessy's motion on the state of Ireland, there had been, as has been recorded, continual Irish dissertations, and an Irish member had almost monopolised the floor of the house. Nevertheless, when it was proposed to extend the exercitation originated by Mr. Hennessy from Friday to Monday, it was with positive alacrity that Lord Palmerston acceded to what at one time, not so long ago, would have been resisted as unreasonable. To be sure, the leader of the House and the First Minister was aware that, as far as he and the Government were concerned, there was no particular hurry; and, besides, he probably felt that the very worst plan for putting an end to an Irish debate is to attempt to stop it, and therefore in such a case it is always best to act on the proverb which recommends the policy of giving certain persons rope enough. The curious part of the story, however, is that, whereas Irish questions have taken and held the pas in the House lately, the discussions have become on each occasion less like Irish debates than ever before has been the case. In the first place, there was an acceptance of the propriety of bringing the state of Ireland before Parliament, which was general and hearty; and the reality of which was proved by the intervention of speakers on the subject who are not much, if at all, in the habit of dealing with matters of that kind. Notably, it was a surprise that Mr. Gladstone should be the person selected to reply to Mr. Hennessy's opening speech. Then, who would have expected Mr. Lowe and Lord Robert Cecil to present themselves early in an Irish debate, and both of them, as it were, to decharacterise themselves—to lay aside their causticity, sarcasm, irony, and, be it said, their bitterness of speech—in order to illustrate a question which they had evidently studied for the nonce. Indeed, Mr. Lowe put the matter as high as it could be put, when he declared that every other social and political question now faded in interest and importance before that of Ireland. Nay, even the lesser Irish members got out of the groove of provincialism, and talked broad principles, notwithstanding that it was asserted by those English members who were more ruthless than the general body that the real object of the motion was to get a stream of public money injected into Ireland. People wondered what had come to Mr. Gregory on this occasion. Although diffuse in his style, he is not accustomed to talk so wildly and inconsequentially as he did in this debate; and he might have been more judicious—the proximate general election notwithstanding—if he had spared himself the imputation of being nearly absurd, when he intimated that, on the whole, the real remedy for the evils of Ireland was the continuation of the Galway Packet contract. It was not until Mr. Roebuck, who followed the example of those whom, no doubt, he considers co-statesmen with himself, came in the debate, at a happy hour for an audience, that it took a combative turn. Of course, everyone knows what Mr. Roebuck's specifics are for governing all mankind except that splendid, faultless, abstract Englishman, of whom he constantly gives us to understand he is himself the type.. This time he pronounced for dealing with the Fenian party "by the sword;" and, so far as we could make out, he proposed to bring the two other factions (not parties in the sense in which he spoke of them) in Ireland to their senses by compelling them to hear a series of discourses on their misdeeds and ill-conditioned spirit from himself; at least, so we understood his admission that he was prepared and willing to discuss their grievances with them. Everybody knows how Mr. Roebuck discusses. But, for once, the member for Sheffield met with a foeman worthy of his steel. He had attacked Sir Hugh Cairns; and as it appears that if you scratch that most polished gentleman, so high-class English in his appearance, and demeanour, and language, you, after all, come to the hot-tempered and combative Irishman; why, he came out in a style which must have rather astonished Mr. Roebuck, and probably caused him inwardly to devote the hard-hitting and fearless member for Belfast to the fate to which he had decreed the Fenians. It is quite certain that Sir Hugh Cairns has this year developed qualities which entitle him to be elected leader of all the Irish parties. The most curious feature of this Irish debate, perhaps, was that led by the Lord Advocate; Scotch members interposed, and, in an ex cathedrâ way, begged to suggest the example of their country in getting over the obnoxiousness of a political union with England, which they seemed to admit they had found by no means so disadvantageous to their countrymen as to cause them very bitterly to regret it. In fact, one could not help fancying that there was in their minds a feeling that, after all, England was practically annexed to Scotland in the time of James I., and that the Union was therefore but a shadowy grievance.

Looking back to the debate which arose on Sir John Pakington's motion for an inquiry into the condition of the Committee of the Privy Council for Education, one wonders whether it would not have ended in an accomplished "count out" had it not been for the speech of Mr. Lowe. This right hon. gentleman seems to be inspired this year. He has never been much of a volunteer talker, being conscious that he had no reputation to build up as a debater, for he proved his right to that distinction at the very outset of his Parliamentary career. Now, however, he has adopted the exactly opposite line; and on two evenings running has enchained the House by speeches which were, of course, distinguished by masterly logical reasoning and felicitous illustration, but which were still more remarkable for the earnest spirit which they exhibited. Hitherto there was something cold, hard, mocking, in all Mr. Lowe's speeches; but now he seems as if he spoke because he felt. But for him it appears as if it would have been impossible for a discussion to have survived such a succession as Sir J. Pakington, Mr. Walter (whose efforts to be brisk are as bad as positive dulness), Mr. Adderley, and, in culmination, Sir Laurence Palk. Indeed, there was an effort to cut short the whole affair by counting when the sitting boasted but some eleven members, after Mr. Lowe's speech, which ought on all abstract principles of conviction to have crushed the motion out; but the Government having promised to accede to it they could not (as otherwise they probably gladly would have done) take advantage of such a means to get rid of it. Indeed, it could not have been got rid of, only postponed, and it was more than useless to re-enact the scene of boredom which had nearly proved too much in its first phase for the patience of the House. So Mr. Brand whipped vigorously, and the discussion dragged along for hours until it took an Irish—ordinary, not this Session—Irish—turn in the hands of Mr. Hennessy, who must have his fingers in every Parliamentary pie, and who brought up Mr. Whalley, with one of his particularly Protestant protests, when, of course, there was an end of the matter.

On the whole, it may be said that the House of Commons has settled down into its regular Sessional habits, and is carrying on in just the old way. There have been even begun those after-twelve-o'clock proceedings, in which staid and business members are so mixed up with young members in white waistcoats who are finishing their evenings, that things get into knots like that into which Mr. Kinnaird's motion to engraft a provision on the Courts of Law Bill to build lodgments for the persons expelled from the site of the proposed temple to Themis got, when nobody seemed to know what was the question on which there was to be a division; when four members insisted on "telling" on one side, and which eventuated in a lapse of the House by efflux of members. In these little scenes, Mr. Lygon, who has elected himself leader of the Conservative party from half-past twelve every night, figures with his old persistency, and he has already shown that he does not propose to give up this his special mission this year.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

Earl Granville, replying to the Marquis of Clanricarde, said the Government did not intend this Session to introduce a measure on the subject of oyster fisheries.

On the motion of Lord Redesdale, it was ordered that no petitions against private bills should be heard before a Committee unless the petition should have been reported in the Private Bill Office seven days before the second reading.

Earl Granville, in reply to the Marquis of Clanricarde, said the Government had determined to have copies made of the Carew and Carte MSS. in the Lambeth and Bodleian Libraries, that they might be sent to Ireland.

Lord Taunton having presented some petitions from the city of Melbourne and other places in the colony of Victoria praying for the immediate and permanent abolition of convict transportation to Australia, Earl Granville said the question was finally and satisfactorily settled. The discovery of a fertile tract of land between Western Australia and Victoria rendered the continuation of transportation to Western Australia impossible, and within a period of three years from the date of the Colonial Secretary's despatch transportation thither would cease. A few observations were made on the same subject by Lords Cranworth and Redesdale.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

Sir G. Grey, in reply to a question, said that prisoners at Pentonville were only allowed the use of such books as were included in the library, but that the late Governor had departed from the rule, and that it was under those circumstances the friends of George Victor Townley, the murderer of Miss Goodwin, had been permitted to send him "Silvio Pellico" and "Gil Blas."

Sir G. Grey said that it was the intention of the Lord Chancellor to introduce a bill to register titles to land in Ireland.

The Courts of Justice Building Bill was considered as amended, and ordered for third reading.

The order for going into Committe on the Pilotage Order Confirmation Bill was discharged, and the bill ordered to be referred to a Select Committee.

The Industrial-Exhibitions Bill, the Common Law Courts (Fees) Bill, and the Yarmouth Borough, Haven, and Port Bill were read a second time.

The Bank of Ireland Bill, the Bankruptcy and Insolvency (Ireland) Act Amendment Bill, and the Election Petitions Act (1848) Amendment Bill were read a third time and passed.

Leave was given to Sir G. Bowyer to bring in a bill to enable the Benchers of the Inns of Court to appoint judicial committees in certain cases, and to give the necessary power to such committees.

Mr. Murphy took his seat for the city of Cork.

Mr. Layard, in reply to Sir H. Verney, said that an extract which it was alleged had been taken from a despatch of Earl Russell of Jan. 27, in regard to Austria, Prussia, and the duchies, was a pure invention.

THE CONDITION OF IRELAND.

The adjourned debate on the state of Ireland was resumed by Mr. Roebuck, who denied the indictment of misgovernment by England, and charged the Irish members with whining for money instead of endeavouring to help themselves. He admitted, however, that, up to Roman Catholic emancipation, England had been a cruel stepmother to Ireland. Since that period England had done all in her power to place Ireland upon terms of perfect equality with herself. Ireland was not a separate kingdom, but was a third of the whole empire; and it was absurd to set up a distinction between Irishmen, Englishmen, and Scotchmen, as all were equal, in every respect, in the eye of the Constitution. He recommended the leaders of public opinion in Ireland to forget their mutual animosities and to work cordially for the benefit of their common country. The time had long since passed for Protestant domination, and Roman Catholics had no longer any substantial grievances to complain of. He considered that the peasantry and their clergy were the blind leading the blind. He would exterminate the Fenians with the sword; and he recommended the Protestants not to be constantly quarrelling with their Chief Secretary.

Lord Dunkellin denied that the Irish members had come to the house with a mendicant whine, and contended that an application for a loan of public money secured upon the land of the large proprietors was not susceptible of such an interpretation. He regretted to say that, in consequence of the want of employment, there was a widespread distrust and dissatisfaction in Ireland; but he maintained that the allegation that there was disloyalty was untrue.

Sir H. Cairns replied to the comments of Mr. Roebuck, and repudiated with indignation the assertion that Ireland appeared at the bar of the House in the attitude of a mendicant. The hon. and learned gentleman commented with the same severity upon the recommendations of Mr. Roebuck, and assured him that, for his own part, he would neither ask his advice nor follow his example.

Mr. Lowe was not disposed to regard the large emigration from Ireland in the light of an evil, as she had no manufactures on which to employ her surplus population. The climate of Ireland appeared to be fatal to agriculture, and there seemed to be no other alternative than to allow her to become a pastoral country, unless, indeed, some portion of the abounding capital of England which had been recklessly offered to the Australian colonies could be diverted to it. He did not believe that the population of Ireland was overtaxed, nor did he believe that any measures which Parliament could adopt would stay the exodus of the population to a foreign shore. The great evils which aggravated her condition were the Established Church and the manner in which the government was administered by identifying the Lord Lieutenant with whatever political party had to be in power. At this moment the Irish difficulty was the question of questions to the empire, and it was the duty of all parties to combine to ameliorate her condition. She was the single drop of bitterness in the cup of our otherwise overflowing prosperity; and it behoved England, for her own reputation abroad, and for her honour as well as her safety at home, to do all in her power to promote the welfare of Ireland and to heal the wound of centuries.

Mr. O'Reilly adverted to the circumstance that the taxation of Ireland was felt to be oppressive because it was levied upon the necessaries of life. He also deprecated, as a source of irritation and injustice, the maintenance in Ireland of a costly Church Establishment for the exclusive use of an infinitesimal portion of the population.

The Lord Advocate pointed out that Scotland contributed more to Imperial taxation than Ireland, although the population was much smaller and the area less. The moral to be drawn from this was that Scotland had developed her own resources, while she had not been distracted by religious or political discord. He admitted, however, that Scotland had not had to contend, as Ireland had, with long periods of misrule and injustice.

Mr. M'Mahon thought the Lord Advocate ought to have moved an amendment to the effect that the House rejoiced to hear that the population of Ireland had declined. In his (Mr. M'Mahon's) opinion the condition of Ireland was to be attributed to the persistent misrule of the Government. The agricultural classes had no security for the tenure of their land, the staple manufacture of the country (spirits) was taxed to a prohibitory extent, while tobacco was not allowed to be grown nor sugar to be manufactured from beetroot.

Mr. Dunlop enforced on Irish members the necessity of self-reliance, and contrasted the condition of Scotland with an Established Church which had not the sympathy of the majority of the public, with Ireland under similar circumstances.

Mr. Lefroy opposed the motion, and defended the Irish Church on the ground that the evils of absenteeism would be much aggravated if the Protestant clergy were also banished from the country. He did not believe that the landlords of Ireland were responsible for the emigration of the people, and read a letter from the agent of Lord Palmerston stating that, although the noble Lord was a generous and improving landlord, many of his tenants were emigrating.

After some observations from Mr. Pollard Urquhart, Sir H. Bruce made several suggestions for the remission of local burdens in Ireland, and observed that as the constabulary there was not a police force, but an army of occupation, the expense of its maintenance ought to be borne by the Consolidated Fund.

Sir G. Grey said the debate had elicited useful suggestions and opinions, which were calculated to do much good in Ireland by inspiring all classes to work in harmony for the common good. He was quite willing to admit that the condition of Ireland was deserving of sympathy, and that Parliament had a direct interest in examining into that condition, with the view of considering whether any remedial measures could be devised for her benefit. He did not believe that the land question was at the root of the evil; but if the Irish people would, forgetting religious and political discord, combine for the improvement of their country and then come to Parliament with any well-digested and reasonable claim for assistance, he was persuaded that Parliament would not ignore their claim.

Sir S. Northcote urged that the state of Ireland was such as to require serious consideration on the part of the House and the Government, and, in noticing the questions to which attention might most usefully be directed, referred to the subject of taxation. There was no doubt, he said, that the taxation of Ireland had greatly increased of late years, and that in a much larger proportion than in England. In considering the means of relieving her, however, he should be decidedly opposed to any plan of discriminating duties between the two countries. He was also of opinion that it would be unwise to incur a national expenditure for the purpose of creating employment in any particular part of the empire unless upon reproductive works. The right hon. gentleman recommended Mr. Hennessy to be satisfied with the discussion which his motion had elicited, and not to press the House to divide on an abstract proposition upon which such a conflict of opinion prevailed.

Mr. Caird advocated reproductive loans, but not for the reclamation of waste lands.

The discussion was continued by Mr. Peacocke and Mr. Blake.

Lord Palmerston observed that undoubtedly there was distress in many parts of the country, and that it was caused in great part by three successive bad harvests. In the abstract it was of course a matter of regret to see the population of any country leaving their native shore; but he reminded the House that a few years since the great evil of Ireland was said to be a redundant population, and that emigration was advocated as a remedy. The peculiarity of the climate had no doubt a great deal to do with the non-success of the people in agricultural pursuits, and how could any artificial means counteract the laws of nature, or keep in one country a population which found it more to its advantage to emigrate to another. The true way to keep the people at home was to give them inducements to remain. This might be done by attracting capital to the country; and this would not be difficult if capitalists were persuaded that life and property would be as safe in Ireland as in England or in Scotland. With regard to what was termed "tenant-right," he looked upon it as landlords' money, and little short of confiscation. He assured the House that any proposal founded upon a reasonable prospect of ameliorating the condition of Ireland would receive the careful consideration of the Government; and that if a proposal were made for reappointing the Committee on Irish taxation with an enlarged order of references, they would receive it with an earnest desire to find some means of assisting the Irish people to extricate themselves from their present difficulties.

Mr. Hennessy said that, as the noble Lord had not given a definite promise to revive the Irish Committee of last Session, he had no alternative but to divide the House.

A division then ensued, when the motion was negatived by 107 to 31.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Tuesday.

The House sat for a few minutes only, and, having read the Civil Bill Costs Procedure (Ireland) Act, 1864, Amendment Bill a second time, adjourned until Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

Mr. Dillwyn gave notice for Tuesday, March 28, of a motion to the effect that, in the opinion of the House, the present position of the Irish Church Establishment was unsatisfactory, and called for the earnest attention of the Government.

Metropolitan Sewage and Essex Reclamation Bill.—Sir W. Russell moved the second reading of this bill. He argued that the plan of Messrs. Napier and Hope was in all respects the best, and would satisfactorily dispose of the sewage.—Mr. Doulton seconded the motion.—Mr. Crawford moved the postponement of the bill for two months, to give time for inquiry into the whole subject by the Committee to be proposed by Lord R. Montagu.—Mr. Tite supported the bill, and charged the Corporation of London with having a personal feeling in the matter.—Mr. Caird was in favour of sending the bill to a Committee.—Lord R. Montagu argued that the scheme was not the best which could have been adopted. He thought the proposal to refer the bill to a mixed Select Committee was a fair one.—Mr. Ayrton opposed the postponement of the bill, and said the best way would be to send it to a Select Committee of ten members, half to be chosen by the Committee of Selection and half by the House.—After some further discussion, in which Mr. Rose, Mr. Cowper, and Mr. Norris took part, Mr. Crawford withdrew his amendment on the understanding that Mr. Ayrton's proposition was accepted.—The bill was then read a second time, and ordered to be referred to a Select Committee of ten, as proposed by Mr. Ayrton.

EDUCATION.

Sir J. Pakington moved, "That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the constitution of the Committee of Council on Education, and the system under which the business of the office is conducted." He had simply two objects in view—first, the reorganisation of the department intrusted with the superintendence of the education of the people, and the making it better adapted to the functions it had to discharge; secondly, the reorganisation of the department in such a mode as to enable it to give assistance not only to the wealthy districts which now enjoyed its benefits, but also to the whole of England. He criticised the present constitution of the educational department, and contended that it was not satisfactory. He argued that the business of the department was to educate the whole of the country, and that at present it failed to accomplish. He would accept the amendment of which Mr. Walter had given notice as an addition to his own resolution, on the condition that he was not pledged to carry out any particular plan.

Mr. Walter moved the addition to the resolution of the following:—"And also into the best mode of extending the benefits of Government inspection and the Parliamentary grants to schools at present unassisted by the State." He pointed out that in this work much yet remained to be done. Commissioners had reported on several occasions and made several suggestions, which it would be for the Committee to consider.

Mr. Lowe said the great object of the Committee of Council was to see that schools had good teachers. If they determined to assist all unassisted schools, then the public revenue would be abandoned to every person calling himself a schoolmaster and setting up a school. They must, in fact, get all the knowledge possible of the teachers. He contended that the object which Sir J. Pakington had in view was simply to change the whole educational system of the country. There was abundant information as to the department in the hands of members, and it was represented in the House of Lords by the President of the Council, and in that house by the Vice-President, and he contended that there was no necessity for any such inquiry as that proposed.

Mr. Adderley supported the motion.

Sir L. Palk believed the present system inflicted injustice on the rural parishes, and urged that inquiry was necessary.

Mr. F. Powell supported the motion.

Mr. Bruce said it was not the intention of the Government to oppose the motion and amendment. The proposed inquiry might serve to restore harmony in respect to education; but he did not think it would elicit much information which they did not now possess as to the constitution and working of the department. He criticised the suggestions which had been made, and contended that few of them would be found of much avail.

The debate was continued by Lord R. Cecil, Mr. Ayrton, and Mr. G. Hardy.

Mr. H. Seymour wished to move as an addition to the order of reference, "To inquire whether some portion of the duties of the Department of Science and Art ought not to be transferred to the Committee of Council on Education."

The Speaker ruled that this amendment could not be put then.

Mr. Henley supported the appointment of the Committee.

Mr. W. E. Forster protested against the limitations proposed to be put on the inquiries of the Committee.

After a few words from Mr. Hennessy, Mr. Whalley, and Mr. Scourfield,

The motion, with the addition of Mr. Walter's amendment, was agreed to.

THE NEW LAW COURTS.

Mr. Kinnaird moved that it be an instruction to the Select Committee on the Courts of Justice Concentration (Site) Bill that they have power to make provision for appropriating or obtaining sites, and for the erection of lodging-houses or other suitable dwellings for the working classes proposed to be displaced by the said bill.

The motion was seconded by Mr. Hennessy and opposed by Mr. Cowper, the Attorney-General, and Lord Palmerston, who urged that the Committee had no such power as that which Mr. Kinnaird sought to confer upon them.

After considerable discussion, Mr. Hennessy suggested a verbal amendment, to the effect that it be an instruction to the Committee to inquire into the practicability and expediency of making provision for the working classes to be displaced by the proposed new buildings.

On a division, the amendment was rejected by 18 to 8.

As the division showed that there were not forty members present, the Speaker declared the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

The Common Law Courts Fees Bill passed through Committee.

The Felony and Misdemeanour Evidence and Practice Bill was read a third time and passed.

Mr. Clifford obtained leave to bring in a bill for the abolition of fines for non-attendance at a place of Divine worship on Sundays.

Mr. Alderman Salomons obtained leave to bring in a bill to facilitate the traffic of the metropolis and to improve the communications across the River Thames by opening the present toll-bridges for the free use of the public.

Sir Fitzroy Kelly's bill for the amendment of the law of evidence was read a second time, the discussion upon the various provisions of the measure being postponed until the Committee.

On the motion of Mr. Dunlop, leave was given to introduce a bill to improve the registration of writs relative to land in Scotland, and to amend the law relative to inhibitions and adjudications.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

The Duke of Cleveland took the oaths and his seat on succeeding to the title.

The Civil Bill Courts Procedure (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.

Earl Stanhope presented a petition from the trustees of the British Museum complaining of the utter inadequacy of the present space for the accommodation of the rapidly-growing collections. He intimated that he should call attention to the subject upon a future occasion.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

Mr. Baines postponed his motion in reference to the borough franchise from the 5th of April to the 3rd of May.

Lord C. Paget, in reply to Sir J. Pakington, made a statement in reference to the rumoured loss of the frigate Galatea. It was not true that that vessel had foundered, although there was reason to fear that a large portion of her crew had perished in a storm, while attempting to save a boat and one man in her, off the Norfolk coast.

The Courts of Justice Building Bill was read a third time and passed

ARMING THE NAVY.

Mr. H. BAILLIE moved that a Select Committee be appointed to inquire whether her Majesty's ships were at present armed in a manner suited to the necessities and requirements of modern warfare.

Sir JOHN HAY seconded the motion.

The Marquis of HARTINGTON thought it would be a waste of time to assent to the appointment of a Committee upon a subject that had been so recently and so fully investigated by Committees of that House. The question was eminently a scientific and practical one, not at all suited for a Committee of the House, and, if any inquiry were entered upon, the Committee would find themselves at once involved in a multitude of questions with inventors.

General PEEL admitted that the Navy was not sufficiently armed, but he objected to the appointment of a Committee, because he believed the members of the House of Commons were wholly incompetent to determine which was the best gun.

Mr. G. P. Bentinck, Sir F. Smith, and Mr. Peacock supported the motion.

Lord C. PAGET expressed himself perfectly willing to go into the lobby with Mr. Baillie if he thought a Committee of the House could procure the best gun for the Navy; but he had seen so much of Select Committees that he believed that remitting the question to the consideration of such a tribunal would be to retard instead of to facilitate its progress. At present the Government were engaged in making 200 6½ tons 7-inch rifle guns which would pierce the Warrior target through and through at 200 yards. These would do for broadside purposes, and, eventually, he had no doubt that we should be able to carry 12-ton guns round our ships; but at present we had not been able to attain that point. In addition, a requisition had been made to the War Office to supply as many 12-ton guns as the Agincourt, the Northumberland, the Bellerophon, the Royal Alfred, the Prince Albert, and the Scorpion could carry. If, however, he were asked whether the fleet would then be armed as he would wish to see it, he should unhesitatingly say that it was not.

On a division, the motion was negatived by 57 to 22.

In the account of the intercolonial rifle-match in Australia, which accompanied the portraits of the Victoria champions, in our Paper of Feb. 11, the name of Captain Thomas Couchman was misprinted as "Courtman."

The improvements which have marked the previous editions of Debrett's "Peerage" and "Baronetage" have been extended to the two volumes for the present year. The heraldic notes and descriptions have been largely augmented; and the titles borne by numerous Peers, different from those by which they are usually known, and by virtue of which they sit in the House of Lords, are so given as readily to ensure identity. The "Baronetage" is illustrated as amply as the "Peerage," each coat of arms being fully blazoned; and a Knightage has this year been added to the work.

Timbs's "Year-Book of Facts in Science and Art for 1865" has just made its appearance. Like its predecessors, it is crammed with good things; being a well-digested compendium of the most important discoveries and improvements of the past year, in mechanics and the useful arts, natural philosophy, electricity, chemistry, zoology and botany, geology and mineralogy, meteorology and astronomy. It is ornamented with a finely-engraved portrait—an excellent likeness—of Major-General Sabine, president of the Royal Society. Mindful of the proverb that "good wine needs no bush," Mr. Timbs occupies no space with prefatory remarks, but plunges at once into the midst of his subject, having full trust that the excellence of his previous works of a like kind will prove an efficient passport to public favour for this handy book of the year's doings in science and art.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

ALTHOUGH money for commercial purposes is very abundant and lower in price, all Home Stocks have continued in a most inactive state, and the quotations have not been supported. The Government brokers have purchased several parcels of stock for the reduction of the National Debt; nevertheless, the supply afloat is large. The advices from India, to the effect that a loan of £10,000,000 will be necessary this year for public works, have had considerable influence upon the market.

In Lombard-street the best bills are now done as follow:—

Thirty days' bills	4½	per cent.	Four months' bills	4¾ ⅞ per cent.
Sixty days' bills	4½	"	Six months' bills	5 5½ "
Three months' bills	4½	"

On Thursday the directors of the Bank of England reduced their minimum rate of discount to 4½ per cent.

On the Continent money is in moderate request.

About £500,000 in bullion has arrived from various quarters; but the quantity of gold sent into the Bank of England has been trifling. About £100,000 has been shipped to Spain and the East Indies.

The Council for India have disposed of £300,000 in bills on the various Presidencies, at previous rates.

The funds on Thursday were very firm:—Consols, for Money, were 88⅞ 89; for the present Account, 89; for April, 89¼ ⅜; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 86⅞ 87⅛ ex div.; Exchequer Bills, 3s. to 6s. prem.; and India Five per Cents, 103⅝ ⅞.

The market for nearly all Foreign Securities has ruled heavy, and prices have had a drooping tendency. The demand for Joint-stock Bank Shares has ruled somewhat inactive; in Colonial Government Securities only a moderate business has been transacted; and the Miscellaneous Market has ruled inactive.

The transactions in the Railway Share Market have been very moderate, and the quotations have not been supported.

British Possessions.—Bombay, Baroda, and Central India, 100⅞; East Indian, 100⅞; Grand Trunk of Canada, First Preference, 65½; Great Indian Peninsula, 100⅞; Great Western of Canada, 7½; Ditto, New, 5⅝; Madras Five per Cent, 100⅛; Scinde, 99.

Foreign.—Bahia and San Francisco, 16; Great Luxembourg, 12½; San Paulo, 17½.

The return of the Bank of England for the week ending March 1 shows the following results when compared with the preceding statement:—

An increase of circulation of	£279,102	An increase of bullion of	£201,134
An increase of public deposits of ..	189,045	An increase of rest of	239,159
An increase of other deposits of....	17,446	A decrease of reserve of	72,631
An increase of securities of	513,618

The total circulation is £20,381,080. Public deposits amount to £6,854,409; and private deposits to £14,158,331. Securities are £30,424,109; and the stock of bullion is £14,401,367.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, Feb. 27.—Our market, to-day, was rather scantily supplied with English wheat, and the demand for most kinds ruled steady, at full quotations. Fine foreign wheats have changed hands somewhat freely, at extreme rates; but inferior kinds have met a dull inquiry. Grinding barley has moved off freely, other kinds slowly, at late currencies. No change has taken place in the value of malt. The trade has continued in a sluggish state. Oats have maintained their previous value; but the inquiry for them has not increased. The value of beans has ruled a shade lower; but peas have commanded very full prices. Both English and foreign flour has been in fair request, on former terms.

March 1.—The transactions in all kinds of produce to-day were very moderate. Compared with Monday, however, no change took place in prices.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 38s. to 40s.; ditto, white, 39s. to 45s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 38s. to 40s.; rye, 28s. to 30s.; grinding barley, 23s. to 25s.; distilling ditto, 25s. to 28s.; malting ditto, 26s. to 34s.; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 54s. to 60s.; brown ditto, 47s. to 50s.; Kingston and Ware, 56s. to 60s.; Chevalier, 60s. to 62s.; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 17s. to 22s.; potato ditto, 19s. to 24s.; Youghal and Cork, black, 16s. to 19s.; ditto, white, 17s. to 21s.; tick beans, 32s. to 34s.; grey peas, 33s. to 35s.; maple, 37s. to 40s.; white, 36s. to 39s.; boilers, 39s. to 40s. per quarter. Town-made flour, 35s. to 40s.; town households, 33s. to 35s.; country marks, 25s. to 32s. per 280 lb.; American, 19s. to 25s. per barrel; French, 30s. to 32s. per sack.

Seeds.—Clover seed supports the late advance, with a fair inquiry. Most other seeds rule about stationary. The demand for cakes is inactive.

Linseed, English, crushing, 60s. to 63s.; Calcutta, 56s. to 58s.; hempseed, 41s. to 43s. per quarter; coriander, 22s. to 24s. per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 10s. to 12s.; white ditto, 8s. to 10s.; tares, 9s. to 10s. per bushel; English rapeseed, 74s. to 76s. per quarter; Linseed cakes, English, £10 to £11 0s.; ditto, foreign, £9 10s. to £11 0s.; rape cakes, £5 10s. to £6 5s. per ton; canary, 44s. to 50s. per quarter; red clover seed, 62s. to 120s.; white ditto, 56s. to 88s. per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 6½d. to 7d.; of household ditto, 5d. to 6d. per 4 lb. loaf.

Averages of Grain.—Wheat, 38s. 2d.; barley, 29s. 0d.; oats, 20s. 3d.

English Grain Sold Last Week.—Wheat, 79,804; barley, 54,517; oats, 9806 quarters.

Tea.—The demand for most kinds is only moderate. In prices, however, no change has taken place.

Sugar.—Raw qualities are quite as dear as last week, with a fair inquiry. The stock is 98,394 tons, against 69,934 tons last year. Refined goods move off freely, at 43s. per cwt. for common brown lumps.

Coffee.—Most kinds move off slowly, but at full prices. Stock, 9982 tons, against 10,193 tons in 1864.

Rice.—The demand is steady, at full currencies. Stock, 50,612 tons, against 53,503 tons.

Provisions.—We have to report a dull sale for Irish butter, on lower terms. Foreign qualities, however, support previous rates. Bacon is firm, at 65s. per cwt. for Waterford on board. Other provisions are unaltered.

Tallow.—P.Y.C., on the spot, moves off slowly, at 40s. 6d. per cwt. The stock is 45,376 casks, against 58,828 ditto last year. Rough fat, 2s. 1½d. per 8 lb.

Oils.—Linseed oil is selling at £32 10s. to £32 15s.; rape, £41 10s. to £44 10s.; olive, £49 to £53; and fine palm, £36 10s. French turpentine, 66s. 6d. per cwt.

Spirits.—Rum is a slow inquiry, but not cheaper. Brandy and grain spirits support former terms.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £4 10s. to £5 10s.; clover, £5 10s. to £6 10s.; and straw, £1 7s. to £1 14s. per load.

Coals.—Newcastle, 13s. 6d. to 16s. 6d.; Sunderland, 18s. to 20s.; Scotch, Welsh, and Yorkshire, 21s. to 22s. per ton.

Hops.—The demand for most kinds is steady, and prices are well supported. The show of samples is very moderate.

Wool.—The public sales of colonial wool have been commenced. As yet, the biddings have been by no means active.

Potatoes.—The supplies are moderate and the demand is steady, at from 85s. to 145s. per ton.

Metropolitan Cattle Market (Thursday, March 2).—There was about an average supply of beasts on offer here to-day, and most breeds moved off slowly at Monday's currency. The extreme figure for the best Scots was 5s. 4d. per 8 lb. We were fairly supplied with sheep. On the whole, the mutton trade was inactive, at barely late rates. The best Downs, in the wool, sold at 6s. 6d.; out of the wool, 5s. 2d. to 5s. 4d. per 8 lb. Lambs were inactive, at 6s. 8d. to 7s. per 8 lb. Calves were in short supply and fair request, at full quotations—viz., from 4s. 6d. to 5s. 8d. per 8 lb. The pork trade was steady. In milch cows very little was doing.

Per 8 lb. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s. 8d. to 4s. 2d.; second quality ditto, 4s. 4d. to 4s. 8d.; prime large oxen, 4s. 10d. to 5s. 0d.; prime Scots, &c., 5s. 0d. to 5s. 4d.; coarse and inferior sheep, 4s. 6d. to 5s. 2d.; second quality ditto, 5s. 4d. to 5s. 8d.; prime coarse-woolled sheep, 5s. 10d. to 6s. 2d.; prime Southdown ditto, 6s. 4d. to 6s. 6d.; large coarse calves, 4s. 6d. to 5s. 2d.; prime small ditto, 5s. 4d. to 5s. 8d.; large hogs, 3s. 6d. to 4s. 0d.; neat small porkers, 4s. 2d. to 4s. 10d.; suckling calves, 19s. to 22s.; and quarter-old store pigs, 21s. to 26s. each. Total supply: Beasts, 1100; cows, 160; sheep, 3912; calves, 170; pigs, 360. Foreign: Beasts, 360; sheep, 600; calves, 164.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—The supplies of meat are moderate, and the trade is inactive, at our quotations.—Beef, from 3s. 2d. to 4s. 8d.; mutton, 3s. 6d. to 5s. 0d.; veal, 4s. 4d. to 5s. 0d.; pork, 3s. 4d. to 4s. 10d. per 8 lb. by the carcass. ROBERT HERBERT.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE BIRD SHOW.

WE refer to the Illustration on our next page, from the drawings of Mr. Harrison Weir, of which we spoke last week, in our notice of the Bird Show at the Crystal Palace. Here are a dozen or more of the worthiest prize-winners in that comparison of ornithological perfections which attracted so many admiring visitors to the tropical department of the palace on the Saturday and several succeeding days. Four canaries, two of them in the act of singing, are perched at the top of the page, in company with a pretty goldfinch; while the bullfinch, one of the cleverest of our native English birds in his powers of vocal imitation, sits by himself on the right hand below, and looks very much at home in that place. A couple of fine cockatoos—one of which, that in the centre, is twenty-two years of age and a most accomplished talker—toss their crests, with an air of burlesque majesty, beside a grey parrot, who might say a great deal if he would. Three birds, of an abnormal colour for their respective species—a white linnet, a white blackbird, and a white jackdaw, seem to challenge peculiar attention; but the common song-thrush and the common magpie are only remarkable as good specimens of their kind. The Virginian nightingale, with its singular tuft of feathers on the head, is a rarer object in this country. We have been requested by Mr. W. Bennett, of Brockham Lodge, Reigate, the owner of the pair of emus in this exhibition, to state that these are not the first emus bred in England, for those in the Zoological Gardens were hatched there from eggs laid at Brockham four years ago; and another, nearly three years old, from the same stock, is in the possession of Mr. Samuel Gurney, M.P. The emu may therefore become thoroughly acclimatised; one gentleman, indeed, has kept one fifteen years. Mr. Bennett does not think these birds should be stigmatised as "dangerous to approach." They are shy and timid before strangers, but very gentle and affectionate, showing a strong attachment to the places and persons amidst which they are brought up.

BISHOP'S COLLEGE, LENNOXVILLE, LOWER CANADA.

LENNOXVILLE, in the eastern part of Lower Canada, is beautifully situated at the confluence of the rivers Massiwippi and St. Francis. A college was founded here in 1845 by the late Bishop of Quebec, Dr. Mountain, and is the only Church educational establishment of any magnitude in the province. It has the privileges of a University, and, as it supplies most of the clergy for the two dioceses of Montreal and Quebec, it is an institution of great importance to the interests of the Protestant community in Lower Canada attached to the Church of England. Immediately connected with the college is a large and flourishing school, numbering already 160 boys, representing most of the leading families in the province. The building appropriated to the use of this department is seen on the left of our Engraving. It is the earnest wish of all connected with this school to assimilate it as much as possible to our own public schools, and it is fast acquiring their principal characteristic features. Every encouragement is given to those fine manly sports which distinguish our own schools at home, but which have been hitherto much neglected in the American, to the great injury of the physical condition of the present generation. The professors and other principal officers of the institution are graduates of our home Universities. At the last convocation, held in June, when the degree of D.C.L. was conferred on the Governor General, Lord Monck, his Excellency spoke highly of the institution, and expressed his opinion that the junior department was the most promising school which he had visited in Canada.

RESTORATION OF ST. PATRICK'S CATHEDRAL, DUBLIN.

THE Cathedral of St. Patrick, in Dublin, which has for the last two years been closed for the work of the extensive repairs and restorations undertaken at the sole cost of Mr. Benjamin Lee Guinness, was re-opened on Friday week. We now give a view of the exterior, and shall, for our next publication, engrave an Illustration of the scene in the interior at the celebration of the special services of that day. The occasion was one of great interest, not only to the members of the Protestant Episcopal Church, but to all who rejoiced at seeing a grand monument, fraught with many national reminiscences, rescued from utter decay. It is related that St. Patrick, while engaged in his mission of preaching Christianity to the Irish people, baptized at a well on the site of the cathedral the first converts to the Christian faith. On this spot a parochial church was erected and dedicated to St. Patrick. The collegiate and cathedral Church of St. Patrick was founded in the year 1190, on the site of that parochial church, by the first English Archbishop of Dublin, some twenty years after the invasion of Ireland by Henry II. The ancient cathedral is said to have been of considerable extent and splendour. Sir James Ware declared that, for extent of compass, beauty, and magnificence of structure, it was preferable to all the cathedrals of the kingdom. But in the beginning of the present century it had fallen into a sad and discreditable state of dilapidation. The sculptured window-frames were much decayed; in the choir all the arches were filled up with monuments or hideous galleries; the capitals of the pillars had been cut away. The side aisles were so blocked up as to leave them but 4 ft. wide, and the windows had undergone every possible change in length, breadth, and shape. One had been converted into a staircase, another into an oven, and a third was widened to admit the length of a tombstone. A report by the late Dean Pakenham, in 1850, described the whole exterior as bearing marks of the unheeded dilapidations of 600 years and of the violences which were in lapse of time perpetrated on the building. In the graveyard around it the earth at the east end had accumulated to the height of eleven feet, and on the south side it was six feet higher than the original level; while, within, the floor was so raised as to bury a portion of the pillars. The few and meagre repairs which the funds at the disposal of the Dean and Chapter permitted only rendered the ravages of time more conspicuous. The flying buttresses which supported the walls of the eastern extremity were mouldering away, the steeple and turrets showed the most unmistakable evidence of having borne all changes of weather during several centuries, and the whole place appeared to have arrived at that disagreeable stage of antiquity which precedes the period of picturesque ruin. The interior was damp and mouldy, the original design had been marred by the manner in which the nave was cut off from the church, and the effect of the splendid transepts entirely destroyed. It is painful to think what St. Patrick's Cathedral might have become in a very few years if Mr. Guinness had not come forward, with extraordinary public spirit, and undertaken the task of its restoration. As a commencement, the rubbish, which had lain for ages in the interior, was cleared out; the floor and pews were reduced to their proper level; the organ, which blocked up the arch between the chancel and the nave, as well as the partitions which cut off other portions of the building, was removed; the primitive proportions were carefully sought out, and before the worn-out parts of the structure were taken down every stone was photographed, in order that the renovated walls, pillars, arches, and groins might be exactly in keeping with the style of the building. Mr. Guinness, who was his own architect, superintended everything himself, and would have no innovation—only a perfect restoration, with better materials and better workmanship. His instructions were effectually and admirably carried out by Messrs. Murphy and Son, the builders. The general effect excites the admiration of all, though some differences of opinion may possibly arise amongst archæologists as to various details of the work. It is enough for the present to say that the entire building has been freed from the disfigurement produced by the separation of the choir and nave, and the division of the transepts. From the grand entrance, the view to the end of the choir is unbroken. The transepts have been opened up; a groined ceiling has been constructed under the disagreeable brown rafters; the noble triforium has been thoroughly repaired; the light colour of the ceiling and the white stone facings have replaced its old sombre aspect; and the light which enters through the large stained-glass windows is admirably suited to the character of the structure. The three lowest windows, over the porch, are matched by that in the southern transept, and the colours chosen are used with the most artistic effect. A fine stained-glass window of three lights, representing the Ascension, is placed in the southern transept. The lofty five-light window in the choir represents the Saviour and the four Evangelists. At a different part of the choir has been placed the beautiful memorial window to the late Dr. Smith, the last of the famous company of musical composers whose names are associated with this cathedral. A very novel and ingenious mode of lighting the nave has been chosen. In the centre of each arch will stand a pillar about 8 ft. high, decorated in the mediæval style, and supporting several handsome jets. The pewing, made of carved deal, is placed in the transepts; while the new stalls for the Knights of St. Patrick, made of carved oak, are placed in the choir. The new organ, constructed by Messrs. Bevington and Sons, is placed under the arches at the northern side, and thus will not intercept the view of the interior, while its fine tones will be heard to better advantage. In the nave the seats consist of chairs specially suited for the purpose. Nothing could be more elegant and attractive in appearance than the new pulpit, which is placed at the corner of the northern transept. It is of Caen stone, exquisitely decorated with symbolical figures, likenesses of saints, and quaint mediæval devices. Resting upon pillars of red Irish marble, it is ascended by a very pretty staircase, whose pillars are of green Connemara marble. This beautiful piece of work is executed by Mr. Lane, of Great Brunswick-street. We give a separate Engraving of the pulpit. The turret clock, manufactured by Mr. Benson, of London, is of great size and mechanical perfection; it will strike chimes every three hours.

These are some of the improvements which Mr. Guinness has effected; but the description cannot give a just idea of the magnificent appearance of the interior, of the splendour of the decorations, and of the accuracy with which the original design has been adhered to. Of the exterior, our readers may have already formed their own opinion.

MR. BENJAMIN LEE GUINNESS, OF DUBLIN.

THE munificence of a private citizen of Dublin having provided for the whole cost of those elaborate restorations of St. Patrick's Cathedral which we have described in another notice, the Portrait of that gentleman, Mr. Benjamin Lee Guinness, is entitled to a place of honour in our Impression of this week. It may be remembered that when the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Lord Wodehouse, was entertained by the Lord Mayor of Dublin at the civic banquet which he gave upon his accession to that office, in the speech of his Excellency, while commenting upon the progress of Irish manufactures, a reference was made to Mr. Guinness in these terms:—"There are," said the Lord Lieutenant, "some other branches of industry which I might refer to; but I will only glance at one, and that is a very remarkable branch of production—I mean the production of porter, which has been carried on with such immense success by one of the most distinguished citizens of the metropolis. I associate the name of Mr. B. L. Guinness with the manufacture of porter. During the last twenty years Mr. Guinness has greatly extended the porter trade, and he exports from Dublin large quantities of that article. I take this opportunity to congratulate the city of Dublin on that noble work, the restoration of St. Patrick's Cathedral, which is now almost completed, and which is shortly to be brought to such an excellent termination. Mr. Guinness will permit me to say that he has instituted an example of munificence which confers the highest honour upon the city to which he belongs, and that when we see the accumulation of great wealth accompanied by so generous and disinterested a desire to benefit society, we know that the accumulation of that wealth will tend to the benefit of our city." The most cordial applause greeted these remarks of his Excellency; and the people of Dublin were fully sensible, long before the interesting ceremony of last week, that they owed to Mr. Guinness the respect and gratitude due to a splendid public benefactor. The work which has been going on these two years past within the closed doors of St. Patrick's Cathedral is one of the greatest ever achieved at the personal cost of a single man in a structure belonging to the community. "In a few years more this national cathedral, with all its historic associations, would have fallen in and become a mass of ruins, burying all the monuments spared by the iconoclastic soldiers of Cromwell, with the banners, swords, and helmets of the Knights of St. Patrick, who, strange to say, never made any effort to purify and restore this sacred home of their illustrious order, which has always included a Royal Prince and the Lord Lieutenant for the time being, as well as the proudest of the Irish nobility. But the work which was too great for the Knights of St. Patrick, or for the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, or the Bench of Bishops, which the Irish Parliament refused to undertake, and which the British Parliament never entertained the thought of executing, has been accomplished within four years by a single merchant, at a cost of £150,000. Mr. Guinness has given back the cathedral to the Dean and Chapter with all its internal appointments complete, and perfect in their kind, even to the upholstering of the pews, stalls, and thrones, the gas fixtures, and the heating of the building. They had only to walk in and perform their services as ministers, and nothing is expected from the Protestants of Dublin but to enter this grand and beautiful cathedral, take their comfortable seats, and worship God with grateful hearts. Mr. Guinness has done everything for them, and paid for everything; and yet he took his seat among them on the opening day as quietly and modestly as if he had done nothing." This refers to the special services of Friday week, when Mr. Guinness, with Mrs. Guinness and their daughter, Mrs. Plunket, occupied a pew to the right of the central nave, approaching the communion-table. The Lord Lieutenant and Lady Wodehouse, the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, the Lord Mayor, several Bishops, and many of the Irish nobility, with other persons of note, were among the congregation. The sermon was preached by the Archbishop of Dublin, Dr. Trench, who, towards the end of his discourse, made an allusion to the munificence of Mr. Guinness. His Grace remarked that "to few men indeed are intrusted the means, and to fewer still has been given the heart, to equal and emulate that deed of munificence which has given us the opportunity of the glorious service and celebration of to-day. But of this no more. We may pause and exalt men; it often becomes us well that we do so behind their back; but how, without offence, to their face and in their presence? How, above all, shall we do this in His house and in His presence, before whom and whose majesty all human merit sinks abashed and ashamed?" In the evening the cathedral was again crowded, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. W. Conyngham Plunket, treasurer of the cathedral, who is the son-in-law of Mr. Guinness. He introduced these words as a message from Mr. Guinness, whose feelings he interpreted as follows — "Brethren, — I know that I express the fondest wish of him who has restored this great cathedral when I say to you this night on his behalf, 'Come, for all things are now ready. Yes, brethren, could he into whose heart God put the thought of undertaking this noble work, and whom the same merciful Father has spared to witness its completion — could he this evening address this vast assemblage, I know well what he would say. 'Come,' he would say, 'come, my fellow-citizens, for all things are now ready; come, for it is just in order that you may come all things have been got ready. Yes, this was the motive which first prompted me to undertake this work — not merely the desire to preserve from decay an ancient relic of architectural or ecclesiastical art, to adorn or dignify my native city, or to gratify the artistic taste of myself or my fellow-countrymen, however desirable such objects. The one great wish which urged me to the task was the hope of providing a suitable national and central temple of worship to which you, my fellow-citizens, might come. This is the thought which for the last five years has daily lightened the overwhelming responsibility of the duty which I undertook, God helping me, to discharge. That period has indeed been an interval of anxious and tantalising suspense. There have been perplexities and difficulties from within, questionings and answers from without. There have been anxious days and sleepless nights; but still one hope has held me up, cheered me on — the hope that I should yet be spared to see the day when the door of this great building should at last be thrown open, and I should have it in my power to say to you, my fellow-citizens, 'Come, for all things are now ready.' And now that hour has arrived, and this my hope is fulfilled. Come then, now, and come henceforth. Come not merely from motives of curiosity; come not merely to feast the eye on architectural beauty, or to feast the ear on ravishing sounds; but come to feast the soul from week to week and day to day. Come to pray and come to praise. Thus will you best repay any little service which God has permitted me to render to you. Thus you will best fulfil the desires of my heart. Yes, this is the testimonial which, most of all, I long for at your hands — even this, that you should cordially respond to the invitation which I this day give you."

It is stated that Mr. Guinness contemplates clearing away all the old, ruinous streets in the poor district between St. Patrick's Cathedral and Christ Church, which is near Dublin Castle, and having the ground planted as a people's park, which would be surrounded by houses of a good style. This would be an immense boon to the working classes. There will probably be roads opened to communicate with Ringsbridge terminus, on one side of the cathedral, and Stephen's-green on the other.

Our Portrait of Mr. Guinness is engraved from a photograph by Mr. T. Caufield, of Grafton-street, as was, likewise, the Portrait we lately published of Mr. Barrington, the Lord Mayor of Dublin.

A silver medal to commemorate the restoration of St. Patrick's Cathedral has been struck by Mr. Parkes, of Chatham-street, which will serve as a very suitable and elegant memorial of this interesting event. On one side is a most striking and expressive likeness of Mr. Guinness, brought out in fine relief. On the other is a view of the cathedral, with an inscription of the date of its restoration.

HARMONIUM GALLERY,
201, Regent-street, W.

CRAMER'S ENGLISH PIANETTE. 22 guineas. Cramer and Co. manufacture this capital small instrument. It has all the requisites of the best Pianoforte—check action, solid touch, agreeable tone. The case is of polished ash or pine. In practising on this Pianoforte the fingers of the player will be strengthened much more rapidly than on an old instrument loose in the key and worn in the hammer. In rosewood or walnut, 26 and 28 guineas.
Purchasers are particularly requested to observe that this instrument has not the common or single action, but the double or check action; and that Cramer and Co. were the original manufacturers.

BROADWOOD'S NEW DRAWING-ROOM GRAND, price 135 guineas in Rosewood, and 165 guineas in Walnut.—CRAMER and CO. (Limited) beg to direct attention to these extremely elegant and greatly admired new Pianofortes. Cramer and Co. have selected the very finest specimens, and they will be found to fulfil all the requirements of the most fastidious performer. The prices the same as those charged by the manufacturers themselves—the public having the advantage of the very choicest instruments. These Pianofortes may be had on Cramer and Co.'s system of hire, which after three years gives the instrument to the hirer without further payment.—Pianoforte Gallery (the largest in Europe), 207 and 209, Regent-street.

COLLARD'S NEW BOUDOIR GRAND, price 135 guineas in Rosewood, and 150 guineas in Walnut.—CRAMER and CO. have now in their Gallery a large number of these very powerful and remarkably effective Pianofortes. The cases are of walnut and rosewood, and very elegant. The tone and touch are everything that can be wished for. These Pianofortes may be had on Cramer and Co.'s system of hire, which after three years gives the instrument to the hirer without further payment. Pianoforte Gallery (the largest in Europe), 207 and 209, Regent-street.

COLLARD'S NEW SEMI-GRAND, price 110 guineas.—CRAMER and CO. exhibit the largest selection to be seen in London. Pianoforte Gallery (the largest in Europe), 207 and 209, Regent-street.

ERARD'S NEW BOUDOIR GRANDS, in Rosewood, 135 guineas; in Walnut, 155 guineas.—CRAMER and CO. have selected from the manufactories of these celebrated makers the most perfect instruments, both as regards tone and touch, that have yet been produced. They are very greatly in advance of the older class of instruments, and come very near the power and fulness of the largest grand. These Pianofortes may be had on Cramer and Co.'s system of hire, which after three years gives the instrument to the hirer without further payment.—Pianoforte Gallery (the largest in Europe), 207 and 209, Regent-street.

CRAMER and CO. LET on HIRE new COTTAGE PIANOFORTES, by Broadwood, Collard, and Erard, at from 20 to 25 guineas per annum, and at the end of three years the instrument becomes the property of the hirer without further payment. Hire paid quarterly.—Pianoforte Gallery (the largest in Europe), 207 and 209, Regent-street.

CRAMER and CO. (in answer to numerous inquiries) beg to intimate that they extend their system of three year's hire to all parts of the United Kingdom, satisfactory references and a quarter's hire in advance being the only indispensable preliminaries.—Pianoforte Gallery (the largest in Europe), 207 and 209, Regent-street.

INDIAN PIANOFORTES.—CRAMER and CO. (Limited) manufacture for India a superior COTTAGE PIANOFORTE, in solid mahogany, with metallic bracings, and all other appliances necessary to resist the effect of extreme climates. Unusual skill and attention are bestowed upon the manufacture of these instruments, which, for their excellent quality of tone and durability, have obtained the highest commendation. Cramer and Co. deliver these instruments, f. o. b., packed in cases lined with zinc, at any home port, for 50 guineas. Size:—Height, 3 ft. 11½ in. width, 4 ft. 4½ in.; depth, 2 ft. 1¼ in.
Pianoforte Gallery, 207 and 209, Regent-street, London.

ERARD.—A NEW WALNUT GRAND PIANOFORTE, of very remarkable qualities has just been finished by Messrs. Erard, and placed in the Pianoforte Gallery of Messrs. Cramer and Co., 207, Regent-street. The power of tone of this magnificent instrument is even greater than that attained in the Pianofortes prepared especially for the public performances of M. Thalberg last season; while the quality of tone remains pure and equal. The instrument may be inspected at Messrs. Cramers' Gallery. The price is Two Hundred and Eighty Guineas.
Other fine specimens of the manufacture of Messrs. Broadwood and Messrs. Collard are now also on view.
Pianoforte Gallery, 207 and 209, Regent-street.

In the case of parties purchasing and paying for an Instrument within six months from the time of hiring, the amount due for hire will be given up in lieu of discount for ready money.
Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL'S FOREIGN PIANINO (the only Pianino to which the Prize Medal was awarded).—A very elegant Pianoforte, of small size, the full compass, check action, and most perfect touch, admirably adapted to Small Rooms, Yachts, Boudoirs, &c. Warranted to keep in tune and to be the best and cheapest Pianoforte, with check action and all the latest improvements.
Price, in mahogany, rosewood, or walnut, 25 and 26 guineas. A great variety may be seen at Chappell and Co.'s, 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ENGLISH MODEL COTTAGE PIANOFORTES.—To amateurs preferring the pure English tone of the Broadwood or Collard quality, the English Model will be found the most perfectly satisfactory instrument, at a moderate price. The action is of the same simple description as the above makers', and therefore especially adapted to the country, where the more complicated actions are objectionable to many of the tuners. In elegant rosewood case, with full fret, similar in every respect to other instruments at 50 guineas, price 35 guineas; in walnut, 40 guineas.
Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

BROADWOOD, COLLARD, and ERARD. The best Pianofortes of every description, including all the newest kinds by those celebrated makers, may be tried side by side (and hired with option of purchase) at the new Show-rooms of CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL'S TWENTY-GUINEA PIANOFORTE, in solid mahogany or plain walnut, the best English manufacture, with perfect check action, the full compass, and all the latest improvements. Messrs. Chappell strongly recommend this instrument as superior to any other pianoforte at or about the same price, whether new or secondhand.
50, New Bond-street.

ALEXANDRE'S DRAWING-ROOM MODEL HARMONIUM, the best that can be made, price 60 guineas; other varieties at 25 and 35 guineas. Illustrated Catalogues and Pianofortes and Harmoniums upon application to CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

SIX-GUINEA HARMONIUM, by ALEXANDRE, with five octaves, two footboards, and in oak case. These instruments are lower in price and superior to all other cheap Harmoniums. Descriptive lists on application to
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

SECONDHAND HARMONIUMS, by ALEXANDRE, nearly (if not quite) as good as new, at greatly-reduced prices, at CHAPPELL'S, 50, New Bond-street.

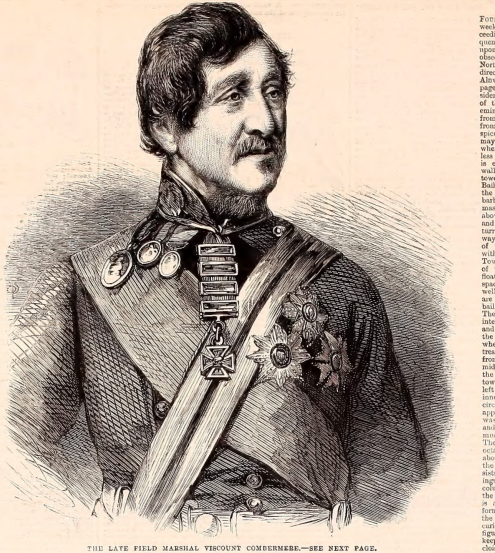
ALEXANDRE'S PRIZE EXHIBITION MODEL HARMONIUM, for the CHURCH, 13 stops, 4 rows of vibrators, and Venetian swell, worked by the heel of the right foot, in oak cases, 32 guineas. A large assortment may be always seen at CHAPPELL and CO.'S, 50, New Bond-street.

BOOSEY AND CO.'S HARMONIUMS (English) of the best description, at prices from 6 to 140 guineas, in every possible variety. The Cottage Harmonium, with full compass, 6 guineas. The School Harmonium at 10 guineas. Church Harmoniums at 20, 25, and 40 guineas. Catalogues gratis.—BOOSEY and CO., Holles-street, W.

BOOSEY and CO.'S MINIATURE PIANO, price 17 guineas, in a walnut case, full compass. This instrument is confidently recommended as the best cheap piano before the public. The touch and tone are alike excellent, and the workmanship is of the best description.
Boosey and Co., Holles-street.

BOOSEY and CO.'S 25-GUINEA PIANO has the Check Action, and is in a highly-finished elegant walnut case, with every modern improvement. The touch is elastic, and the tone of that pure rich quality that especially distinguishes first-class English pianos.
Boosey and Co., Holles-street.

BOOSEY and CO.'S 35-GUINEA PIANO is a model Cottage English Piano, and no better can be desired. It is in a richly ornamented case, has the registered keyboard, as well as the new grand compass of seven octaves.
Boosey and Co., Holles-street.



CASE'S ENGLISH CONCERTINAS, which still maintain their unrivalled reputation, possess a rapid speech, good quality of tone, and remain longer in tune than other Concertinas. Prices, 4 to 12 guineas.—BOOSEY and CO., Holles-st.

PRATTEN'S SEVEN-GUINEA PERFECTED CYLINDER FLUTE, old system of fingering. This instrument, the result of many years' experiments, possesses all the advantages of the cylinder flute on Boehm's and other principles, without changing the familiar fingering of the old eight-keyed flute; in addition to which, through Mr. Pratten's ingenious improvements in its construction, the manufacturers are enabled to produce this instrument at one third of the expense of any cylinder flute hitherto sold. An illustrated Prospectus may be had on application to the manufacturers,
BOOSEY and CO., 24, Holles-street, W.

MUSICAL BOXES.—BOOSEY and CO. beg to announce the arrival of a large supply of MUSICAL BOXES from the celebrated Nicole, of Geneva, made expressly to their order, and containing all the newest and most popular music of the day, including selections from "Faust," "Mirella," &c. Lists upon application.—24, Holles-street, W.

THE OUDH INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION AT LUCKNOW.

A FEW months since we gave some Illustrations of the cattle show and general exhibition of agricultural industry which was held at Roorkee, in the north-western provinces of India. We have now to record the opening of a similar exhibition for the province of Oudh, at Lucknow, on the 24th of December. The site was a piece of ground which forms an irregular triangle, of which the longest side must be nearly 400 yards. It lies on the right bank of the river Goomtee, and, intersected by drives and walks, forms a kind of small park in the prettiest part of the city. This has been laid out, with great taste, for the purposes of the exhibition. A wall of matting incloses the selected spot, and secludes it from the gaze of those who, not being able to muster two annas for the admission fee, must wait for a one anna day to satisfy their curiosity. Passing within the inclosure, one is struck with the neatness of the sheds which contain the exhibited articles. Well-glazed windows run the whole length of each shed, and, while admitting light, exclude all dust and wind, thus securing perfect immunity from damage to the costliest fabrics. It would be too much to enumerate the contents of these sheds. Machinery and the fine arts are not very strongly represented. Vases of all kinds and shapes, glass chandeliers, and smaller articles are grouped together in one shed into a very imposing show. The articles of gold and silver workmanship, with watches, clocks, and nick-nacks of numerous kinds, useful or ornamental, attract numerous gazers, and not a few purchasers. The exhibition of machinery includes large steam-pumps, for irrigation; circular saws, cotton gins; corn thrashing, winnowing, and grinding machines; oil presses, grain dressers, lathes, and other complex tools. The live-stock sheds have numerous tenants, and the best blood of the country seems to be pretty equally in the hands of both natives and Englishmen. An Arab mare, exhibited by the Commander-in-Chief, takes a place among the blood mares; but the chief interest of the people lies with the cattle for plough and for milk. There are numerous samples of cotton, raw of a dozen kinds, oil seeds, and the various products of the country. Among the native manufactures are Oudh silks of a very good quality, colours and patterns are both good, besides many coarser kinds of silk, adapted for turbans and the wants of the natives. There is a good display of these gold ornamented cloths which seem so dear to the native noblemen for wear on high and holy days, and Lucknow sends her gold-thread works in cups and headpieces of great variety, but showing little taste. It is intended to celebrate the closing of the exhibition by a public award of the prizes and exhibition of the prize articles on Jan. 7. Our Engraving is from one of a set of photographic views of the exhibition, by Messrs. Howard, Shepherd, and Bourne.

THE LATE FIELD MARSHAL VISCOUNT COMBERMERE.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

FUNERAL OF THE DUKE OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

FORM of our Illustrations this week are connected with the proceedings at Alnwick, and subsequently in Westminster Abbey, upon the occasion of the funeral obsequies of the late Duke of Northumberland. We may first direct attention to the view of Alnwick Castle, which occupies a page by itself. This princely residence, situated on the right bank of the Aln, upon a commanding eminence, which gradually rises from the river edge, stands out from the surrounding town, conspicuous to every eye. An idea may be formed of its vast extent when it is stated that it covers no less than five acres of ground, and is encompassed by an extensive wall, flanked by sixteen turrets and towers. The entrance is from Bailiffgate, which at this part of the town is spacious and open. The barbican, or principal gate, is a massive structure, which rises high above the surrounding buildings, and is flanked by two advancing turrets. Passing through the gateway, the visitor then obtains a sight of the great body of the castle, with the magnificent Prudhoe Tower, from which, after the death of the lamented Duke, the flag floated half-mast high. The space or court intervening is well kept; and to the right are the offices of the cashier, bailiff, and chief commissioner. There are a number of towers at intervals; some of great extent, and most of these towers still retain the names which they received when the castle was a feudal fortress. Following a winding path from the barbican, a second or middle court is entered, which, like the first, is defended by strong towers. By a sudden turn to the left the spectator is led into the inner keep, or donjon, which encircles a spacious court. The approach to this part of the castle was formerly over a drawbridge, and the building here still retains much of its ancient appearance. The entrance is through semi-octagonal towers, which were built about the year 1350. The face of the archway next the court consists of a series of Norman mouldings, beautifully carved, and two columns with their capitals. Within the court, and on the right hand, is an ancient draw-well, in the form of three arches in the wall; the centre arch being filled by a curiously-carved and picturesque figure. The entrance to the keep is from a covered drive or cloister, and thence by a wide staircase to a vestibule on the principal floor. On this floor and in this part of the building the principal apartments are situated, one of them being the great dining-room, wherein his Grace was laid in state on Monday and Tuesday of last week, which is the subject of an Illustration on page 217. the keep is the Warder's, or Lion's, Tower, beneath which is a large gateway. Surrounding the middle courtyard are various other buildings, all of historic interest and of very imposing appearance.

After lying in state three two days, the remains of the late Duke of Northumberland were removed from Alnwick Castle to London on the Wednesday. The scene was most imposing as the procession left the barbican of the fine old baronial castle. The corps of the Percy Volunteer Artillery, 480 strong, led the way, the band in their rear playing with thrilling effect the Dead March in "Saul." The hearse, drawn by six horses, was accompanied on each side by some of the most influential friends of the late Duke and those of the Alnwick Rifles. Then came the chief mourners, Lord Lovaine and the Rev. Mr. Granville; after them, the household of the Duke, the chief officers of his estates, his farm-servants, and workmen. The foreign Consuls resident in Northumberland and Durham had come to join the procession, attired in their uniforms, as had a number of the clergy of the district, in their gowns, followed. The Alnwick Corporation and Board of Health came next, and then came the tradesmen of the town. The Duke's tenantry, to the number of 200, mounted on horseback and riding four abreast, completed the carriages of the neighbouring gentry brought up the rear. The streets along which the procession passed were lined by the inhabitants, whose quiet and subdued aspect indicated how deeply they were moved. A park of six-pounder guns was placed on a field near the station, and minute guns were fired to the number of seventy-two (the Duke's age) by the Percy Artillery. A number of sailors then took their place before the hearse, as the Duke had in their class, cause over, unrivalled, and gladly availed themselves of the privilege of forming part of the procession. The hearse was then witnessed such a scene. The Engraving on our front page shows the aspect of the cortège in a journey through the principal streets of the "Bondgate" of that town.

On Thursday and Friday last week the Duke's coffin lay in state at Northumberland House, Charing-cross. It was placed in the dining-room, which had been completely covered with black cloth, both ceiling, of white and gold, being alone exposed. In the centre of the room was the bier, also covered in black, on which rested the coffin of the Duke, inclosed in several coffins; the outer one being covered with crimson velvet and ornamented with gilt metal embellishments. The coffin, on the lid of the head, was plainly inscribed with a velvet cushion fringed with gold, and at the foot his Admiral's hat, sword, and belt, was partially covered with a pall. At the head of the bier was surmounted by fourteen large wax candles in massive silver candlesticks, and at the feet were placed two silver lamps. The extreme end of the room the ancestral bearings were emblazoned on a hatchment. About three thousand visitors passed through the room in mournful pageant.

The interment finally took place on Saturday, at noon, in the family vault of the Percys, which is situated in the Nicholas or Percy Chapel, in Westminster Abbey. The bells of St. Mary's rang a muffled peal, while the procession came out of the gate of Northumberland House, and moved through Charing-cross and Whitehall towards the Abbey. The procession could was made up of private carriages and a number of horsemen in front. It was followed by the hearse, laid upon a gun-carriage drawn by horses, each of which bore a rosette on his head, drawn by six horses, with the arms and badge of his Grace splendidly blazoned. Then came black coaches, the state carriages of the Duke and Duchess, and a line of private carriages, supposed the rear of the procession. It entered by the western gate and passed along the aisle until it reached that portion of the edifice where the service was to be performed. As last illustration may be seen in the procession the Dean of Nicholas, or Percy Chapel, which is situated immediately opposite that of Edward the Confessor, and the choristers performed the service, the Dean reading the lesson. The music for the burial service was Croft's and Purcell's (the latter the late lady is buried in the Abbey), and both were given with grand effect. Mr. Turle presided at the organ. A large number of the nobility were present to pay their respect for the memory of the late Duke. Lord Lovaine, as near relative, was, of course, a chief mourner, and Robert Greenwood, Esq., Mr. Bromley, and Sir F. Smith were observed in the line of procession. There was, besides, a very considerable number of ladies and gentlemen who dressed in mourning. At the conclusion of the service the Dead March in "Saul" was played on the organ, and while its strains resounded through the abbey a procession was again formed and withdrew. The funeral arrangements in London were under the charge of Messrs. Jarvis and Child, of Longacre, the undertakers.

FUNERAL OF CARDINAL WISEMAN.

WE give an illustration of the funeral of Cardinal Wiseman, in Kensal-green Cemetery, on Thursday week, of the late Roman Catholic chapel in Moorfields that the most important part of the religious ceremonies of that day took place. The coffin, which was covered with velvet and cloth of gold, lay in the middle of the chapel, surrounded by a hundred massive wax candles, and the head rested on a cushion, and the heraldic escutcheons of the deceased emblazoned on the gorgeous pall. The windows were veiled with hangings of black cloth, which only shut out the light of day except at the top, and at the high altar: the whole interior was draped with black and yellow. There was a crowded congregation, numerous clergy, both of the Irish, Spanish, and Belgian Ambassadors, and many of the Roman Catholic nobility and gentry of England, with other persons of every rank and condition. The ecclesiastics, who entered in procession, were about three hundred in number, and, being attired in the splendid ecclesiastical costume of their several orders, formed a stately and imposing array. The requiem mass was celebrated pontifically by the Right Rev. Dr. Errington, formerly Vicar Apostolic of the Mauritius, now Bishop of Troy, assisted by the Very Rev. Dr. Russell, President of St. Mary's College of Maynooth, who acted as assistant priest, and by the Rev. Dr. Melia, confessor of the late Cardinal, who acted as Deacon, and the Rev. T. Grigg, of Oscott College, who acted as Sub-deacon. On the other side of the altar were ranged the Most Rev. Archbishop Cullen, of Dublin; and the Right Rev. Bishop Ullathorne, of Birmingham; Dr. Ullathorne, of Birmingham; Dr. Turner, of Salford; Dr. Grant, of Southwark; Dr. Brown, of Shrewsbury; Dr. Hendren, of Clifton; Dr. Goss, of Liverpool; Dr. Vaughan, of Plymouth; Dr. Clifford, of Clifton; Dr. Amherst, of Northampton; and Dr. Cornthwaite, of Beverley. The Provost and Canons of the diocese occupied their stalls in the choir. The other Bishops present, both Scotch, French, and Belgian—to the number of upwards of 200, were seated around the bier. After the performance of the mass, the sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Manning, who spoke in high commendation of the personal character of the deceased. The solemn formula of absolution was then pronounced, and the coffin was borne in procession over the coffin of their departed colleague. The clergy then left the chapel, and proceeded to the cemetery in a number of mourning coaches, which headed the procession from Moorfields to Kensal-green, by way of the Bishop's-road, Paddington-villa-hill, the Euston-road, the New-road, and Paddington. The hearse seemed to be the object of the greatest interest, as it was not open like on wheels, with curtains of cloth of gold, and surmounted by a crown signifying the rank of the deceased, and drawn by six mortelles and sombry crosses. It was immediately preceded by several carriages and four, one of which contained the coffin, borne by Monsignor Boone, Sir George Bowyer, and Mr. Charles Weld-Blundell. The Bishops were in the other principal carriages, besides the relatives and private friends who had come to pay the same deputations from the religious and charitable institutions of which he was president. The arrangements were entrusted to Mr. Garston, the undertaker, of Welbeck-street. About five o'clock the procession entered the cemetery, as shown in our Engraving. First came the priests in white surplices, two and two, chanting as they advanced, and bearing small wax tapers, unlighted, in their hands. In the midst came the Canons of the diocese, and acolytes bearing incense and holy water. To the number of more than a hundred they came, and, standing round the open grave, lighted their candles, and sang the "Miserere." Then came other higher dignitaries of the Church, preceded by bearers of two large lighted candles, with a crucifix borne high between them, and with acolytes waving incense. Then followed the coffin, borne from the hearse by a small carriage man for the purpose. At the head of the grave, as this was lowered, all the Bishops stood as the last solemn words were recited in Latin, and the body was committed to the earth. The whole service occupied barely twenty minutes. A vault and mortuary chapel have yet to be built for the reception of the remains.

FIELD MARSHAL VISCOUNT COMBERMERE.

The Right Hon. Sir Stapleton Stapleton-Cotton, Viscount Combermere of Bhurtpore, the Most Noble, and of Combermere in the county Palatine of Chester, Baron of Combermere, in the county of Somerset, and a Baronet, G.C.B., G.C.H., G.C.M., K.S.I., Knight Grand Cross of St. Ferdinand and of St. Charles of Spain, and of the Tower and Sword of Portugal, Field Marshal in the Army, Colonel of the 1st Life Guards, Constable of the Tower, Lieutenant and Constable of the Tower Bulwarks, and a Privy Councillor in England and Ireland, one of the leading military commanders of his time, was the scion of an old family which derived its patronymic from the village of Cotton, in Shropshire, where they were seated in the reign of Edward the Second. Combermere, in the same county, was the seat of the Baronet Salisbury Cotton, 6th Baronet, of Combermere, Cheshire, M.P. for that county, by his wife Frances, daughter and coheir of James Stapleton, Esq., of Carlton Hall, and is said to have been born at Llewenny Hall, Denbighshire, as far back as 1768, according to the Army List, and not the time of his birth, as stated above. His birth is more likely to have been later, probably in 1772, as that would better tally with the time he entered the Army. He was educated at Westminster School, and was, in 1790, appointed an officer in the 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers; and, in 1793, obtained a company in the 16th Light Dragoons, joined his regiment in Dublin. He was made a Lieutenant in 1791. He served with the 16th in the campaign against the French in the north of Flanders, under the Duke of York. In 1794 he was Lieutenant-Colonel of the 16th Light Dragoons, and was appointed Aide-de-camp to the Duke of Kingston, and, in 1795, Major of Brigade to Major-General Sir Eyre Coote, in the Leeward Islands, and served through a short but laborious service under Sir Thomas Graig; after which, he accompanied the 25th to Ireland, and took part in the Mysore War, in the memorable campaign of 1798-9 against Tippoo Sultaun. He was at the capture of Seringapatam in 1799, and was specially thanked by Lord Harris for his conduct there. He, in 1805, was promoted to the rank of Major-General, and he held the command of a brigade of light infantry in England, after which during succeeded his father, in 1807, in the family baronetcy, on the accession of the Duke of Wellington to the Premiership, and was one of the great Paladins of the glorious struggle. He first established his reputation as a cavalry leader in the Peninsular campaigns of 1809, the whole British line renewed the fight and completely beat the French at Talavera, on July 27 and 28, 1809, for which victory he was created Baron of the Lloaks of Pallmore. Lord Combermere commanded the cavalry division on its retreat from Almeida to Torres Vedras. His skill and bravery in executing that movement were generally acknowledged, and he received the fine grand achievement of Cotton was at Salamanca, where he led on the tremendous and successful charge which broke the French army in pieces, and decided the fortune of the day—he and his followers taking 3000 French prisoners. Returning home, he was created, in 1814, a Knight of the Turquoise jacket and serverely wounded. For the victory of Salamanca the thanks of Parliament, and a pension of £2000 a year, were bestowed on Lieutenant-General Cotton; and the latter was made a K.B. and gazetted to the colonelcy of the 20th Dragoons. Cotton obtained still more fame in Spain, in 1813, when, there supported Sir Lowry Cole's division, and, attacking Soult's centre and left, drove the French from the heights of Echalar, and compelled Soult to retreat into the mountains. For this victory Cotton received the thanks of Parliament, an adding to his reputation at Bonaza, Ville Garcia, Castiglion, El Bodon, and the passage of the Bidassoa. He was, in 1814, sent to the north after the Battle of Toulouse—created Baron Combermere, of Combermere, in the county of Chester; and was, in the following year, made a Knight Grand Cross of the Guelphic Order, with a pension of £2000 a year. At the commencement of 1838, at Oxford (June 28), Lord Combermere was created D.C.L., and, the following year, in 1832 the Viscount was appointed Constable of the Tower and Lord Lieutenant of the Tower Bulwarks, in the room of the late Duke of York, the Duke of Wellington. He was made a Field Marshal on Oct. 7, 1855. He married, in 1814, Caroline Mary, daughter of Sir Robert Salusbury Salusbury, Fourche d'Onor, Salamanca, Orthes, and Toulouse; as well as the silver war medal with clasps for Talavera, Salamanca, Vittoria, Pyrenees, Nivelle, and Combermere was a Conservative, but did not take any active part in politics, and was generally regarded as a man of moderate views. He was a man of the flavoured reverence for the Church of England, and was a zealous and active devotee of the gentle art. He was a Freemason, and had held high offices in that Order. Lord Combermere had no issue. His wife, Lady Caroline Anna Maria Pelham-Clinton, eldest daughter of Thomas, third Duke of Newcastle, died at Combermere, on Dec. 18, 1843, and was buried on the 23rd ult. Lord Combermere, recently, June 18, 1814, Caroline, second daughter of Sir Robert Salusbury Salusbury, Bart., of Lleweny Hall, co. Denbigh, and by whom he had no issue. His wife (who died Jun. 28, 1837) had issue one son, his successor, Stapleton Cotton, Lord Combermere, born in 1817, styled Viscount Langale of Downshire; and Misses Emily Anna Maria, wife of John Charles Frederick Inge, Esq., of Thorpe Lea, Surrey, and Caroline Elizabeth, wife of Henry Godolphin Bonverie, married, thirdly, Oct. 3, 1843, Mary Woolley, only child of Edward Knight, Esq., of Wolverley, co. Worcester, and by her, who survives him, he had no issue. Lord Combermere was Lord Lieutenant of the counties of Cork and Limerick since the time of Queen Elizabeth, and by the marriage of his daughter Caroline Elizabeth with the late Lord Lieutenant Combermere died, at Clifton, on the 21st ult., and his remains were interred, on the 28th, in the family vault at Combermere. His eldest son, the late Lord Combermere Abbey, Nantwich, where, the previous day, the body lay in state. The funeral procession left the house at one o'clock, and was very numerous, might pay a last tribute of respect to one who was among the last of the distinguished soldiers who served under the first Napoleon, and won a soldier fit to stand by Cæsar. The Viscount is succeeded by his only son, Stapleton, now Lord Combermere, who was born in 1817, and married, in 1838, Lady Mary Paget, only child of Henry William, Marquis of Anglesey, and represented Carrickfergus in Parliament from 1847 to 1857. His Lordship married, first, in 1838, Lady Caroline Elizabeth Pelham-Clinton, daughter of Duke, and by her has two sons and two daughters. The first Baronet of the very ancient, loyal, and distinguished family of Cotton, of Combermere, Cheshire, M.P. for that county during forty years, who was knighted at the Restoration, and who died in the 11th year of Charles II., leaving two sons and two daughters. In the succeeding have been members for Cheshire or Chester, and his line can boast, among its representatives, a Speaker of the House of Commons, and the distinguished soldier and seaman, among them Admiral Rowland Cotton, K.C.B., who died in 1813, and Sir Lynch Salusbury Cotton, G.C.B., who died in 1863, on the 11th ult., leaves two sons and two daughters. The remains of the deceased lady were, after a funeral service at the family seat, Corby Castle, interred in the sacerdotal mausoleum at Wetheral Church, in the presence of a large and sorrowing assemblage of relatives, of county nobility and gentry, of the clergy of the district, and of the villagers and peasantry of Wetheral and Corby and their environs.

LORD WILLOUGHBY D'ERESBY.

The Right Hon. Sir Peter Robert Drummond-Willoughby, P.C., nineteenth Baron Willoughby d'Eresby, second Baron Gwydyr of Gwydyr, in the county of Carnarvon, in the Peerage of England, and a Baronet, and Premier Baron of Scotland, Chamberlain of Scotland, was the eldest son of Robert, fourth Earl of Ancaster, by Lady Jane, his wife, Priscilla, Baroness Willoughby d'Eresby. He was born on March 19, 1782, and succeeded his father as Lord Baron Gwydyr on June 9, 1829, and, on the death of Brownlow Baron Willoughby d'Eresby on Aug. 25, 1862, he became Lord Great Chamberlain of England, Hereditary Chamberlain of Scotland, was also heir of James, only Lord Forth of the Berthe Peerage, a descendant of the family now represented by the Earl of Perth, and Melfort. By this marriage Lord Willoughby (Lady Willoughby died on Jan. 20, 1828) had issue two sons and two daughters—viz., Lieutenant-Colonel Robert, married to Gilbert, present Lord Carrington, Lord Willoughby d'Eresby, and the Hon. Charles Augustus Ellis, now Second Baron Lord Willoughby d'Eresby, and the Hon. Charles Augustus Ellis, now Second Baron Lord Willoughby d'Eresby, who possessed estates in Lincolnshire, Yorkshire, and Scotland, and valuable collections that his remains should adjoin all the modern practical inventions in improvement and manufactures connected with agriculture. He also possessed a stanch Whig. He was a man of amiable and engaging manners, and his demise is much and widely lamented. He married, in 1818, Clementina, only child of Alexander Baron Lord Willoughby d'Eresby, third Lord Gwydyr, by Charlotte, daughter of Count Clementina Comyn, by whom he had issue a Elizabeth, Dowager Countess of Clare. This barony of Willoughby d'Eresby, which is now extinct, would have been held by many noble and historic descents, was created by the great line of Bertie, Duke of Ancaster; and, on the death of Robert, 3rd Duke of Ancaster, in 1779, the barony fell into abeyance between his sisters and coheirs, Lady Priscilla and Lady Georgiana, afterwards Marchioness of Cholmondeley. It is remained still in suspension in favour of the elder Priscilla, Baroness Willoughby d'Eresby, mother of the Peer just deceased. The hereditary great Chamberlainship of England, held by the Dukes of Ancaster, was, after long litigation, decided by the House of Lords to be vested jointly in the fourth Duke of Ancaster and the then Baroness Willoughby d'Eresby and the Marchioness of Cholmondeley. Consequently, Lord Willoughby and the Marquis of Cholmondeley are said Hereditary Great Chamberlains, one acting in each alternate reign.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will of Sir James Matthew Strange, Bart., of Tynan Abbey, Armagh, has been proved in the Prerogative Court of Armagh and at Lancaster, and the grant issued to the eldest son, Sir James Matthew Strange, Bart., the executor named. The personalty is sworn to be under £70,000. Sir James, who died, in 1864, leaves a widow, Isabella, daughter of the late N. Calvert, Esq., M.P., by whom he leaves a large family. He represented Gentleman of the Privy Council in 1831, was High Sheriff of Armagh in 1822, and of Armagh 1825, and a magistrate and Deputy Lieutenant for that county. Sir James Strange, Bart., at the age of seventy-four years, succeeded his will in February, 1861. To his wife he leaves all property she held in her own right, and £1000 in trust for her use, and £1000 more at her lady ship by her brother, and also much furniture and other effects. To his son he leaves all his residuary estate in trust for his children. His estates he has pertioned out between the Rev. G. L. Raymond, LL.B., of Middleton, and Frederick Pemberton, Esq., of Burton Latimer, and to the latter his plate, which he directed to be sold. Testator, and also appointed the Rev. Raymond and Frederick Pemberton, Esq., executors. Testator died at London on he had resided for many years.

The will of Arthur Woodcock Bayley, Esq., of St. Mildred's-court, Poultry, American merchant, was proved in the London Court of Probate, under £40,000 personalty in England—the securities amounted being his father, John Richmond Jaffray, Alexander S. Petrie, and Edmund Burrows, Esqs. To his wife he bequeaths £1000, and to Miss Elizabeth Bayley, his daughter, £1000. To his son, Arthur Bayley, he bequeaths £1000, and to Miss Bayley, his daughter, £1000. To his son, Arthur Bayley, he bequeaths £1000, and to Miss Bayley, his daughter, £1000. To his son, Arthur Bayley, he bequeaths one-quarter of his interest; and he states in his will that, should his property not realize what he anticipated, the bequests to his children should be reduced in the same ratio of legacy duty. To his wife there is a legacy of £20,000; to his daughter Lilian Bayley, £10,000; and to his daughter Mary, John B. Woodcock £10,000 each; and to his children; also to his niece, Jane Bayley, and to his cousins. To the North London Orphan Asylum £2000. The residue to his wife for life, then to his said daughter or other children.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

The Queen has given orders for the appointment of General his Royal Highness Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, K.G., K.T., to be an Honorary Member of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath, and Grand Cross of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath.—Her Majesty has also been pleased to confer the following offices of the Order of the Bath on the Emperor of the French, and of the King of the Netherlands, to be honorary members of the Military Division of the second class of the Order, and honourable Order of the Bath, respectively—viz., "To be Knight Commander—Major-General Lord Lovaine Algernon Percy, Aide-de-camp. To be Companions—Lieutenant-Colonel Louis Marie le Courtault du Quelle, Capitaine de Vaisseau; M. Henry Maurice Reporter de Prandeville, Capitaine de Vaisseau; and Jonkheer Jacob Otto de Man.—Colonel Bicknlin has been appointed a Military Knight of Windsor.

It is understood that Government have that Lieutenant-General Lord Lucas, K.C.B., will succeed the late Field Marshal Lord Combermere as Gold Stick and Colonel-in-Chief of the 1st Life Guards.

Lieutenant-General Sir George Buller, K.C.B., will succeed Major-General Sir Hope Grant, K.C.B., as Lieutenant-Governor of Bermuda, and in military command of the South-West District, on the removal of Lord William to the Adjutant-Generalship at the Horse Guards in April next.

On Thursday week the officers of the Royal Engineers at Aldershott gave a grand ball at the Clubhouse; over 200 were present, and the supper arrangements were under the charge of Mr. Johnson. A ball was given in the same place the previous week by Sir John and Lady Pennefather to the officers and ladies of the 2nd Division, the whole district, with the

Mr. Thomas Williams died, at Leamington, on Wednesday se'nnight. He entered the Navy, in 1804, as a volunteer;—Lieutenant-Commander of the Coastguard Service, 1828; Captain, 1841 (the Portchester) Post, died last week, at the Hulse, the seat of the family, Lieutenant, 1805; Lieutenant, 1812; Commander, 1819; Captain, 1841; Rear-Admiral, 1857; Vice-Admiral, 1862; and Admiral, 1863. Admiral Williams married, in 1817, Miss Caroline Isabella Schomberg, who survives him, by whom he had issue. He was a Companion of the Bath, and a Knight of the Order of Charles III., of Spain. The gallant officer had received the silver war medal with clasps for Talavera and Salamanca.

THE VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT.

The fourth monthly competition for the honour of holding the gold champion badge of the West Middlesex Rifle took place on Thursday week at Wormwood scrubbs. After a most exciting competition, the prize was won by Ensign Curtis.

We learn from the Manchester Guardian that the strength of the Lancashire volunteer force at the close of 1864 was 18,562, against 17,798 in the previous year. This progress is satisfactory, but the return presents still more cheering features. In 1863 there were 4986 non-efficients; in 1864 there were only 4065. In 1863 only 12,992 volunteers were returned as receiving the 20s. bounty; in 1864 the number had increased to 14,497. In 1863 the number was 14,762. Under the head of "Efficients receiving 10s.

extra as passed into second class in musketry practice," the number increased from 3445 in 1863 to 6027 in 1864.

On Thursday, the 20th of July, there will be a great gathering of the East Riding Volunteers at Londesborough Park, Yorkshire, the seat of Lord Londesborough, who has, we believe, invited all the artillery and rifle corps of the riding, and who will take care that the credit of the county shall be well sustained on the occasion. It is understood that the Earl of Harewood will be present with his regiment of yeomanry, and no doubt this favourite branch of the service will muster in strong force under their noble colonel and take part in the review. The North-Eastern Railway Company will run special trains from Hull, York, Selby, Beverley, and other places. Londesborough Park being of great extent, being admirably adapted for such a great review as that in contemplation, and being easy of access from all parts of the county, there will doubtless be a great number of spectators on the occasion. We are informed that Lord Londesborough will provide refreshments under canvas on his usual liberal scale, tents having been engaged for the purpose.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

Professor Marshall's fifth lecture, given on Wednesday, Feb. 22, was devoted to the sensory functions of the nervous system. He began with the sensations due to the sympathetic nerve—hunger, thirst, pain, &c.—and then considered the functions of the cerebro-spinal system, exerted in the production of muscular sense and action, &c. The varieties of sensation were next described, especially as manifested in what are termed the mechanical senses (touch and hearing), the chemical senses (taste and smell), and the photic senses (the perception of temperature and sight), reference being made to the details of the special apparatus of these senses, exhibited in large coloured diagrams. The general conditions for the production of sensations were stated to be impressionable ends of nerves on a sensitive surface (such as the papillæ in the tongue), conductors, or paths of excitability (the nerve substance in the veins and spinal cord), and centres of reception in ganglionic masses placed at the base of the brain. Many of these sensations are radiated and transferred. In conclusion, Professor Marshall stated that the real nature of sensation is unknown, but is generally conceived to be a property of animal matter. Although the sensations of sight, hearing, and touch have been proved to possess different rates of motion, yet hitherto no difference has been detected in the nervous structure employed. The causes of sensation appear to be mainly external, and all the senses are modifications of touch. All are equally wonderful, and all, by aiding the formation of ideas, create food for the mind.

Professor Tyndall, in his tenth lecture on electricity, delivered on Thursday, Feb. 23, continued his exposition of the facts and principles of magneto-electricity; and, among other remarkable experiments, produced an electric spark from the original apparatus, constructed by Professor Faraday, on whose discoveries this department of philosophy is wholly based. He further elucidated the phenomena of induced currents and the "extra current." He also repeated Arago's experiment, showing the retarding power of the atmosphere between the poles of an electro-magnet over a revolving disc of copper and other substances; and stated that this power, which had been termed the "magnetism of rotation," had been proved by Faraday to be due to induced currents. Dr. Tyndall also exhibited Wheatstone's exploder—an ingenious application of the magneto-electric spark for igniting fusees for mining purposes. The latter part of the lecture was devoted to an illustrated exposition of electrolysis—the action which goes on within the voltaic battery. Dr. Tyndall showed that two metals, zinc and platinum, when plunged into water and made to touch, produced an electric current, and stated that the direction of the current was from the zinc to the platinum, through the liquid, and from the platinum to the zinc outside. He proved that as the current passes the water is decomposed, oxygen being liberated on the zinc, and hydrogen on the platinum. The oxygen combines with the zinc, forms oxide of zinc, and the hydrogen escapes. He further showed the decomposition of iodide of potassium, chloride of sodium, and other salts, by the electro-chemical action of the battery.

The Friday evening discourse on Feb. 24 was given by Mr. John Evans, F.R.S., author of the elegant work on "The Coins of the Ancient Britons," his subject being "The Forgery of Antiquities," which he said, arose in accordance with the commercial law of demand and supply. He then considered in order, referring to special examples and giving amusing anecdotes, fraudulent imitations or fabrications of inscriptions, antique gems, fictile ware, terra-cottas, Roman and British urns and lamps, Mexican figures, majolica and Palissy ware, Dresden and Sèvres china, ancient glass, enamels, and ivories. He dwelt especially on counterfeit coins and medals, and the chemical means employed in their manufacture and detection; and referred to the forged Mediæval antiquities said to have been found at Shadwell and during other excavations in London. He discussed at some length the means to be employed for distinguishing between genuine and counterfeit flint weapons and implements attributed to the "stone age;" and referred to the dubious discovery of a human jaw at Moulin Quignon in river gravel near Abbeville, and other relics, the number of which had increased with the demand for them! He concluded by remarking that hardly one forgery in a thousand eventually escaped detection. Persons used to antiquities distinguish between true and false by a kind of intuition. Habits of caution and careful investigation are cheaply purchased, if acquired by a small sum invested in worthless forgeries, which do not depreciate genuine antiquities, since there must be the original before the counterfeit. We should recollect the saying of Epicharmus, "The very nerve and sinews of knowledge consist in believing nothing rashly." Remarkable specimens of forged antiquities were exhibited on the lecture-table and in the library. Sir Henry Holland, Bart., M.D., F.R.S., Vice President, was in the chair.

On Saturday no lecture was given in consequence of the funeral of the Duke of Northumberland, the President.

Professor Tyndall, in his eleventh lecture on electricity, given on Monday, continued his exposition of the principles and action of the voltaic battery. The theory of Volta assumed that, when two metals or other conducting bodies came into contact, a spontaneous decomposition of their electricity was effected at the point of contact; but the researches of Davy, Faraday, and others have demonstrated that the voltaic current is due to chemical action, and that the quantity of zinc or other substance oxidised is exactly proportional to the quantity of electricity produced. Dr. Tyndall expounded and illustrated the electrolytic law of Faraday, and constructed and explained the "secondary pile" of Ritter, in which only one metal and discs of net cloth are employed. He also described the principle of various batteries, especially of the "constant" battery of Grove, which consists of a series of porcelain cells, each of which contains in itself a plate of zinc in dilute sulphuric acid, and another cell (porous) containing dilute nitric acid. As examples of the powerful decomposing power of the voltaic battery, he exhibited specimens of the metals potassium and sodium, which Davy had obtained by its agency from potash and soda, and also gave examples of the operation of electro-plating by the same means. The lecture was concluded with the exhibition of the beautiful crystallisation of muriate of soda, nitrate of silver, and acetate of lead, by means of the electric light and a screen.

Dr. Hofmann commenced his course of six lectures "On the Study of Chemistry," on Tuesday last, with exhibiting, as examples of chemical energy, the action of the metals potassium and sodium on water. He then proceeded to obtain hydrogen-gas, by the agency of these same metals, from water, from hydrochloric or muriatic acid, and from ammonia, commenting freely on every stage of the processes; such as the separation of the gaseous bodies, hydrochloric acid and ammonia, from the water, with which they are combined in commerce, and contrasting the essential properties of these gases with those of common air and hydrogen. He concluded by showing that he could obtain hydrogen by much easier and less expensive means, and stating that he had chosen the methods he had adopted for their educational and philosophic value.

On Friday, March 10, the evening discourse will be given by Professor Ramsey, F.R.S., on the Eozoön (or earliest known fossil) and the Laurentian Rocks of Canada.

The bill introduced by Sir Colman O'Loghlen to amend the law of libel and secure the liberty of the press, provides that no criminal proceedings can be instituted for libel, unless the object of the libel has been to extort money or other valuable thing. The bill also provides that in civil proceedings for libel, in any public newspaper or periodical publication, "proof that the alleged libel was a true report of a speech or part of a speech spoken at any public meeting lawfully assembled for a lawful purpose, open to reporters for the press, and that the said report was published in the said public newspaper or other periodical publication bonâ fide without actual malice, and the ordinary course of business, shall amount to a defence, unless it shall be proved that the defendant declined or omitted, if required so to do, to publish in his said public newspaper, or other periodical publication, and in a portion of the same as conspicuous as that in which the said alleged libel was published, an explanation or contradiction of the said alleged libel, of not unreasonable length, immediately after such contradiction or explanation shall have been furnished to the said defendant by or on behalf of the party complaining of the said alleged libel." Farther, "proof that the defendant believed the alleged libel to be true, and that the same was published without any defamatory intent and with a lawful object, or bonâ fide as a fair comment on a matter in which the public were interested, shall amount to a defence, unless the plaintiff shall prove that he has sustained actual loss or damage by the publication of the said alleged libel, or unless the jury at the trial shall be of opinion that the alleged libel is such as is fairly calculated to cause actual loss or damage to the plaintiff by its publication." There are also provisions for the payment of money into court as in other personal actions, and that the defendant shall be entitled to his costs where the damages do not exceed 20s. It is also provided that a speech at a public meeting reported in a newspaper shall subject the speaker to the same process as a written libel. The privilege of Parliament or of courts of justice, or of any other public body entitled to privilege in any way whatever, will not be affected by this bill. The Act is not to extend to Scotland.

HUNTING; OR, THE CHASE.

FOR a very lengthened period the word sport was confined to English pursuits in the field, and no nation could in any way compete with us in manly athletic games. Hunting, happily named the "noble science," was peculiar to our isle, and the love of it may be traced back to the earliest times of our history. Among our Royal sportsmen may be mentioned Edward the Martyr, whose tragic end, near Corfe Castle, is well known. Edward the Confessor was also strongly devoted to hunting, his greatest delight being "to follow a pack of fleet hounds in pursuit of their game, and to cheer them with his voice." It appears that every day after Divine service he took the field, and spent his life in these beloved sports. William the Conqueror was a most tyrannical master of hounds, having desolated and dispeopled a great part of Hampshire to form the New Forest. In his days the clerical portion of the creation caught the prevailing passion; even the mitre deserted its sacred functions, and the cowl quitted the ascetic retirement of the monastery to join in the pleasures of the chase. William Rufus fell a victim to the sport he was so attached to; King John, amidst the turmoil of a distracted and inglorious reign, found frequent opportunities of indulging his passion for it; and Edward I. took a prominent place among the monarchical hunters of England. Edward II., though effeminate in some respects, was particularly fond of horses; and the warlike character of his son, the third of that name, induced him to procure them from foreign countries. In the reign of Henry VII. little mention is made of hunting. His successor, "Bluff Harry," however, paid particular attention to the breed of horses; as did Edward VI., who, convinced of their value, made stealing them a capital offence. Queen Elizabeth was extremely fond of the chase; and Rowland White, in a letter to Sir Robert Sidney, dated Sept. 12, 1600, thus writes:—"Her Majesty is well, and exceedingly disposed to hunting; for every day she is on horseback, and continues the sport long." As at the date of the above the Virgin Queen had just entered her sixty-seventh year, it proves incontestably her fondness for the sport. According to Wellwood, James VI. of Scotland and I. of England divided his time between his standish, his bottle, and hunting. His son Henry, Prince of Wales, was devotedly attached to equestrian exercises. The reign of the first Charles was too much distracted to permit him to take part in the pleasures of the field. According, however, to the testimony of historians, he was an accomplished horseman. Charles II. was a distinguished supporter of the turf, and a keen falconer. James II. was fond of hunting; William III. encouraged the manége under the able direction of a Frenchman, Major Foubert; and Queen Anne and her consort, Prince George of Denmark, took great delight in horse-racing. The first and second Georges were not devoted to hunting, but the grandfather of our gracious Queen was greatly attached to the chase, and the stag-hounds in the days of George III. were well kept up. George IV. devoted much time to the racecourse; while the future heir to the throne has evinced a love for fox-hunting which fully entitles him to take a high rank among Royal sportsmen.

In the instances above quoted we have fully borne out the line of the poet—and we now proceed to notice the vast improvement that has, within our time, taken place, both as to the nature of the sport and the character and manners of the sportsman. The cruel and brutal amusement of throwing sticks at the tied-up Shrove-Tuesday cock is no longer tolerated; and the public are satisfied at seeing the monkey tribe disporting themselves at the Zoological Society's Gardens, instead of testing their pugnacious qualities against the canine race at the pit in Westminster, as was the case in the days of the celebrated Jacko Maccacho. Cock-fighting, which is evidently of Grecian origin, and was probably introduced into this country about the time the Saxon line was restored, in Henry II., has ceased to be publicly carried on, although we fear that many a quiet main, under the name of a "poultry show," is fought, sub rosa, in the metropolis and at certain sporting localities in the provinces. Bull-baiting—that once-popular pastime among a large mass of the lower orders—and that equally inhuman sport bear-baiting, patronised by the great, are now forbidden by law; and the Society for the Suppression of Cruelty to Animals would soon pounce upon any costermonger who was daring enough to indulge in this bovine or ursine barbarity.

> The chase, the sport of British kings;

Turn we from sport to sportsmen, and we find that the latter are as different from those of the last generation—both as regards manners, habits, customs, hours, dress, and education—as the costume of 1865 is from that of the time of the Cavaliers and Roundheads.

The country squire of Fielding's time—the independent gentleman of three hundred a year—commonly appeared in a plain drab or plush coat, large silver buttons, a jockey-cap, and rarely without top-boots. His time was principally spent in hunting, coursing, shooting, angling, eating, and drinking. His travels never exceeded the distance of the county town, and that only at assize or session time, or to attend an election. Once a week he commonly dined at the market ordinary, with the justices and attorneys, whence he generally returned Bacchi plenus. The squire went to church regularly on a Sunday, read the weekly journal, settled the parochial disputes between the parish officers at the vestry, and afterwards adjourned to the next alehouse, where, amidst the fumes of the rankest tobacco, he usually got mortally drunk. He never played at cards, except at Christmas, when a family pack, much fingered and thumbed, was produced from the mantelpiece. He was commonly followed by a couple of greyhounds and a pointer, and announced his arrival at a neighbour's house by smacking his whip or giving the view halloo. His drink was ale, except at Christmas, the Fifth of November, or other gala days, when he would make a bowl of strong brandy punch, garnished with a toast and nutmeg. A journey to London was, by one of these men, reckoned as great an undertaking as is at present a voyage to the North Pole, and undertaken with scarcely less precaution.

The mansion of one of these squires was of plaster, striped with timber, called callimanco-work; or of red brick, large casemented bow windows, a porch with seats in it, and over it a study; the eaves of the house being inhabited by swallows, and the court set round with hollyhocks. Among the out-offices of the house were a warm stable for his horses and a good kennel for his dogs, with a large wooden block near the gate, for the convenience of mounting. The hall was furnished with flitches of bacon and the mantelpiece with fowling-pieces and fishing-rods of different dimensions, accompanied by the trusty broadsword, partizan, and dagger, borne by his ancestors during the civil wars. The vacant spaces were occupied by stags' horns, fox brushes, and stuffed birds and animals. In his window lay "Blair's Sermons," "Quincy's Dispensatory," "Bracken's Farmery," "Every Man His Own Farrier," and the "Complete Sportsman." Here, at Christmas, he entertained his tenants, assembled round a large glowing fire made of the roots of trees and other great logs, while he recounted his exploits in hunting—related who had been the best sportsman of his time, and sang jovial ditties. During this annual gathering, which commenced at one o'clock, and was carried on until late at night, the jorum of old October home-brewed ale and home-brewed punch was in continual circulation, and headache and heartburn closed the revel. The parlour, which was never opened except on particular occasions, such as the above, was furnished with Turkey-worked chairs and hung round with portraits of the squire's ancestors (which he valued as much as Charles Surface did that of his "uncle Noll"), running horses, favourite greyhounds, and valuable hunters.

Having enumerated the qualities of a squire of bygone days, we need only, in reference to one of the present time, say that he rises and goes to bed late; that he never commences his sport until long after daybreak; that he dines about the hour his great-grandfather was thinking of retiring to rest; that he indulges in French dishes and claret instead of roast beef and ales; that he reads the Times daily; is perfectly conversant with the literature of the period he lives in; and is never known to be in a state of inebriation.

In England the attachment to the chase is, in a great measure, considered as a trait in the national character; consequently, it is not be wondered at that our horses and hounds should excel all others in that noble diversion. Indeed, the climate appears to be congenial to the nature of the latter; for it has been said that when hounds of the English breed have been sent into France or other countries they have quickly degenerated, and in some degree lost those qualities for which they were originally so famed. Notwithstanding the advantages we possess, the chase has not been confined to our native isle; for from the days of Charlemagne, of France, the monarchs of that country have been followers of it; and the fête of St. Hubert, the patron saint of hunting, is still kept up by our Continental neighbours. Francis I., who, in his one-and-twentieth year, killed with the point of his sword an enormous wild boar, which, maddened by numerous wounds received in the courtyard of the Castle of Ambroise, burst open the apartment of the ladies, was described, in addition to his title of father of the arts and sciences, as "Le père des chasseurs;" and Napoleon III. glories in the sport of his predecessors. Hunting, at home and abroad, has increased wonderfully within the last half century; and this is mainly attributable to the influx of Englishmen on foreign soil. The cultivated lands of France, the fertile plains of Italy, the arid land of the Mediterranean isles, the wild prairies of the Cape, the scorched regions of India, the barren tracts of Canada, and the grape-clad gardens of Hungary have been the scenes of the sport of "Merrie England," and many a peasant has gazed with wonder at the sight when listening to the tuneful melody of the pack as they made

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE starting was very unfortunate in the great race, but, on the whole, it was a good meeting at Lincoln. Ozone, which cost 25 gs. as a yearling, won a £260 stake from a good-looking field, in which Chapel Royal by Newminster, on whom his party stood a heavy stake, never got off. Thanks to the chapter of accidents, John Osborne pulled off the handicap next day with Gaily; which his son John, the jockey, is said to have intrusted with half a sovereign, "nothing more." The devotees who believe they have found from last year's experience the road to wealth by always backing Fordham or Grimshaw did not take much by the latter, as he only won once. At Nottingham it was quite a spring day, and Catalogue added another to her wonderful list of victories; while Tippler, who was backed with immense energy, had not the ghost of a chance with Twilight, and caused many bitter lamentations among her backers that the old mare was left at the post at Lincoln. Chapel Royal also gave his friends a similar revenge on Wednesday.

There are eighteen matches already on the list for Newmarket this year, the heaviest of them, one of £1000 h. ft., between Provisor and Sidewind. Some of the two-year-olds are very deeply in. Esca has thirty-nine engagements to her name, Gladiator forty-one, Lady Violet (by Dundee from Sunbeam) thirty-two, and the Student forty. Sunbeam's future Thormanby foal will, if it be born alive, have something like 500 gs. of half forfeits on its head. Old Orlando, who was foaled in '41, is to be sold on June 10, at Hampton Court, and will, we trust, finish his days there, as he has done the Royal stud such wonderful service. Lord Aylesbury has had an addition to his stud in an own sister to St. Albans.

The Wynnstay, after a long interval, owing to the frost, commenced again on Thursday, and on Saturday they had a capital fifty minutes over the grass and ran into him, and then a fast thirty minutes with their second fox and got beat. John Walker retires, after a very brilliant career with these hounds of fifteen seasons, and is succeeded by Charles Payne, who has been nineteen with the Pytcheley. Walker began as huntsman when he was only twenty-one, and has spent upwards of forty seasons with the Southwold, the late Lord Kintore when he hunted the O. B. H. and V. W. H., the Fife, and the Wynnstay. As a fine horseman and huntsman combined, he has had no superior. He has for two or three seasons past rather felt the exertion of a four-days-a-week country, and he now retires, with the good wishes of Sir Watkin and all the Hunt, to spend the remainder of his days in ease on his own farm, some four miles from the Kennels.

The very first round of the Waterloo Cup knocked out Rebe and the other favourite Calabaroono, after one no go. The £200 black was "big," and beaten both in pace and work by Bonus (own sister to Meg); but he improved considerably as the week went on, defeating Beatrice Princess, and the speedy Donald in the purse so cleverly that many thought he would have won it again. The first ties proved fatal to Clasper, King Death, and Chloe (the winners in 1863-4), and the promising puppies Jem Mace and Johnny Cope; and Coodareena's running was very much fancied. It is not the fact that Mr. Campbell ever considered Coodareena better than Calabaroono, but she has always been a pet with him, and he was only over-persuaded by his son and trainer into not running her last year instead of Cadazooro. However, she went down in the third ties; and Meg, a Scotch-bred one, which had been very little thought of, and backed at 150 to 9 when the first round was over, won the cup very cleverly, King Tom by Canaradzo running up. Three hares were killed before the cup was settled. The first made such a poor run of it that "the judge's hat came off." Meg then had a long single-handed course and killed; and the hare was also killed in the decider. Meg has been unlucky at Brougham; but in 1864-5 she won and ran up for the Netherby Cup, and is a mighty favourite on the Border. King Death took the plate; and old Rebe, who is hardly likely to see Altcar again, divided the purse with Beckford, so that in her three February visits she has won £475 over Altcar—or, as nearly as possible, the value of a Waterloo Cup. The cup was thus won by a Scotch-bred greyhound in an English nomination, the purse was divided between Cumberland and Herefordshire, and the plate goes to Northumberland. What with a cup runner-up and a plate-winner, the blood of Canaradzo prospered. None of the last eight dogs left in for the cup were at all fancied by the public.

The Oxford and Cambridge boat-race is fixed for April 8, from Putney to Mortlake. Tom King, who may in due time be champion of the Thames, won his match easily with Caffin on Tuesday. There was, however, a foul, and the match is to be rowed over again on March 14.

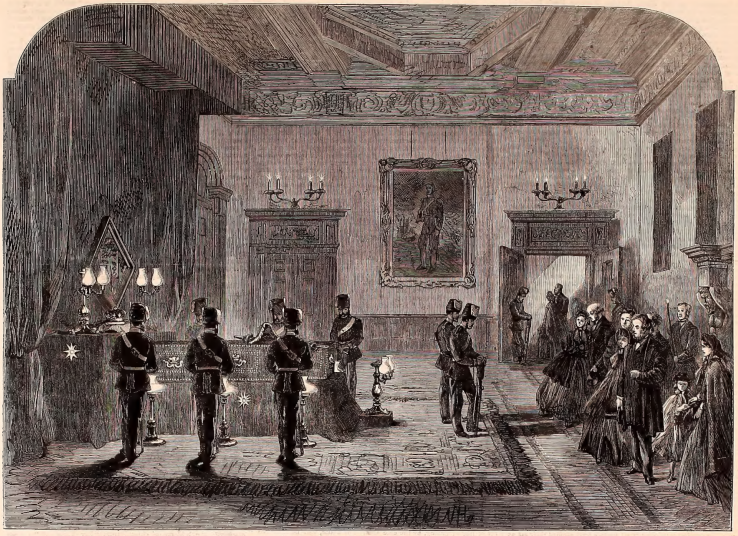
The Amphion, lately stranded at Sherringham, on the coast of Norfolk, has been floated off. She sustained much less injury than was anticipated would result to her.

A meeting of delegates from Switzerland, Bavaria, Baden, and Wirtemberg, to negotiate a treaty of commerce between Switzerland and Germany, has been held this week at Stutgardt.

The Postmaster-General has given notice that in future mails for Bermuda will be dispatched by the West India packets. Letters to be sent in these mails must be specially directed.

Mr. Reid, of Granton, has patented what seems to be a valuable plan for supplying cattle with water in railway trucks. His patent water-troughs are of simple construction, and easily adapted to trucks at present in use.

A Parliamentary return shows that during 1864 the sum of £47,207 was issued out of the Consolidated Fund for the payment of the interest and sinking fund on that portion of the Greek Loan which has been guaranteed by this country. The last repayment made by the Greek Government was in 1862, and amounted to £7847; the total sum repaid is £42,876. The total of the advances made by the British Government is £1,024,487.



We have been requested by Mr. E. M. Barry, the architect for the restoration of St. Stephen's Crypt, at Westminster (an Illustration of which was published two or three weeks ago), to state that the whole of the decoration of St. Stephen's Crypt, except the eastern bay, was carried out by Mr. Crace, of Wigmore-street, from his own cartoons, prepared from Mr. Barry's designs; but that Messrs. Clayton and Bell assisted Mr. Crace as regards the eastern end.

Professor C. Piazzi Smith writes from the "East Tomb, Great Pyramid," Feb. 21, as follows:—"The magnesium wire light is something astounding in its power of illuminating difficult places. With any number of wax candles which we have yet taken into either the King's chamber or the grand gallery, the impression left on the mind is merely seeing the candles and whatever is very close to them; so that you have small idea whether you are in a palace or a cottage; but burn a triple strand of magnesium wire and in a moment you see the whole apartment and appreciate the grandeur of its size and the beauty of its proportions. This effect, so admirably complete, too, as it is, and perfect in its way, probably results from the extraordinary intensity of the light, apart from its useful photographic property, for, side by side with the magnesium light, the wax-candle flame looked not much brighter than the red granite of the walls of the room. There come parties—often many parties—of visitors to see the Pyramid every day without fail, and they come amply provided, too, with all sorts of means and appliances to enjoy the sight—i. e., with everything but the needful magnesium wire; and one waistcoat-pocketful of that would be worth a whole donkeyload of what they do bring up to enable their souls to realise the ancient glories of the internal scene."

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

At the opening of the North London Working Men's Industrial Exhibition, in October last, an Ode, written and composed for the occasion, was performed with great effect, and has now been published. The poem is from the pen of Mr. W. H. Bellamy; the music is by Dr. Samuel Sebastian Wesley. The work is religious in its subject, not strictly in the sacred style, but of the grand and impressive character befitting a great public solemnity. The theme of the poem is Labour, its dignity and vast influence on the destinies of mankind; the claims of the working classes upon society, and their high duties arising out of their position in the world. There is not only grandeur, but imagination and feeling, in the poetical treatment of this subject; and its musical treatment is in a spirit entirely congenial. The music is in the form of a cantata—a series of solo and concerted movements intermingled with choruses. On the occasion for which it was written the solo and concerted parts were sung by Miss Louisa Pyne, Miss Susan Pyne, Miss Leffler, Mr. Lewis Thomas, and Mr. Galer. The choir was numerous and powerful, and the whole performance was excellent. The work opens with a solo for the bass, "When from the great Creator's hand," an air of great breadth and dignity, demanding a powerful and extensive voice belonging to the baritone register rather than the bass; but in some passages the composer has very properly given the singer alternative phrases of less compass. This introduction is followed by a tenor song, "Strong in heart and strong in hand," a beautiful flowing strain, full of melody and expression. Its original key was F, but, as printed, it is transposed into E flat, a tone lower, a change which will greatly facilitate its performance. There is next a terzetto for two soprani and alto, "The wise, the wealthy, and the great," in which the sweetness of the harmony for three female voices is enhanced by the smooth and graceful flow of each separate part, and the purity with which they are combined. The instrumental accompaniment to this terzetto is in a great measure ad libitum, and calculated to sustain the voices when necessary; but when they do not require such support it is intended that they shall be left to themselves, except now and then, when a few simple chords are given to the organ. This beautiful movement is followed by a chorale in C minor, "And when at last the time shall come," in the style of the old Lutheran psalmody—grave, solemn, and deeply impressive—which leads into a grand choral fugue in the same key, in which the composer's command of the resources of counterpoint are magnificently displayed. The subject and answers are strongly marked, and are treated with masterly skill throughout a movement which waxes richer and richer till it rises, before the close, to a climax of power and grandeur. In strong contrast to this movement is that which follows—a song for the soprano—"Silently, silently, fades the day's light;" a gem of simplicity, sweetness, and repose. The concluding words,

> Oh! blessed harbinger, Sleep, of that rest
> Hereafter in Heaven reserved for the blest;
> Where neither labour, nor sorrow, nor pain,
> Shall harass those weary ones ever again, are expressed with exquisite and resistless pathos. The work is wound up with a great final chorus, in the primary key of C major, "All honour to the working man," in five-part harmony, for alto, two tenors, and two basses. It is clear, broad, and resonant; its expression is that of joy and confidence; and it is a fitting conclusion of a work which does honour to the genius of one of our most illustrious English musicians.

Mr. Clay's opera, "Constance," lately produced with success at the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden, has just been published by Messrs. Metzler, the proprietors of the copyright; and its perusal justifies the favourable impression made upon us by its representation. Mr. Clay is an amateur, and in music, as in the other arts, the works of amateurs are liable to be slightly esteemed and their authors regarded as beings of an inferior order as compared with professional artists. For such a feeling there is certainly some foundation; for persons who dabble in music as a mere amusement and to gratify their vanity, are apt to make sorry exhibitions of themselves. But if a young man have genius, love of art, and the means to gratify his propensity by devoting himself to its study and practice, what matters it that he does so without any view of thereby gaining his livelihood? Some of the greatest musicians of all periods have studied their art as amateurs; and, not to go beyond our own time, Mendelssohn and Meyerbeer have done so. We don't say that Mr. Clay is a Mendelssohn or a Meyerbeer; but we say that he is what they were, a young gentleman who cultivates music in preference to inferior pursuits, and does so with the ardour and industry which give good promise of future distinction. Of "Constance," as a dramatic piece, we have no occasion to speak, having done so already. Mr. Clay might have found a better subject, but he has shown much talent in its treatment. He has formed his style on the best models; he writes with fluency, melody, and grace; his concerted movements are cleverly constructed, and his instrumental accompaniments are ingenious and pleasing. This opera will not maintain a place upon the stage, but that is no fault of his; while his music is well fitted for drawing-room performance; and with this view we specially recommend the volume before us to our musical readers.

The same publishers, also the proprietors of the copyright in this country of M. Maillart's Opera, "Lara," which has obtained so much success at Her Majesty's Theatre, have published the opera, as adapted to the English stage by Mr. Oxenford. After what we have already said about this work, it is sufficient now to add that the following are several of the morceaux which have proved especially effective on the stage, and are the best fitted for the concert-room, or for private performance by amateurs:—The Arab song, "Where the plains their coolness shedding," sung with so much beauty and pathos by Miss Louisa Pyne; the cavatina, "From that dread past," likewise sung by Miss Pyne; the playful song, "When our noble Count comes back," sung by Miss Cottrell; the graceful romance, "To a far distant past," sung by Miss Romer; the ballad, "Her eyes' bright glances," sung by Mr. Renwick; and Mr. Honey's joyous song, "The merry bells shall ring." In all these pieces, and indeed throughout the opera, the felicity with which the English words are adapted to the original music will be apparent to everybody.

Two songs, the one Italian and the other English, from the pen of Signor Adolpho Ferrari, have just been published by Messrs. Davison and Co. The first is a barcarolle, "So che per gioco," the poetry from Metastasio, whose sweet verses have inspired the composer with a melody in the pure Italian style—the style of the great old masters, the Jomellis and Cimarosas of the last century. It is indeed a gem of simplicity, grace, and feeling. The other is an English ballad, "My home is on the mountain," the poetry by Miss Jessica Rankin; less remarkable than its Italian companion, but exceedingly elegant and pleasing.

We have before us three songs by lady amateurs—"The Garden of Roses," by Virginia Gabriel (Evans and Co.); "Swallow, come again," by the lady known by the nom de plume of "Claribel" (Hutchings and Romer); and "The Eve of Inkerman," the words and music by the Hon. Catherine Harriet Maynard (Hutchings and Co.) The songs of Virginia Gabriel and "Claribel" are worthy of the well-earned reputation of these accomplished ladies. "The Eve of Inkerman" is from a less-practised pen, but it derives a peculiar interest from the fact that the words and music were actually written on the eve of the terrible day, which will be long remembered in the annals of England. It is not unworthy of the occasion; for, though simple and unpretending, it breathes a deep feeling of awe and devotion. "The Sea-Nymph's Home" (Addison and Co.) is a duet for female voices, soprano and contralto, composed by W. H. Adams. It is light, airy, and fanciful; and, sung by two ladies with sweet voices, has a charming effect.

Among the most recent compositions for the pianoforte, especial notice is due to a sonata in C, by Emanuel Aguilar. (Davison and Co.) This work is constructed on the old classical model, now too much neglected by the modern composers. The sonata is the most beautiful form of instrumental composition. Since the days of Corelli, Handel, and Scarlatti, down to those of Beethoven and Mendelssohn, an unbroken series of great composers have contributed to its development. It embraces every class of instrumental music, from the great orchestral symphony to the solo for the pianoforte, violin, or any other single instrument; while its elegant and symmetrical outlines are fitted for every description of subject, may be fitted up with an infinite variety of details, and give the fullest scope to the inventive genius of the musician. In our day, however (as we have said), the classical model has been neglected; and composers indulge themselves in the production of fantasias, caprices, and such like things, in which they disregard all considerations of regularity of design or symmetry of form. We do not object to these fantastic compositions in themselves. Many of them—those especially of Thalberg and his most successful imitators—are brilliant, beautiful, and admirably fitted to display the powers of a fine performer; but they have become too prevalent, to the almost total abandonment of a much higher order of composition. It is satisfactory to see signs of a reaction and a return to the classical models of art. The works of Beethoven—in themselves a whole library of pianoforte music—are more and more studied, and our greatest performers are labouring to rescue from oblivion the sonatas of the Dusseks, Clementis, Woelfls, and other almost-forgotten masters of the olden time. Our present composers, too, are beginning to essay their strength (though not so often as we could wish) in works of this class; and our pleasure in meeting with one of them is heightened by its rare occurrence. On this account we heartily welcome the appearance of Mr. Aguilar's sonata. In its composition he has taken for his model the pianoforte sonatas of Mozart, which it closely resembles, not only in form and construction but also in fresh and graceful melody, harmony at once rich and simple, and the happy adaptation of every passage to the finger of the performer. It opens with a vigorous allegro, followed by an adagio, as vocal as an Italian song. Then there is a gavotta, which reminds us of Handel or Scarlatti; and the finale is a rapid movement, sparkling with fire and brilliancy. This sonata, in short, is a valuable contribution to our stock of pianoforte music, and will lead, we trust, to other contributions of a similar kind, from the same as well as other quarters.

FINE ARTS.

We recently referred, in our archæological column, to certain new evidence discovered by Mr. John Abel, of the Middle Temple, which inferentially greatly favours the popular belief that the Eleanor crosses are testimonials of the affection of Edward I. for his queen and his grief for her loss—a belief the grounds for which have of late been questioned. The same gentleman, under the title of "Memorials of Queen Eleanor," has published a series of photographs of the three existing beautiful crosses (out of the original twelve)—namely, those at Geddington, Northampton, and Waltham; together with photographs of the queen's tomb, with its exquisite recumbent statue in the Confessor's Chapel, Westminster; of her seals; of an old print of Waltham Cross, valuable only for the data it affords from which to draw conclusions regarding subsequent restorations; and of a drawing, in the British Museum, professing to represent Charing Cross before its demolition by the Puritans, but of doubtful authenticity, and, even if authentic, of no value as an authority on account of its extreme feebleness. These photographs (by Mr. R. Hayward, of Finchley) are broad and artistic in effect, yet have the sharpness so much prized by photographers, and which is, of course, especially desirable in architectural subjects. Accompanying these there is a summary, from the pen of Mr. Abel, historical, descriptive, and critical, relating especially to those few but extremely artistic "memorials" of the beautiful, brave, and universally beloved Queen Eleanor, which have been preserved during the lapse of nearly six centuries. This summary is valuable for its research; it is written with much lucidity and graceful feeling; and will be found as interesting as a story of to-day. We purpose engraving the so-called restoration of Charing Cross upon its (nearly approaching) completion; and shall take that opportunity for offering our readers further particulars of the Eleanor crosses generally.

The discovery of the already famous bronze colossal statue of Hercules, in the courtyard of the Palazzo Righetti, at Rome, has stimulated to further search on the same historic spot. On continuing the excavations two apparently colossal marble statues have been discovered; but heavy rains and the depth at which the statues are imbedded will for some time prevent their being fully disclosed. Portions of a colossal female torso draped, have also been found, and it is hoped the missing parts may be recovered.

The large and fine series of drawings illustrative of the history and art of glass-painting, by the late Charles Winston, will be exhibited to the public, under the auspices of the Archæological Institute, in the rooms of the Arundel Society, on Monday, March 27, and the exhibition will continue open a fortnight. On Wednesday, the 29th, a discourse on the examples illustrated will be delivered by Mr. Gambier Parry.

A movement is on foot to establish a school of art at Oxford, to be available for both "town" and "gown."

A competition has been invited for a design (to be afterwards executed in mosaic) to fill one of the large lunettes at the end of the South Court of the South Kensington Museum. The awkward position of the lunette and the smallness of the prizes (£50 and £25) are not likely, we should think, to prove highly attractive.

To former lists of sources whence works of art will be sent to the Dublin International Exhibition we have to add those of the Corporation of the city of London, the National Gallery, and the Royal Academy, besides numerous private collections. The Emperor of the French has promised to send Sèvres china and other attractive objects.

The miniatures which formed a section of the Loan Collection of 1862 possessed much antiquarian interest, and were found very generally attractive. It has therefore been proposed by the Committee of Council on Education that an exhibition of portrait miniatures, as comprehensive as it can be made, shall take place at the South Kensington Museum—to open in June next. The object is, however, not only to procure portraits of historical interest, as well by foreign as by native artists, but more especially to illustrate a beautiful art in which English artists were the first to excel, and which flourished in England for nearly three centuries. Examples are invited, therefore, of all miniature-painters from the time of Holbein down to those now living. The collection is to include miniatures in enamel, in oil, and water colours, in chalk or in pencil, whether drawn on vellum or on paper, whether in black and white only or with the face tinted. Collectors and possessors of miniature art are invited to assist, with advice and contributions. Such an exhibition as we shall doubtless have—besides its great historical and artistic interest—may, we trust, revive public appreciation of a peculiarly national branch of art which has been suffered to become almost extinct within the last few years; or, at all events, it may educate the public taste to understand the necessary absence of all true art from these nondescript productions, coloured photographs, which have—though possessing neither the truth of science nor the beauty of art—at least for a time, superseded the old miniature portraits.

A curious law suit, of interest to both painters and purchasers of pictures, has lately been decided at Fontainebleau. It appears that Mdlle. Rosa Bonheur entered into a contract with a collector to paint a picture of "Oxen Ploughing," the same title as, if not a replica of, a picture in the Luxembourg; and there is a fine work similar in subject to this last now on view at the Winter Exhibition, 120, Pall-mall. The contract was made in 1860, and the price was to be between 8000f. and 10,000f. However, the lady did not fulfil her engagement, and the collector at last instituted a suit to compel performance of the agreement or payment of 15,000f. damages. Though no time appears to have been specified for the delivery of the picture, the tribunal decided that the artist was bound to fulfil her engagement, and that it was competent to fix a time for its completion; and, accordingly, Mdlle. R. Bonheur has been ordered to deliver the picture within six months from the date of the judgment, and at the expiration of that time to pay twenty francs for every day's delay within three months. If the contract be not fulfilled within that time, further remedy will be provided. We have it upon good authority that the artist is about to appeal in Paris against the judgment of the provincial court; and that she represents that she cannot enter with interest into the subject, and that therefore it is impossible for her to paint the picture.

Several of the Paris journals speak against the extremely décolleté style of dress which the ladies have adopted at the balls, this season, in the French capital:—"What remains, at the present day, of women's dress," says M. E. Texier, of the Siècle, "is so small that it is hardly worth talking about. Ladies are almost attired like the natives in South America—with nothing but a necklace."

MUSIC.

The new comic opera, "The Mock Doctor," which is a version of Gounod's piece, "Le Médecin Malgré Lui," was produced at the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden, on Monday last, with decided success. The French opera is an adaptation to the musical stage of Molière's celebrated comedy of the same name, every character and incident being exactly copied; while the English version, again, is as close a copy of the French original. It would be superfluous and absurd, therefore, to say a word about the subject of a piece which must be familiar to everybody who has any pretensions to a knowledge of dramatic literature. It is sufficient to say that Mr. Charles Kenny, the English adapter, has executed his task skilfully, preserving much of Molière's wit and humour, and fitting his English words very ingeniously to the original French music. Gounod's music is admirable; it has no resemblance to any of his other works with which we are acquainted. It is clear, simple, and melodious; constantly reminding us, by its antique quaintness, of the style once in vogue on the French musical stage. But in this there is no approach to plagiarism, for the music is as fresh and original as it is characteristic and piquant. In short, "Le Médecin Malgré Lui" is one of the most delightful of Gounod's works, and promises to be one of the most successful. The manner in which this piece has been produced at Covent Garden does honour to the management. The characters are judiciously cast and admirably performed. Mr. H. Corri, in the character of Dominique, the woodcutter (Molière's inimitable Sganarelle), outdid himself, and surprised even those who had thought most favourably of him. He showed himself a true comedian, and displayed an amount of vocal power which we were not prepared to expect. Miss Poole was delightful as Martine, the woodcutter's wife; Miss Fanny Huddart was equally so as Jaqueline, the nurse; Miss Thirlwall made the little part of Lucinda very pretty and pleasing; and Mr. Haigh, by his fine tenor voice and graceful singing, gave the part of Leander all the effect of which it is capable. In its ensemble, too, the piece was excellently "mounted." The costumes, scenery, and decorations were tasteful and appropriate; and the divertissement in the finale to the second act was one of the prettiest things of the kind we have ever seen. There was a crowded audience, and the house rang with laughter and applause during the whole performance.

Master Willie Pape, the young American pianist, whose extraordinary talents have excited so much attention, is at present engaged in a provincial tour, in the course of which he has been received with admiration at many of the principal towns in the kingdom. He is to give one of his performances at the Townhall, Birmingham, on Monday next, by invitation of the principal professors of that most musical place. Master Pape has already had the high honour of performing before the Royal family, by command of her Royal Highness the Princess, at Marlborough House; and has been invited to appear at the Tuileries before the Emperor and Empress of the French. He is one of those rare and exceptional instances in which precocious talent, instead of withering like a hothouse plant, ripens, by due cultivation, into the highest excellence.

Miss Louisa Pyne has her benefit, at Her Majesty's Theatre, this evening, when Balfe's favourite opera, "Satanella," is to be performed, with Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Harrison in their original characters. There will be, moreover, a miscellaneous concert, in which Mdme. Parepa, Miss Susan Galton, Miss Hiles, the Misses Pyne, Mdme. Sainton-Dolby, Miss Julia Wolff (pianoforte), Mr. Levy (cornet), and Mr. Sainton (violin) will appear. It would be superfluous to add a single word in praise of a lady so universally admired and esteemed as Miss Louisa Pyne.

Mrs. Holman Andrews's soirée of chamber vocal and pianoforte music, at her residence, in Bedford-square, on Tuesday evening, was an elegant and interesting entertainment, which gave great pleasure to a crowded and fashionable audience. The programme included a selection from Haydn's mass in B flat, sung by the ladies and gentlemen of Mrs. Andrews's vocal class; Curschmann's trio, "Ti prego," sung by Mrs. Andrews, Miss Andrews, and Miss Cobham; Beethoven's "Hallelujah" chorus from "The Mount of Olives;" part-songs of Hatton and Smart; Osborne and De Beriot's grand duo concertante for the piano and violin, played by Mrs. Andrews and Mr. Blagrove; the bridemaids' chorus, from "Der Freischütz" (which was encored); and the gipsies' chorus, from "Preciosa," which concluded the concert.

THE THEATRES.

We may now expect that the managements of theatres will be stirring, and take measures to replace the attractions of their pantomimes by those of more sober productions. In the van of such movements we recognise the St. James's, where on Saturday a new drama, by Mr. Leicester Buckingham, was produced, under the title of "Faces in the Fire." From the reputation already acquired by the author, we fully expected an effective drama; nor have we been disappointed. Nor could he easily fail of success with such a cast as he had secured, the company at this theatre being peculiarly fitted for the performance of elegant comedy and the representation of social manners. The play, however, is not entirely original, though the tone and colouring belong exclusively to the present skilful adapter, but is based upon a French comedy, entitled "Mathilde; ou, la Jalousie," written nearly thirty years ago by MM. Bayard and Laurencin. The play is in three scenes and three acts, each act being occupied with a single scene, thus affording for each a complete and careful setting. These conditions are most amply fulfilled in Mr. Telbin's designs and the furnishings of the stage, which is remarkably rich in the accessories used as illustrative of the new piece. The story relates to two neighbours, who are also friends, Mrs. Hargrave (Mrs. C. Mathews) and Mrs. Glanvil (Miss Herbert). Both ladies are married, and each has her specialty, both in the past and the future. Mrs. Hargrave, in fact, has been twice married, the first time unfortunately. Her husband was a reprobate and gambler, and, having committed suicide, left his widow in charge of his son, whose propinquity to herself she was desirous to conceal. Her second husband becomes, however, his guardian, and thus the boy is brought up under his fond mother's eye. But the lady is troubled in mind that she had not revealed these facts to her second husband. Mrs. Glanvil has also her trouble, but it is that arising from a jealous temperament; and accordingly she inflicts upon her unfortunate mate (Mr. Frederic Robinson) an intolerable amount of matrimonial inquietude. Such is the condition of things at the commencement of the piece. And now Mrs. Hargrave, on account of her fatal secret, becomes the occasion of exciting poor Mrs. Glanvil's sensibility in an alarming manner. She wishes to consult with Mr. Glanvil relative to her son, whom Mr. Hargrave (Mr. Arthur Stirling) wishes to send to an appointment in Melbourne, to the horror of the mother, who desires to keep him at home. The secrecy with which this consultation is conducted alarms Mrs. Glanvil, and her suspicions are further excited by the well-meant interpositions of a blundering busybody, Mr. Cecil Vane (Mr. C. Mathews), whose erratic movements are singularly humorous. Ultimately, Mrs. Glanvil is fully enlightened as to the real cause of the apparent intimacy; and, of course, the usual reconciliations take place. We need not say that it is not in the story, simply as such, that the charm of this comedy consists; but in the mode of the treatment and the tact displayed in the development of the subject, which are masterly examples of dramatic art and well-practised theatrical skill. Mr. Charles Mathews played with even more than his usual diligence; and, at the fall of the curtain, the demonstration on the part of the audience was more than usually forcible. The new play will doubtless be greatly successful.

A new farce was produced at the Princess's on Monday. It is entitled "Heart Strings and Fiddle Strings." The composition is stated to be by Mr. David Fisher, and has evidently been written to afford him an opportunity of exhibiting his skill as an executant on the violin. He, accordingly, assumes the character of one Mozart Ludwig von Beethoven Smith, a professional violinist, who is in love with a female teacher of music named Ellen Wilkinson; and, in the usual manner, makes his presence known by the execution of some difficult passages on his favourite instrument, which have the effect of attracting her from an adjoining apartment. Mr. Fisher perfectly succeeded in his design, and secured an encore from the audience.

The Bijou Theatre has been lately making itself conspicuous by some amateur performances on behalf of The Guards' Industrial Home, in which the officers of the Brigade of Guards have reaped considerable credit for the talent displayed on their part. The first was given on Saturday night, and was honoured by the presence of the Prince and Princess of Wales and the junior members of the Royal family. The band was under the direction of the Hon. Seymour Egerton, of the Life Guards, and consisted of amateurs, officers and gentlemen, who have become proficients upon different musical instruments, and are already known as the "Wandering Minstrels." "God Save the Queen" having greeted the entrance of the Royal party, a prologue, by Mr. Shirley Brooks, was recited by Lieutenant-Colonel Percy Feilding and Mrs. Alfred Wigan. The pieces represented were the farce of "The Comfortable Lodgings" and Sheridan's comedy of "The Critic." In the latter, the part of Sir Fretful Plagiary was omitted, but it was replaced by the introduction of new jokes, some of them containing capital hits. Mesdames C. Mathews and Leigh Murray assisted on the occasion. A second and last performance took place on Monday, when the Prince and Princess of Wales were again present, with the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge. Altogether it was a brilliant audience. The pieces were the comic drama of "A Scrap of Paper" and "Tom Noddy's Secret."

THE FARM.

THE far north has got pretty clear at last of the snowstorm which has produced such a general block both by rail and road, although it has not added a black page to the "Shepherd's Calendar." The following quotation from the Banffshire Journal shows the shifts to which farmers were reduced to get supplies for themselves; while hay and turnips have been vanishing fractions. "The other day," it says, "we noticed a snowsledge, with postilion, come dashing in from Chapelhill, head of the parish of Glass, laden with butter and eggs for Mr. A. Kynoch here. Communications having been closed for three weeks, they had got scarce of rations, and dispatched a forlorn hope for a supply. This primitive machine occasionally sped along finely on the snowbanks, and anon floundering among the corn-fields and ditches by the wayside, but still progressing. A quantity of goods sent from here some time ago to customers in Glenrinnes and Glenlivat lay three weeks at Dufftown station, all further transit being blocked up. When stocks on hand of tea and sugar, especially snuff and tobacco, become exhausted, the supply at Dufftown was carried forward by pedestrians on the 'fishwife creel' system.

Ipswich, which has been rather passive so far, is bestirring itself a little, with the view of securing a visit from the Royal Agricultural Society in 1866. The Norfolk meeting is held at Norwich this year; more than £1000 is to be given in the shape of money, cups, and medals; and mules and donkeys are not forgotten. Hereford has decided not to give up its October meeting in consequence of the Bath and West of England coming to that city in May; and four colleges in Oxford have subscribed £5 each to the funds of the Oxfordshire Agricultural Society.

The Hampshire-down flock of Mr. Edward Waters, near Salisbury, is announced for sale in July; and on April 19th Mr. Strafford sells Mr. R. Guilding's shorthorns at Malvern; and forty of Mr. Bowly's, including the whole of the Lady Byron and one or two other tribes. Both herds are principally of Bates blood. Mr. Bruere's Baron Booth is very highly spoken of, and has, we hear, been selected as a cross for some of the Killerby cows. At Mr. Milne of Kinaldie's annual Aberdeenshire roup, the twelve bull-calves averaged 30½ gs., and the eleven heifers 25 gs., which is a remarkably fine average for the latter.

Mr. Smith takes exception to some expression of Mr. Morton's at the Fowler testimonial meeting, that the deceased was the centre round which steam cultivation moved, and claims to have first "kindled the steam-plough spark in Mr. Fowler's own breast" at Carlisle in '55. In these days, while the iron horse is snorting up and down our furrows, and scaring away the dryads by taking in its provender under our oaks, Mr. Newman, of Court Farm, an old Middlesex worthy, pleasantly recalls the recollection of that celebrated day when the neighbours gave their friend Sherborne (who died recently) a day's ploughing at Heston. It was on Sept. 27, 1833; and, at the end of seven hours, no less than 330 acres were ploughed, twenty were harrowed, and eight were manured, by the aid of 1062 horses and twenty-four oxen.

Mr. M'Lagan, the well-known Scottish agriculturist, has been having singularly fine luck with his early lambs. He had forty-five lambs from thirty-five ewes of the Dorset breed, which cost £3 each. They lambed towards the end of October, and some of the lambs have latterly been producing 49s. each. It is his intention, however, next year, to defer the lambing till the third week of November. The cost of the ewes' keep for ten months before lambing is estimated at 6d. a week, and for the two months they were with their lambs it was about 15s., making 36s. in all. The Dorsets have lambs twice a year, but Mr. M'Lagan only takes one crop from them.

Mr. Warrener, the Inspector of Cookery to the Army, speaks in a letter of the South American beef, called "Charqui," which has of late been coming into use. He says there are three qualities—"Pato," an inch thick, with very little sinew; "Manta," the second quality, about half an inch thick, with skin and sinew; and "Tasajo," the third quality, which consists of irregular pieces, without fat, and less carefully dried and prepared. He considers that its mission is to be used in stews, or as stock meat with soups; and that 10 lb. of it is equal to 30 lb. with bone. "Cooks," he adds, "will make a strong stand against it, as it has no bones or fat to eke out their perquisites." Another gentleman records his experience of this beef, of which a parcel weighed 112 lb. when it was sent to him, "wet and sloppy," but sunk 30 lb. when he re-cured it, which he was obliged to do. He thus paid for it at the rate of 4d., instead of 3d., per lb. It ought to be sent out quite dry, as it is not everybody who knows how to re-cure it.

The Hippic Society had a horse-flesh feast last week, at the Grand Hôtel, Paris; and the Charivari has a picture of a pair of carriage horses shying at the entrance to this horse-eating hotel. Baily states that a committee of gallant butchers assembled to name the ox which parades Paris on Shrove Tuesday, and, in their admiration for a famous songstress, became totally oblivious of gender, and christened him Therèse.

A quicksilver-mine has been discovered in the centre of the city of Valparaiso.

A dog show is to be held on the avenue of the Cours la Reine, in the Champs Elysées, Paris, near the Palais de l'Industrie, from the 9th to the 14th of May next, under the direction of the Zoological Society.

A correspondent of a Madras journal gives the following account of the rope-tying trick, performed in his presence by an Indian juggler:—"A native sat in a strong black wood arm-chair. We fastened a rope to his right arm, passed it under the arm of the chair, round the back, under the left arm, and then made it fast to his left arm. We passed the rope backward and forward in this manner five times. We then fastened the rope round the right arm with a triple knot, and, winding it round the ropes passing behind the chair about twenty times, made a triple knot at the left arm. We then carried on the rope to the wrists, and made them fast by crossing, recrossing, and knotting it. The thumbs were then tied together, and the rope carried back to the wrist and knotted. Afterwards we tied his legs together above the ankles, crossing and recrossing the rope in a complicated manner. We next bound his big toes together, and carried back the rope to the tie on his legs. We had used nineteen yards of rope—quite enough, we thought, to make him secure. The man could not move his hands either to his arms or his legs, so as to touch an end of the rope; and, if he could have done so, they were tied so tightly as, in our judgment, to prevent him from using them. When he thought the tie was weak, he asked that it might be strengthened, gave us perfect liberty to tie him as we liked, and at his request we continued binding him after he appeared to us to be quite secure. More than twenty minutes elapsed before we had finished binding him. I afterwards put a paper round the rope where it crossed between his legs, and where the last knot was tied, and sealed it with sealing-wax and stamp. We left him at the west side of my study, seated in the black wood arm-chair before mentioned, he promising that when we returned he would be sitting in a teak arm-chair on the east side, with the ropes arranged exactly as we left them. In five minutes he summoned us, and we found the paper and seal undamaged, and every knot and portion of the rope as we had arranged them, only he was seated in the teak arm-chair. I wished to see if he could unfasten himself without the 'spiritual' aid rendered so freely to the Davenport Brothers, and left him to do so. In four minutes and a half he recalled us. We found the rope stretched out over the floor, and the man unbound and erect before us. I told him there were men in England who were bound in the same way, but had spirits to untie them, at which he laughed the laugh of the incredulous."

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

FRANK.—Problems of the suicidal kind are not favourites with our chess readers. Many thanks for the offer.

E. C. M.—We have not space to print it again. If you will send an address, however, a copy shall be forwarded.

I. O. N. T.—It shall be reported on, if not inserted, next week.

G. H. G.—It shall have due attention.

CHESS IN LIBERIA.—Will our obliging correspondent favour us with the names of the players in the games he has sent?

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM, No. 1096.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. P to Q Kt 5th	B takes P

WHITE.	BLACK.
2. Q to Q R 3rd	K takes R, or anything
3. Q to K 7th. Mate.

PROBLEM No. 1097.

By an AMATEUR.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

We have not space this week to notice in detail the capital first number of the new chess organ, called The Chess World, but we avail ourselves of its pages to present the following Games, which are very pleasant to play over and very profitable to study:—

GAME I.

Played in Paris, at the latter end of 1863, between Mr. P. MORPHY and M. DE RIVIERE.—(Two Knights' Game.)

WHITE (Mr. P. Morphy).	BLACK M. de Riviere).
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd
3. B to Q B 4th	Kt to K B 3rd
4. P to Q 4th

(This move was a favourite of Dr. Bledow, and may be adopted with both safety and advantage. The usual line of play, beginning with 4. Kt to K Kt 5th, has a little sunk in estimation since the defence, 4. P to Q 4th, 5. Kt to Q R 4th, has become better understood. Still, that scheme of attack is so natural and plausible, that it will never want followers.)

4.	P takes P
5. Castles	B to K 2nd
6. Kt takes P	Castles
7. Kt to Q B 3rd	Kt to K 4th
8. B to K 2nd

(Mr. Morphy is so consummate a master of the openings, that it is always dangerous to impugn his play in them; but in this position we should have preferred retreating the Bishop to Q Kt 3rd.)

8.	P to Q 4th
9. P to K B 4th	Kt to Q B 3rd
10. Kt takes Kt	P takes Kt
11. P to K 5th	B to Q B 4th (ch)
12. K to K R sq	Kt to Q 2nd
13. B to Q 3rd	R to K sq

WHITE (M. P. Morphy).	BLACK (M. de Riviere).
14. B to Q 2nd	Kt to K B sq
15. Q to K R 5th	P to K Kt 3rd
16. Q to K R 6th	Kt to K 3rd

17. P to K B 5th	B to K B sq
18. Q to K R 3rd	Kt to Q B 4th

(By playing the Kt to K Kt 2nd, and thus attacking both the K's Pawn and the K B Pawn, M de Riviere would have gained at least a momentary respite from attack. The move made admits, unfortunately, of the immediate advance of White's Pawns.)

19. P to K 6th	K B P takes P
20. P to K B 6th

(Taking the K Kt P would have been an equally deadly, and perhaps a more expeditious, stroke.)

20.	P to K 4th
21. P to K B 7th (ch)	K to K R sq
22. P takes R and Queens	Q takes Q
23. B takes K Kt P	B takes Q
24. B takes Q	B takes P (ch)
25. K takes B	R takes B
26. Q R to K sq

And, after a few more moves, Black resigned.

GAME II.

Between Mr. BARNES and Mr. MACKENZIE.—(Evans's Gambit.)

BLACK (Mr. B.)	WHITE (Mr. M.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd
3. B to Q B 4th	B to Q B 4th
4. P to Q Kt 4th	B takes Kt P
5. P to Q B 3rd	B to Q B 4th
6. Castles	P to Q 3rd
7. P to Q 4th	P takes P
8. P takes P	B to Q Kt 3rd
9. P to Q 5th

(Every phase of this noble début is delightful; and this one not the least so, though it is not quite as curr,ent now as some other forms of the attack.)

9.	Kt to Q R 4th
10. B to Q 3rd	Kt to K 2nd
11. P to K 5th	P takes P
12. Kt takes P	Castles
13. B to Q Kt 2nd	Kt to K Kt 3rd
14. Q to K R 5th	P to Q B 3rd
15. Kt to Q 2nd	Q takes Q P
16. Q Kt to K B 3rd	B to Q sq
17. Q R to Q sq	Q to K 3rd
18. B to Q Kt sq

(A fine move, the full force of which, however, both players appear not to have perceived.)

18.	Kt to Q B 5th

(This, if we mistake not, was a fatal misconception. The only course to avert the mischief threatened was by playing the K B to K B 3rd.)

19. Kt takes Q Kt

(Here, fortunately, Mr. Barnes overlooked the true line of action, or we should have been deprived of all the interesting play which follows. Had he taken the Bishop with his Rook at once, not even Mr. Mackenzie's ingenuity could have saved the game for half a dozen moves. For example:—

19. R takes B

If White now take the Rook, with Rook, or take the Bishop or Kt with Kt, Black evidently wins forthwith by moving Kt to K Kt 5th. The only move which offers a dim prospect of escape is:—

19.	Q to K 2nd
20. Kt to K Kt 5th	P to K R 3rd (best)

THE PREFACE TO THE EMPEROR NAPOLEON'S "HISTORY OF JULIUS CÆSAR."

THE following is the preface to the Emperor Napoleon's "History of Julius Cæsar," as published in the Moniteur of Saturday evening:—

The truths of history should be not less sacred than those of religion. If the precepts of Faith lift our souls above the interests of this world, the teachings of history in their turn inspire us with the love of the beautiful and just, with the hatred of all that opposes the progress of mankind. Certain conditions are requisite for these teachings to be profitable. It is needful that the facts should be represented with the most rigorous exactitude, that political and social changes should be philosophically analysed, and that the charm of the details of a public man's life should not divert attention from the political part which he has played, should not cause forgetfulness of his providential mission.

It is too much the habit of writers to present the different phases of history as spontaneous events, without seeking their true origin and their natural deduction in antecedent facts, like the painter who, in reproducing the accidents of nature, seeks only their picturesque effect without being able to demonstrate them scientifically in his picture. The historian should be more than a painter: like the geologist who expounds the wonders of the visible world, he should discover the secret of the transformations of society.

But in writing history how is truth to be attained? By following the rules of logic. We must begin by taking for granted that a great effect is always produced by a great cause, never by a small one; in other words, an accident apparently insignificant is never followed by important results without a pre-existing cause which has allowed this slight accident to produce a great effect. A spark only occasions a great conflagration when it falls upon combustible materials prepared beforehand. Montesquieu thus confirms this idea:—"It is not fortune (he says) which rules the world. . . . There are general causes, moral or physical, which operate in each monarchy to raise, to maintain, or to cast it down; all accidents are subject to such causes, and if the fortunes of a battle, that is to say a particular cause, has ruined a State, there was a general cause to which it was owing that this State should perish by a single defeat. In a word, the principle includes its consequences" (1).

If during a thousand years the Romans came victorious out of the hardest trials and the greatest dangers, there existed a general cause which always rendered them superior to their enemies and prevented defeats and partial disasters from drawing after them the fall of their empire. If the Romans, after displaying to the world the example of a people constituting itself and growing great by liberty, seemed, after Cæsar, to rush blindly into servitude, it was because there existed a general reason which fatally prevented the republic from returning to the purity of its ancient institutions: the new wants and interests of a society in travail required other means to be satisfied. In the same way that logic proves to us the imperious reason of important occurrences, so we must recognise the excellence of an institution in its length of duration, and the proof of a man's genius in his unquestioned influence over his age.

The historian's task consists, therefore, in seeking the vital element which made the force of the institution and the master idea which directed the actions of the man. By following this rule we shall avoid the errors of those historians who gather together the facts handed down by former generations, without classing them according to their philosophical importance; thus oftentimes praising what deserves blame, and leaving in the shade what calls for the full light of day. It is not a minute analysis of Roman organisation which will enable us to understand the duration of so great an empire, but a profound examination of the spirit of its institutions; nor is it the detailed recital of the minor actions of a great man which will reveal to us the secret of his ascendancy, but an attentive study of the great moving principles of his conduct.

When extraordinary deeds proclaim an eminent man of genius, what can be more contrary to common-sense than to attribute to him the passions and sentiments of mediocrity? What can be more false than not to recognise the pre-eminence of those privileged beings who appear from time to time in history like beacons, dispelling the darkness of their epoch and illumining the future? Moreover, to deny this pre-eminence would be to libel humanity by supposing it capable of submitting willingly and permanently to a dominion not based upon true greatness and incontestable utility. Let us be logical, and we shall be just.

Too many historians find it easier to detract from the merits of men of genius than by a generous inspiration to raise themselves to their level by understanding their vast designs. Thus, in the case of Cæsar, instead of showing us Rome torn by civil wars, corrupted by riches, treading under foot its ancient institutions, threatened by powerful peoples—Gauls, Germans, and Parthians—incapable of sustaining itself without a central power stronger, more stable, and more just; instead, I say, of tracing this faithful picture, historians represent Cæsar as meditating from his youth how to obtain supreme power. If he opposes Sylla, if he disagrees with Cicero, if he makes friends with Pompey, it is all on account of that astute foresight which divines only to enslave; if he invades Gaul, it is to acquire wealth by pillage (2) or soldiers devoted to his projects; if he crosses the sea to transport the Roman eagles to an unknown country, the conquest of which will complete that of the Gauls (3), it is to look for pearls which were supposed to exist in the seas of Great Britain (4).

If, after having conquered the formidable enemies of Italy beyond the Alps, he meditates an expedition against the Parthians to avenge the defeat of Crassus, it is, say certain historians, because activity suited his nature, and his health was better in a campaign (5); if he accepts with gratitude from the Senate a laurel crown which he proudly wears, it is to hide his bald head; and finally, if he was murdered by men whom he had loaded with benefits, it was because he wanted to make himself a king—just as though both for contemporaries and posterity he was not greater than any king.

Such, since Suetonius and Plutarch, are the miserable interpretations which people delight to give to the most noble things. But by what sign, then, will you recognise the greatness of a man? Is it not by the empire of his ideas when his principles and his system triumph in spite of his death or defeat? Is it not the characteristic of genius to survive death, and to extend its empire over future generations? Cæsar disappears, but his influence predominates more than it did during his life. His adversary Cicero is forced to exclaim, "Every action of Cæsar, his writings, his words, his promises, have more force since his death than if he were yet living" (6). For centuries after his death it sufficed to tell the world that such was the will of Cæsar, and the world obeyed.

The foregoing sufficiently shows my object in writing this history. That object is to prove that, when Providence raises up such men as Cæsar, Charlemagne, and Napoleon, it is for the purpose of tracing out for nations the way in which they should go, of stamping with the seal of genius a new era, and of accomplishing the work of several centuries in a few years. Happy the people who understand and follow their great men! Woe to the people who contemn and resist them! They act like the Jews who crucified the Messiah; they are blind and culpable—blind, for they do not see the impotence of their efforts to suspend the definite triumph of good; culpable, for they retard progress by hampering its prompt and fruitful application. And, in point of fact, neither the murder of Cæsar nor the captivity of St. Helena succeeded in definitively destroying two popular causes, vanquished for a time by a league assuming the mask of liberty. Brutus, in killing Cæsar, plunged Rome into the horrors of civil war; but he did not prevent the reign of Augustus, and he rendered possible those of Nero and Caligula. The ostracism of Napoleon by coalesced Europe failed likewise to prevent the restoration of the Empire; and yet how far off are we now from the great questions settled, the appeased passions, and the legitimate satisfaction given to peoples by the first Empire!

Thus is daily verified since 1815 this prophecy of the captive of St. Helena—"What struggles, what blood, and what years will not be required to realise the good which I wished to do to humanity!" (7)

From a Parliamentary return recently issued we learn that on the 30th of September last the reformatories in England and Wales, about forty, contained 2585 boys and 666 girls. Of these 183 boys and 51 girls were orphans; 519 boys and 133 girls had lost a father only, and 418 boys and 122 girls had lost a mother only. The fathers of 202 boys and 74 girls had re-married, and the mothers of 197 boys and 35 girls had re-married. At the same date the certified industrial schools contained 638 boys and 212 girls. Fifty boys and 29 girls were orphans. One hundred and eighty-five boys and 66 girls had lost father only; 68 boys and 33 girls had lost mother only. In the case of 28 boys and 9 girls the father had re-married; in the case of 48 boys and 12 girls the mother had re-married.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,
13, St. James's-square, London, S.W.

Established 1824.

Financial Results of the Society's Operations.

The Annual Income exceeds	£201,000
The Assurance Fund safely invested is over	£1,446,000
The New Policies in the last year were 466, assuring	£271,440
The Bonus added to Policies at the last Division was	£275,077
The Total Claims by Death paid amount to	£1,962,629

The following are among the distinctive features of the Society:—
CREDIT SYSTEM.—On any Policy for the whole of life, where the age does not exceed 60, one half of the annual premiums during the first five years may remain on credit, and may either continue as a debt on the Policy or be paid off at any time.
LOW RATES OF PREMIUM FOR YOUNG LIVES, with early participation in profits.
ENDOWMENT ASSURANCES may be effected, without profits, by which the sum assured becomes payable on the attainment of a specified age, or at death, whichever event shall first happen.
INVALID LIVES may be assured at rates proportioned to the increased risk.
PROMPT SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS.—Claims paid thirty days after proof of death.

The Reversionary Bonus at the Quinquennial Division in 1862 averaged 48 per cent, and the Cash Bonus 28 per cent, on the premiums paid in the five years.
The next Division of Profits will take place in January, 1867, and persons who effect new policies before the end of June next will be entitled at that division to one year's additional share of profits over after entrants.

DR. DE JONGH'S
(Knight of the Order of Leopold of Belgium)
LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL. Invariably pure, uniformly excellent, palatable, and easily taken. Universally recognized to be incomparably superior to every other kind.

DISEASES OF THE LUNGS AND CHEST.

The extraordinary virtues of DR. DE JONGH'S COD-LIVER OIL in Pulmonary Consumption may now be considered as fully established. No remedy so rapidly restores the exhausted strength, improves the nutritive functions, stops or diminishes emaciation, checks the perspiration, quiets the cough and expectoration, or produces a more marked and favourable influence on the local malady. DR. WAUDBY, late Physician to the Hereford Infirmary, bears the following high testimony to its efficacy in Diseases of the Chest, from his own personal experience:—"I can take DR. DE JONGH'S OIL without difficulty or dislike and with as little inconvenience as water alone. Not only in my own case, but in many others I have seen, it has caused an improvement of chest symptoms and an increase of weight, so soon and so lastingly as to be quite remarkable. I believe DR. DE JONGH'S OIL to be the most valuable remedy we possess for chronic and constitutional disease."

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

The late Dr. JONATHAN PEREIRA, F.R.S.,
Physician to the London Hospital, &c., &c.

"It was fitting that the author of the best analysis and investigations into the properties of this Oil should himself be the purveyor of this important medicine. Whether considered with reference to its colour, flavour, or chemical properties, I am satisfied that, for medicinal purposes, no finer Oil can be procured."

DR. EDWARD SMITH, F.R.S.,
Physician to the Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest, Brompton, &c., &c.

"We think it a great advantage that there is one kind of Cod-liver Oil which is universally admitted to be genuine—the Light-brown Oil supplied by DR. DE JONGH. It has long been our practice, when prescribing the Oil, to recommend this kind, since, amidst so much variety and uncertainty, we have confidence in its genuineness."—(Extract from "Consumption, its Early and Remediable Stages.")

DR. LANKESTER, F.R.S.,
Coroner for Central Middlesex, &c., &c.,

"I consider that the purity and genuineness of this Oil are secured in its preparation by the personal attention of so good a Chemist and intelligent a Physician as DR. DE JONGH, who has also written the best Medical Treatise on the Oil with which I am acquainted. Hence I deem the Cod-liver Oil sold under his guarantee to be preferable to any other kind as regards genuineness and medicinal efficacy."

DR. LETHEBY,
Medical Officer of Health, and Chief Analyst to the city of London, &c., &c.

"The Oil corresponds in all its characters with that named 'Huile Brune,' and described as the best variety in the masterly treatise of DR. DE JONGH. It is, I believe, universally acknowledged that DR. DE JONGH'S Light-brown Cod-liver Oil has great therapeutic power; and, from my investigations, I have no doubt of its being a pure and unadulterated article."

DR. BARLOW,
Senior Physician to Guy's Hospital, &c., &c.

"I have frequently recommended persons consulting me to make use of DR. DE JONGH'S Cod-liver Oil. I have been well satisfied with its effects, and believe it to be a very pure Oil, well fitted for those cases in which the use of that substance is indicated."

EDWIN CANTON, ESQ., F.R.C.S.,
Surgeon to Charing-cross Hospital, &c., &c.

"For several years past I have been in the habit of prescribing DR. DE JONGH'S Light-brown Cod-liver Oil, and find it to be much more efficacious than any other varieties of the same medicine which I have also employed with a view to test their relative superiority."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold only in capsuled IMPERIAL half-pints, 2s. 6d.; pints, 4s. 9d.; quarts, 9s.; labelled with his stamp and signature, WITHOUT WHICH NONE CAN POSSIBLY BE GENUINE, by respectable Chemists and Druggists.

Makers to the Queen and Prince of Wales.
FRY'S CHOCOLATE FOR EATING is prepared with scrupulous regard to purity, and, being exceedingly wholesome, is much valued for Children, with whom it is a universal favourite.

Made by J. S. FRY and SONS, Bristol and London.
FRY'S HOMŒOPATHIC COCOA,
in Packets, secured in tinfoil.
The purity, delicacy of flavour, and nutritious properties of this Cocoa, as well as the great facility with which it is made, have rendered it a standard article of General Consumption.
It is equally adapted for Invalids and others, and is highly approved and strongly recommended by Medical Men.

BREAKFAST BEVERAGE.—Homœopathic practitioners, and the medical profession generally, recommend COCOA as being the most healthful of all beverages. When the doctrine of homœopathy was first introduced into this country there were to be obtained no preparations of cocoa either attractive to the taste or acceptable to the stomach; the nut was either supplied in the crude state or so unskilfully manufactured as to obtain little notice. J. EPPS, of London, homœopathic chemist, was induced, in the year 1839, to turn his attention to this subject, and at length succeeded, with the assistance of elaborate machinery, in being the first to produce an article pure in its composition, and so refined by the perfect trituration it receives in the process it passes through as to be most acceptable to the delicate stomach. For general use Epps's cocoa is distinguished as an invigorating, grateful breakfast beverage, with delicious aroma. Dr. Hassall, in his work, "Food and its Adulterations," says:—"Cocoa contains a great variety of important nutritive principles; every ingredient necessary to the growth and sustenance of the body." Again, "As a nutritive, cocoa stands very much higher than either coffee or tea." Directions:—Two tablespoonfuls of the powder in a breakfast cup filled with boiling water or milk. Tin-lined ¼lb., ½lb., and 1lb. labelled packets. Sold by grocers, confectioners, and chemists. Each packet is labelled "J. Epps, Homœopathic Chemist, 112, Great Russell-street, 170, Piccadilly; 48, Threadneedle-street; Manufactory, 398, Euston-road, London."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 1305.—VOL. XLVI. SATURDAY, MARCH 11, 1865. WITH A SUPPLEMENT, FIVEPENCE

THE FEDERAL OCCUPATION OF CHARLESTON.

THE evacuation of Charleston, South Carolina, by the Confederates is one of the most startling events of a campaign which has presented a long succession of surprises. The fact, regarded from a military point of view, is not, perhaps, so important as the capture of Fort Fisher; yet we can hardly wonder that the announcement of it stirred a deeper feeling of satisfaction in the North than any that has shown itself during the progress of the war. The few observations we shall make on it will have reference rather to its moral than to its military or its political bearings. The object of the struggle at its present stage is no longer what it was at its commencement, so far, at least, as the South is concerned. When the first gun was fired against Fort Sumter, there can be no doubt that the seceding States contemplated founding an extensive and extending empire, of which their peculiar and, as they affirmed, necessary institution was to have been an important element. Such an object, however, it is impossible that the Confederacy can any longer entertain with hope. Slavery, as a social system, has so far suffered by the collision of the two sections of the American people that its extinction, at no very distant date, is morally certain. Such being the case, although the issue of the struggle may involve principles in which our transatlantic kinsmen, whether of the North or South, attach but insignificance, we, as distant spectators, seeing that the broad interests of humanity are no longer at stake, may be excused for doubting whether the order of further strife will not far exceed the evils imposed to be gained by it, and for wishing that we may soon witness the end of bloodshed and devastation. We know not how the fall of Charleston may affect the final balance of political power on the southern coast of America, and do not pretend to be competent to foresee its strategical effects; but there is no point of view from which the event may be regarded which is full of instruction and which is worth serious consideration.

Charleston may be said to have precipitated this war. It cannot, it is true, be proved that but for South Carolina, of which the city of Charleston was the heart, Mr. Lincoln's election in 1860 might not have led to the eventual secession of the Slave States; but, at least, it should not be borne in mind that South Carolina set the example. She did so, and by accident, but on calculation. Her temper had inclined her in that direction for many years past. She had used her influence to precede in it those of former occasions when secession or self-will had been crossed by President or Congress. By means of she stave-off to overleave all legitimate opposition. We neither affirm nor deny her right as a State to take the position she did; but when no fair fact that she could allege was with inconsiderate haste. For awhile, the policy of which she may be said to have been not merely the advocate but the author was accepted by the majority of the people of the United States, whose haste insisted upon submission to the decisions of that majority, when they chanced to be with whose leadly than South Carolina. Then came the unfavorable election of 1860, by which the political supremacy of the South was, for a time being at an end, and secession was determined. What might have followed that popular victory had it been accepted we can only conjecture; but the election itself could hardly be regarded as an invasion of the sovereignty of the Southern States. Not a single act had yet been done, nor a profession had yet been made, inimical to State rights, and South Carolina declared for secession, and was soon followed in that course by several of her sister States. Her precipitancy was the more upon the North, because it was unlooked for a time, with forbearance. Ordinary patience, tact, and statesmanship on the part of Secessia might probably then have averted further strife without the exchange of a single shot; for there was not then such a show of union in the North as to make us forbode the South to believe that a peaceful separation might be practicable.

Things were in this critical but not altogether hopeless position when Charleston took into her own hands to bring to an abrupt decision the alternative of peace or war. She attacked Fort Sumter, and from that act what a long train of miseries has proceeded! What a sea of tears and blood has resulted from that first concession! What an amount of destruction has been brought down upon both sections of the then most prosperous republic! What a huge conflagration of passion has been kindled! For all these things South Carolina and Charleston are responsible. Thousands of brave men and women on both sides, who had no participation in that act, but upon whom the terrible consequences have fallen, have since bewailed the impatience and imperious pride that needlessly and hastily flung back the flood-gates of civil war. Even from that moment to this none have been able to close, and through which an inundation of woe has swept to cover the face of the land with wreck and death.

Remembering all this, one cannot regard the fall of Charleston has sent a thrill of sensation through the North, nor that the officers of the Federal Government took possession of the already ruined city with a feeling of satisfaction that poetic justice had at length overtaken the first transgressor, and to be conscious of that feeling. We know too well how, in all such calamities, the innocent suffer with the guilty; and how, with the perpetrators of the crime alone, but also those who would have prevented it if they could, share the doom which it has entailed. But we do see in the retribution which has befallen Charleston enough to make us pause and ponder. It does present to our minds some suggestions, wholly uncoloured by party feeling, to which we think attention may be profitably given.

The old proverb says, "Curses, like chickens, come home to roost." Upon the principles of mankind, expressed in these few words, discloses to us one of the laws which characterise the moral government of the world. Those who rely on the power of cursing—or, otherwise expressed, on words of menace, outbursts of passion, and impatient and violent declarations—rely upon the reed which, when it breaks, pierces the hands of such as lean upon it. South Carolina, on any question into which her passions entered, disdained reasoning. An unreasoning fettishism was her will was her main argument. Her social structure had nurtured in her habits of despotic command, and she freely expressed them. It will not do. It never has done. It is as certain of bringing round its own retribution as is that what men sow they will reap. The fate of Charleston, now desolate and in ruins, is but another historical illustration, added to many foregoing ones, that at reason, law, and justice cannot be set at defiance, by however strong a will, with ultimate impunity.

It is worthy of note, moreover, that to Charleston has been vouchsafed the gratification of falling heroically. Her children were quite as brave as others; but circumstances conspired to render her fate an ingloricus one. She who first the first gun in this awful war was finally taken possession of in a manner humiliating to her pride. No one will forget her successful defence of herself at an earlier period; yet no one will associate with her end a sentiment of enthusiastic admiration. Almost before Europe has given a week's reflection to the consequences of her having been abandoned, the fact is almost lost sight of, having been obliterated by the later tidings that South Carolina is henceforth a province of the Republic. Her ruin will be crowded with the ships of all nations. And her last state of prosperity will, we devoutly trust, bury her first in forgetfulness.

THE REOPENING OF ST. PATRICK'S CATHEDRAL, DUBLIN.

SUNDAY, illustrations of the exhumation of St. Patrick's Cathedral, by the munificence of Mr. Benjamin Guinness, who has lately completed at his great cost, have at his own cost, were published in our Impression of last week. The view of the exterior of the cathedral and that of the new choir-gate were engraved from photographs taken by Messrs. Millard and Robinson, of Lower Sackville-street, Dublin. The illustration on our front page is from a sketch by Mr. T. Wakeman, architect of Mr. Guinness's works. The choir is occupied by the canons in the choir of the cathedral upon the occasion of the opening service on Friday, the 24th ult., which was given in a brief account in our last. The congregation was very numerous and including many persons of rank and distinction. The bishops who attended were the Lord Primate, Archbishop of Dublin, and Bishops of Meath, Derry, Down and Connor, Tuam, Ossory, Cork, and Limerick. The Bishop of Kildare was absent. The clergy represented by Lords Bradford, Farnham, and Granard. The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Lord Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice, and the Attorney-General, the Master of the Rolls, and the Provost and Vice-Provost of Trinity College were present. The Lord Mayor and Corporation were Lord Powerscourt, Lord Mayo, Lord Charlemont, and Lord Massey. Hugh, Lord Archbishop of Dublin, Lord Castlemaine, Lord Talbot, Lady Lyndon, Lady Mayo, Lady Charlemont, Lady Otho Fitzgerald, Lady Powerscourt, and others. The Lord Mayor came in his coler, attended by the civic officers, some of whom bore the insignia of the Corporation, and took their seats in the pew specially reserved for him. The Lord Lieutenant and the town councillors were present likewise in their robes. The Lord Chancellor, Lord Lord Chief Justice, Lord Chief Baron, and the Order of St. Patrick, was accompanied by Lady Wodehouse and by three daughters of Lord Carew. The Lord Chancellor, Lord Chief Justice, Lord Chief Baron, on the left of the central nave, and immediately in front of the choir. The Lord Lieutenant, attended by his state officers, proceeded to the nave in procession, chanting the 68th Psalm to the tune of "Hanover," and the Lord Primate read the first collect, a full choral service was performed, with Tallis's responses. The anthem was the 122nd Psalm, which has been used in the Church ever since the days of Laud. After the Litany had been intoned by the Rev. Dr. Todd, the Archdeacon of Dublin, "Lo, children and heirs," from "The Messiah," was given with great skill. The Communion service was performed by the Lord Primate, and the Rev. Dr. Graves, in D; who sang in admirable style by the choir. The Gospel having been read by the Lord Primate, the Nicene Creed (Rogers, in D) was sung. The Archbishop of Dublin preached a sermon, in the course of which he made an allusion to Mr. Guinness's good work, which we have already quoted. At the conclusion of the sermon the 100th Psalm was given splendidly by the full choir, with organ accompaniment. The offertory anthem was then intoned, each clergyman in a voluntary on the organ, concluding with the sentence (sung by the choir) "God is not unrighteous that He will forget your works and labours that proceedeth of love." (Hedbeud). Jackson's "Te Deum" in A was then performed in harmonies, followed by Dr. Rogers's "Te Sanctus," sung finely by the choir. The Lord Primate pronounced the benediction, which Kendrick harmonised by Goss. Equally crowded was the building in the afternoon, when the Lord Primate and the Archbishop of Dublin, after the sermon, was sung the anthem "God is gone up" (Croft), which terminated the ceremonials of the day.

The King has left Milan for Florence.

The Chamber of Deputies has begun the discussion of the proposal to abolish capital punishment. The Minister of Justice declared himself in favour of the abolition in principle; but he did not think the present condition of public safety allowed of an immediate abolition.

The Minister of Finance sent a letter, last week, to the chairman of the Finance Committee of the Reichsrath, in which he offered, on the part of the Government, to increase the budget for 1865 by 20,000,000 florins (£2,000,000) on condition that the Government should, during the present session of the Reichsrath, be allowed to employ the sum for one department of the public service in any other branches of the Administration. On Wednesday last the session of the military budget was concluded, and the reduction of 20,000,000 florins was carried by a majority of 15 votes. The sentences positively that the state of siege in Cattlin will be raised on the 1st of April.

PRUSSIA.

The Crown Prince and Crown Princess, with their youngest child, left Berlin on Wednesday week for Stettin, where they will reside during their visit.

The Chamber of Deputies have a new ground of complaint against the Government. The Landrath (or Prefect) of the historic district of Jylen lately issued a circular requiring a Government candidate, and after the French fashion, on the elections. This was complained of in the Chamber; but the Minister of the Interior, so far from disclaiming the act of the Landrath, highly commended it, and expressed a hope that all officers would follow his example and themselves take part in the same cause. Great indignation was felt at this declaration.

The new Governor of the Duchies, addressed to the Provincials in reference to the duchies has arrived in Berlin, and remove alleges that it is entirely unfavourable to the Germans set up by Prussia.

RUSSIA.

A St. Petersburg telegram says the assembly of the nobles of the Government of Pultowa has unanimously passed resolutions similar to those agreed to at Moscow. A deputation was appointed to ask the Emperor to convoke the States-General.

The difficulty between the Porte and Persia is becoming serious.

Advices from Candia to the 21st ult., in which, it is said, 400 lives were lost.

AMERICA.

We have news from New York to the 22nd ult., at which time gold was quoted at 171.

Charleston, the capital of South Carolina, has been surrendered. We were able to announce the capture of a portion of our Impression last week. This city, the most important of the ports next to New Orleans of the Southern seaports, where the first shot of the war was fired, and which for nearly four years was the stronghold of the power of the Southern army, assisted by a considerable land force, is now garrisoned by Federal troops. Charleston was evacuated by the Confederates on the night of the 17th and occupied by the Federals on the morning of the 18th ult.

In April, 1861, Fort Sumter, at that time occupied by a Federal garrison, was besieged by the people of Charleston, and compelled after a bombardment of some hours, but which occasioned no loss of life. Fort Sumter, on the 14th of February, 1865, the flag of the United States never waved either on that fort or in the town. Situated in the centre of the harbour, and partly by a desire to gain one of the principal Confederate strongholds, the North opened no efforts to gain possession of Charleston. Expedition after expedition was organised by the Federals, the object, invariably both expressly to run the gauntlet of the fire from the forts by which the entrance to the harbour is defended, and to land troops and men inverted and new engines of destruction designed for the special purpose of carrying fire on the city which had so provoked the Federal wrath. But ironclads, Parrott guns, and Greek fire were alike useless. They failed to reduce the defences, and the Federals entered the town of Fort Sumter, and the besieging army was passively encamped about its instrumentality. Charleston was abandoned because the successes of a General who had never appeared before it were rendering the siege necessary, and the ironclads entered its harbour and a few days after the Federal troops in streets without firing a shot.

On the 15th ult. Sherman appeared before Columbia, and, having forded the town from the south side of the river on which it stands, commenced the work of active struggle. On the following day the outposts of the Federal army reached the Kingsville Junction, twenty miles northward of Columbia, and thus severed the connection of the railroads communicating with the eastern portions of South Carolina.

Intelligence of these events having been transmitted to Charleston, the evacuation of that town was effected on the night of the 17th ult., and on the following morning the Federal troops entered without opposition. The garrison, to the number of two hundred, with which the fortifications were armed, fell into the hands of the Federals, after, however, having been spiked, and a considerable quantity of ammunition, and some piece of war. The retreating Confederates, however, left as little for the enemy as they could possibly help. Large stores of cotton, tobacco, provisions, and ammunition depots, blew up their ironclads and other vessels in the backyards, and destroyed the railway bridges leading from the town. The upper portion of the city was also intentionally, or accidentally, set on flames, and 6000 bales of cotton are supposed to have been burnt. The Confederate forces had quitted the city before the besiegers entered, and no attempt was made to molest them in their retreat. The motives which led to the abandonment of Charleston are manifest. Cut off from the rest of the Confederacy, its capture became inevitable, and its abandonment furnished the only way by which the army to which the defence was intrusted could be saved from destruction. The Confederates, after leaving the city, encamped in a north-westerly direction.

Abandon Sherman has probably his advantage in the centre of South Carolina. Beauregard, on leaving Columbia, retreated rapidly towards Charlotte, a railway centre in North Carolina, about eighty-five miles nearly due north of Columbia. Sherman's column lost no time in following the Confederates up, and at last accounts was thirty miles north of Columbia.

At Wilmington, too, the Federals have been successful. On the 19th of February General Schofield, assisted by Admiral Porter, assaulted and carried Fort Anderson, the garrison making good their retreat. The fall of Wilmington, we are told, appeared certain.

From Newbern and various other points strong forces have started to operate on the railways, and in Western Virginia another raid was preparing. In Alabama General Thomas was, it is said, making arrangements to prevent Hood's army from going to the Carolinas. Some 10,000 men have, however, left to reinforce Beauregard.

No active movements had taken place before Petersburg, but a strong impression prevailed that Lee would evacuate that place and fall back to Lynchburg, where he would be joined by Beauregard and such other Confederate forces as could make their way to him.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA.

The Upper House of the Canadian Parliament has voted, by forty-five to fifteen, in favour of the confederation scheme. An address will be presented to the Queen based upon the resolutions of the Conference.

The Legislative Assembly, while in Committee of Supply, voted, without a division, 50,000 dols. for the purpose of reimbursing the St. Albans banks for the losses they sustained by the Confederate raiders.

CHURCH AND UNIVERSITIES.

S. Scott, Esq., of Sundridge Park, Bromley, and Cavendish-square, has sent £500 for the schools being built for the parish of St. Mary, Plaistow, Kent.

On Tuesday, the 21st ult., the village church of Prestbury, near Cheltenham, beautifully situated under the Cotswold Hills, was re-opened by the Bishop of the diocese.

The professorship of mathematics in Queen's College, Cork, vacant by Professor Boole's death, has been conferred on a Cambridge Senior Wrangler, Mr. R. Romer, of Trinity Hall.

The Prince of Wales has contributed £25 towards the erection of the new buildings of the Cambridge Union Society. In addition to the Chancellor's subscription of £100, the High Steward, Lord Powys, has given £100. The subscription already amounts to over £2500.

The suit instituted by the Bishop of Norwich against the Rector of Claydon for officiating at Brother Ignatius's monastery—an unlicensed and unconsecrated place—terminated in the Court of Arches on Monday. The rev. defendant was condemned in costs, and admonished not to repeat the offence.

A committee, consisting of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Archbishop of York, Lord Brougham, the Duke of Argyll, the Lord Advocate, M.P.; Sir D. Brewster, and other gentlemen, has been formed for the purpose of erecting a memorial to the late Sir William Hamilton, Bart. The intention is to found in the University of Edinburgh a philosophical fellowship bearing his name. The late Baronet was professor of logic and metaphysics in that university.

The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol has announced his intention of holding a general ordination in the cathedral church of Gloucester on Sunday next. On the same day the Archbishop of Canterbury will hold an ordination at Croydon; the Bishop of Chester, at Chester; the Bishop of Ripon, at Ripon; the Bishop of Oxford, at Cuddesdon; the Bishop of Worcester, at Worcester; and the Bishop of St. David's, at Abergwili Church, near Carmarthen.

The special Sunday services, which by command of her Majesty are celebrated during Lent every year in the Chapels Royal, began on Sunday. At the Chapel Royal, St. James's, the sermon at the twelve o'clock service was preached by Dr. Ellicott, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. At the Chapel Royal, Whitehall, the sermon in the morning was preached by the Very Rev. Dr. Hook, Dean of Chichester; and in the afternoon, by his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England. The Bishop of London (as Dean of the Chapels Royal) will preach the sermon in the Chapel Royal, Whitehall, on Sunday afternoon next (to-morrow); and the Bishop of Ely on Sunday afternoon, the 19th inst. The Very Rev. Dr. Stanley, Dean of Westminster, will preach there to-morrow morning.

A meeting was held at Lambeth Palace on Tuesday—the Bishop of Winchester in the chair—to concert measures for the increase of church accommodation in the diocese, more especially in the three rural deaneries of Southwark, Lambeth, and Streatham. The Bishop stated the amount of church extension that had taken place since his accession to the see, and the need there was for still greater extension. He pointed out the rapid increase in the population, and the want of wealthy residents among them, showing the need of help from the outer districts. The meeting was also addressed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, Mr. Cubitt, M.P., the Hon. Mr. Broderick, and others. The Rev. Mr. Lingham read a list of subscriptions, at the head of which stood the name of the Bishop of Winchester for £2000, in addition to which his Lordship had given, during the last three years, £13,200 for increasing the endowments of poor benefices in his diocese, especially in the metropolitan portion of it, besides an annuity of £3200 a year for the period of his life for the same object. Amongst the other names on the list were the Archbishop of Canterbury for £100 annually; Messrs. Barclay, Perkins, and Co., £1500; Mr. C. Bevan, of the same firm, £300; Mr. P. Cazenove, £500; Mr. Cubitt, M.P., £500; Mr. H. W. Peck, £525; Messrs. Polt, of Southwark, £300; Mr. Tilson, £300; Mr. Scovill, of Southwark, £100; Messrs. Eastwood, £200; Messrs. Easton, £100; Mr. C. Few, £100; Mr. J. H. Foster, £100; and Mr. T. Grissell, £100. The total subscription was stated at nearly £9000.

PERCENTAGES TO SERVANTS.—A "West-End Firm" writes to the Times that the publication of the letter from the Duke of Sutherland on the subject of percentages to servants has already begun to bear fruit; and they inclose for publication a letter they have just received from his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, which they have permission to publish:—

"Marlborough House, Pall-mall, Feb. 11.

"Gentlemen,—The Prince of Wales having understood that a practice prevails of tradesmen offering to servants a percentage on the amount of their bills, and concluding that every tradesman would lend his co-operation in putting down a practice dishonest in itself, and equally prejudicial to the interests of his employer and himself, has desired me to inform you that he has directed me to discharge from his service every servant who may receive, and to cease employing every tradesman who may pay, such a percentage, or who may make a present of any kind in consideration of his Royal Highness's custom.

"I am, your obedient Servant, W. KNOLLYS."

Some conscience-stricken servant has sent £5 to the Duke of Sutherland, "returned percentage money."

Mr. Somerset Beaumont, M.P., has been placed on the International Commission to proceed to Vienna to inquire into the commercial relations between Great Britain and Austria.

The Queen has appointed Augustus Henry Mounsey and Richard Temple Godman Kirkpatrick, Esqs., Third Secretaries, to be Second Secretaries in her Majesty's Diplomatic Service.

The King of Bavaria has sent to Baron Liebig an autograph letter, in which his Majesty thanks the Baron for declining, in the most self-sacrificing manner, an invitation to accept a position offered him at the Berlin University. Accompanying the letter is the Cross of Commander in the Order of Merit of Holy St. Michael.

In Jamaica, and indeed in most of the West India Islands, cotton is being grown to a considerable extent. The quality is equal to the ordinary American and Egyptian, and last year's crop was sold for 3s. 6d. and 4s. per lb. It is satisfactory to find that there is no lack of labourers, who are willing to work for less than it would cost to purchase and maintain slaves.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The post of Constable of the Tower of London, vacant by the death of Viscount Combermere, is not to be refilled.

Lord Enfield, M.P., is announced to preside at the anniversary festival of the British Orphan Asylum, to be held on the 25th of April.

The new building of the Sailors' Home, Well-street, London Docks, is to be opened, shortly after Easter, by the Prince of Wales.

The performances at the Bijou Theatre in aid of King's College Hospital have produced a contribution of £130 to its funds.

The tramways which have hitherto occupied the centre of the road of the new Westminster Bridge are being removed, to be reconstructed on each side the road, near the footways.

The Secretary of the Royal Academy has given the usual notice that pictures and sculpture for exhibition must be sent in by Tuesday, the 4th of April.

The Prince of Wales has accepted the invitation of the Metropolitan Board to open the main drainage works, and Tuesday, the 4th of April, is appointed for the ceremony.

A lady, who declines to give any name, has paid into the hands of Mr. Edward Masterman, treasurer to the Royal Free Hospital, Gray's-inn-road, £1000 towards the funds of that charity.

At the evening meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, on Monday next—Sir R. I. Murchison, K.C.B., president, in the chair—papers will be read "On Stereoscopic Maps, taken from Models of Mountainous Countries," by F. Galton, Esq., F.R.S.; and "On the Gradual Desiccation of South-Western Africa," by James Fox Wilson, Esq.

The Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress (Miss Hale) entertained, on Tuesday, the Aldermen, Deputies, and Common Councilmen for the wards of Aldersgate, Aldgate, Bassishaw, Billingsgate, Bishopsgate, Broad-street, Bread-street, Candlewick, Castle Baynard, Cheap, Coleman-street, and Cordwainers at dinner at the Mansion House, which was served in the Egyptian Hall. The invited guests were about 200 in number.

The first rehearsal for the choral meeting of 5000 voices, to be held at the Crystal Palace on the 10th of May next, under the direction of Mr. G. W. Martin, was held at Exeter Hall on Saturday last. There was a full attendance, representatives from upwards of 130 schools being present, the whole of the anthems, choruses, and part-songs practised being taken with great spirit.

Conductor Cotterell, of the Royal Society for the Protection of Life from Fire, was yesterday week presented with a silver medal, bearing the following inscription:—"Presented by the inhabitants of Westminster to James Cotterell, conductor of the Horseferry-road fire-escape, for his great exertions in rescuing 173 persons from the school-room in Great Peter-street, Westminster, at the accident which occurred on January the 26th, 1865."

A testimonial was presented on Monday evening to Sir Rowland Hill, at his residence, Hampstead, by a deputation from Liverpool. It consisted of three pictures, selected by Sir Rowland Hill himself. They were "Sunset at Venice" (Cocke), "The Bass Rock" (Stanfield), and "The Hunt of the Deer" (Creswick). In the earlier portion of the evening Sir Rowland entertained the deputation (Messrs. Rathbone, C. E. Rawlings, and Livingstone) and a number of other gentlemen at dinner.

The great body of Wesleyan Methodists have to lament the death of their president, the Rev. William Thornton, at his residence, London. On Sunday morning he rose, in his usual health. About ten o'clock he expressed a hope that he should spend a happy Sabbath; but in less than an hour he was dead. The rev. gentleman had been for many years editor of the Wesleyan Methodist publications, and occasionally officiated in most of the principal chapels in London.

The annual general meeting of the Royal Literary Fund took place on Wednesday, at the society's offices, Adelphi-terrace. During the past year there had been forty-eight grants, amounting in the whole to £1490. Six of these were £10 grants, four grants of £15, eight of £20, eight of £25, seven of £30, six of £40, six of £50, one of £60, and two of £100 each. The Archbishop of York will preside at the annual dinner, which is fixed to take place on the 10th of May next, at the Albion.

The fifty-second anniversary festival of the London Orphan Asylum, Clapton, was held at the London Tavern yesterday se'nnight—Sir Fitzroy Kelly, M.P., in the chair. Since the general meeting of 1864, seventy children have left the asylum, two have died, ninety-two have been admitted—viz., five by purchase, one under the Partis presentations, one under that of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and eighty-five by election. At the present time there are 479 children under the protection of the charity. The subscriptions amounted to about £1500.

The births of 2242 children—1125 boys and 1117 girls—were registered last week in London. In the corresponding week of ten years, 1855-64 the average number, with a correction for increase of population, was 2115.——The deaths in London, returned for the week, were 1482, against a corrected average (for the ninth week of the year) of 1489. Eighty-one deaths were referred to whooping-cough and sixty-seven to typhus. Bronchitis continues to decline. In the week that ended Feb. 4 it rose to 339 fatal cases; in that which ended March 4 the number was 206. Seven persons died at the age of ninety years and upwards. The oldest was ninety-six years of age, and was a pensioner of Greenwich Hospital. A horse-keeper died of glanders, after nine weeks' illness, in King's College Hospital.

The anniversary dinner of the supporters of the Royal Hospital for Incurables was held on Tuesday night at the London Tavern—Mr. Göschen, M.P., in the chair—when about 150 ladies and gentlemen sat down to dinner. The secretary, previous to reading the list of subscriptions, announced that an old friend of the institution, Mr. Hath, having announced his intention of giving £100 towards the building-fund, on the condition that nine other governors would subscribe the same, that amount had been subscribed, and that, in addition, £400 had been collected in contributions of £100 each, on the condition that the residue should be made up to £500 by the 8th of March, and he ardently hoped that the remaining £100 would be subscribed that evening. He then read the list of contributions, amounting in the whole to upwards of £4000. The secretary, thanks to the kindness of Mr. J. Figgins, was able to state in the course of the evening that the additional £100 had been contributed.

A lecture on the subject of "Early Breech-loaders" was delivered at the United Service Institution, on Monday evening, by Mr. John Latham. The lecturer has been long engaged examining and studying the various applications of the principle of breech-loading, both foreign and British, and especially those found in the arms preserved in the museums of Woolwich and the Tower; and the results of his researches are not a little curious and important when it is a pressing question which is the best form of breech-loading for the British Army. Mr. Latham began by showing that breech-loading, so far from being, as popularly supposed, a modern invention, is in reality of great antiquity; and that the earliest breech-loaders, instead of being, as has been stated, of French, are of English origin. He then traced the successive stages of the invention from the time of Edward III. down to the introduction of the present system for sporting arms. By means of lucid description and a series of admirable drawings, it was proved that every modern system of breech-loading, even that by Sir William Armstrong, and the extension of the principle to revolvers, and for which numerous patents have been obtained, have had earlier prototypes; and, more than this, that it is very possible that at least one of the old mechanical contrivances may, owing to recent improvements in ammunition, be found more advantageous than any yet proposed for adoption. This lecture is to be published, with others by the same gentleman, in the Journal of the institution.

The annual general meeting and election of the Printers' Pension Society was held on Monday at the London Tavern—Mr. W. Clowes in the chair. The report stated that the society in all its branches had greatly progressed during the past year. Hitherto the society had not been able to receive gifts of real property, but a Royal charter of incorporation had now been obtained, and the committee recommended an amalgamation of the Printers' Almshouse Fund with the Pension Society, in order that the former might share in the advantages of the charter. The proceeds of the last anniversary dinner, under the presidency of Mr. Charles Dickens, had been £543. The annual subscriptions had amounted to £659, and the life subscriptions to £781, both showing a large increase on the two preceding years. The total receipts during the year had been £1894, and the expenditure £1826. The amount paid to pensioners during the year had been £881. The amount of funded property belonging to the society was £11,549. The number of pensioners now on the fund was seventy-two, of whom forty-seven were widows, and the number benefited by the society since its establishment was 267. A resolution was adopted authorising the committee to take the necessary steps for amalgamating the Almshouse Fund with the Pension Society. There were eight pensioners to be elected from a list of thirty-one candidates—eleven males and twenty females.

LAW AND POLICE.—Lord Chelmsford delivered, in the House of Lords, on Wednesday, an important judgment, arising out of a salvage case, in connection with the shipwreck of the Fusilier. By his Lordship's judgment it is settled that the salvors of human life from a wreck are entitled to reward as well as the salvors of property, and that the owners of cargo are bound to pay the rateable proportion of the reward claimed for saving the passengers and crew.

The King of Sweden is stated to have invited the Prince of Wales and Prince Napoleon to visit the great encampment of the Swedish and Norwegian troops, which is to be formed at the latter end of the summer.

A supplementary estimate in the civil services issued on Monday presents an item of £175,650 required to defray the second moiety of the charge payable by Great Britain for the redemption of the Scheldt toll.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

WITH the collapse of the Alexandra Park Meeting, of course from "circumstances entirely beyond the control" of the directors, West Drayton has suddenly sprung into being, with £600 added for its two days. Fordham won five races for Mr. Ten Broeck, and picked his ground well in the heavy parts of the course. Balder, who was supposed to have gone for a line for Emblematic, gave 10 lb. to the winner, Merrimac by Stockwell, and was second; old Bridegroom a bad third. L'Africain was, as the Brothers Davenport observe of themselves, "the passive instrument of some most astounding phenomena." He opened at 5 to 1 in the betting, and suddenly fell back to 20 to 1, no takers. At the end of half a mile he had such a lead that it seemed impossible to catch him; he then refused a fence, and then he went the wrong side of a flag; and everybody said he was very dangerous for Liverpool. Grand Falconer, the first of the St. Albans stock, came out at Lincoln, but did not run forward. He was bought for 220 gs. at the last Royal sale.

Mr. Samuel Sheward, sen., one of the celebrated old London horse-dealers, died last week, in his seventy-second year. He lived in Green-street; and he was not long in following his friend Mr. Anderson. He was what is called a good "nagsman" rather than a hunting dealer. In fact, he never went with hounds, but merely rode his horses in the park or drove them in his break, at which he was a great adept. His business was a very quiet, respectable one in riding and carriage horses. With the trade he did very little, but he had some very good names of noblemen and others on his books, which were found there year after year.

The Duke of Beaufort's have had very fine sport this season, and hunted 119 days, besides being stopped for twenty-nine by frost. On the whole, they have only had four bad days, and killed 65½ brace of foxes, and run 20½ brace to ground. Of the foxes whose sex they have been able to ascertain, thirty-nine brace were dogs and 18½ brace vixens. There seems a strong probability that, if a reasonable sum be collected, Mr. Morris will keep on the hounds, engage a huntsman, and establish kennels in a more central part of the county. To the shame of the once great Shropshire—the county of Mr. Corbet, Tom Moody, and Trojan, as well as of Sir Bellingham Graham and Will Staples—be it spoken, they have been giving their master £300 a year—scarcely enough, as the Hon. R. C. Hill said, "to feed half the hounds." Already £700 a year is promised, and the hounds are withdrawn from sale.

It is stated that the winner of the Waterloo Cup belongs to Mr. Robert Graham, of Abbot's Lodge, Penrith. Cumberland, which also ran up with Judge and Sunbeam, has thus, like its neighbouring county of Dumfriesshire, taken the cup three times—viz., with Judge, Maid of the Mill, and Meg. The cup was established in 1836, and Metaine, Fly, Bugle, Empress, Earwig, Bloomsbury, Priam, Major, Speculation, Titania, Harlequin, Senate, Shade, Magician, Cerito, Hughie Graham, Cerito, Cerito, Sackcloth, Judge, Protest, King Lear, Nevile, Clive and Selby (divided), Maid of the Mill, Canaradzo, Roaring Meg, Chloe, King Death, and Meg have been the winners. Scarcely any of the Waterloo dogs went to Ashdown, except Jacob, St. George, Henchman, and Don Felix; and the former, which was lent by Mr. J. Jardine to the Ladies Craven, divided the Craven Cup with Scylla by Sea Foam. Old Rebe fell back on her county, and beat Deodora in the run up for the Holme Lacy Stakes at the Hereford meeting. The Scottish National, at which we trust to meet Calabaroono again, promises to have a fine entry; but we regret to hear that Mr. Bowles has resigned the secretaryship at Ashdown.

The first day at Liverpool brought out Stanton again in such form over the hurdles that at night he had the call of everything, bar Emblematic, for the steeplechase. Chapel Royal, the Nottingham winner, gave 10lb. to Proserpine (a 260-guinea purchase at Mr. Blenkiron's sale), but wholly failed in his effort to cut her down. Wandering Minstrel and Nu made a fine struggle for the cup, and the general impression was that Carroll outrode "Jemmy" Grimshaw. Short races—where, as the other jockeys say, "he claps the spurs into his horse at the post, and then we never see him no more"—are the latter's especial forte.

Wednesday was very fine, but cold. The grass ground was beautiful going, but the backers of the heavy weights looked with dismay at the amount of plough, especially in the long stretch by the canal-side, which had the most awkward fence of the day. The Grand Stand was so crowded that people were fain to mount the top of the verandah; and it is said that Mr. Topham never took so much money before. Twenty-three went to the post for the great race, but Acrobat was unfortunately left there in a fit of kicking. Lord Coventry declared to win with Emblematic, and she and her own sister, Emblem, both chestnuts by Teddington and winners of this race in 1863-64, created great interest as they were led round the inclosure. Emblem was one of the first over the water-jump, which was taken without a mistake; and Emblematic, who got off about twentieth, was seventh or eighth, and fit to pull George Stevens out of his saddle. However, the weight had quite settled her chance when they were fairly in the straight; and Alcibiade, 11 st. 4 lb. (Mr. Coventry), and Hall Court, 11 st. (Captain Tempest), had the finish to themselves, Alcibiade, the property of Mr. Angell, a great supporter of steeplechasing, just winning by a short head. Emblematic was third, beaten nine or ten lengths, and then came a loose horse. Captain Tempest seemed very much exhausted at last, or it is quite on the cards that he might have pulled through a winner. Joe Maley, Stanton, and Arbury all had tumbles. The winner started at sixteen to one, and a very large stake was won on him. The Great National at Wetherby has closed with 112 subscribers, of which fifty-nine do not name.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, MARCH 11, 1865.

WHEN a statesman writes a book he is, in his capacity of author, entitled to the same justice that would be done to any other writer, and to neither less nor more. We are not bound to feel thankful to a man who has snatched time for literature, though his dire avocations are numerous; nor have we a right to assail a great man because he has not written a great book. This is matter of course. But there may be another question. If the eminent politician has merely amused his leisure or indulged his taste by the composition of such a work, our criticism must be for the book, not for him. But if, on the other hand, he stands forth as the literary champion of a cause which he professes elsewhere as the principle of part of a Government, we have then a right to regard his book as a portion only of his labours in a given direction, and we may give a more general judgment. The two cases have been recently illustrated. Lord Derby, on the part of the Conservative party, has translated the "Iliad," and, as all critics have allowed, has done so in an admirable manner. But he has not sent out Homerion as a doctrine or as the policy which he would pursue. We do not suppose that, if a young nobleman of France had been so vicious and ungrateful as to elope with the wife of a young nobleman of England, Lord Derby would advise the latter to unite with a number of other nobles, and for France and besiege the modern "Helen" in her chateau, and stand by while one of the party, having killed the Lothario's brother, should drag him round and round the family residence at the rear of a cabriolet. But the Emperor of the French has published a treatment of a "Life of Julius Cæsar," and his Majesty has sent out Imperialism as a doctrine, and as the policy which he considers has benefited the human race, and which he is pursuing and has pursued for the last eight years. As it is manifest, therefore, that while in Lord Derby's case we have only to do with Mr. Murray's handsome volumes, in the Emperor's we are bound to deal with the occupant of the Tuileries. His Imperial Majesty has chosen to be so treated in honourable to himself, but it is also a proof that he is a man of larger mind, in certain respects, than his relative, whom he entertains and honours in the modern standard. Had the first Napoleon been able to write such a book, or even to spell a paragraph of it correctly, he would have said to the world "Bow down!" and it would have been unwise for any one—except perhaps a Russian Czar—to have refused to submit to signify either lack of admiration for the work or an inclination to illustrate it from the history of its author.

It is not within the limits of a single article that the character of an absolute leader like that of the Emperor can be considered and discussed; nor is it our intention, in this place, to discharge the critical function. But the political leaning of the work can be promptly recognised: and it is due to Europe that the writer of it should be made aware of what is understood by Imperialism; to England, who has poured out her blood and her treasure in deadly resistance to the dogma that might makes right; to England, at whom the stern character of an absolute leader like that of the Emperor inspired benefactors of mankind is chiefly levelled by the Imperial Pistarch, that her writers should be as frank as possible, though not uncourteous, in meeting the Emperor's ideas. We meet them on the ground that he has chosen for his uncle. We answer the Emperor of the French by assuming him that the public mind of England accepts neither of his propositions, Julius Cæsar was not like Napoleon Bonaparte; and Imperialism is a paying vehicle which, as freemen and as Christians, we condemn.

While awaiting the more elaborate confutations which are doubtless in preparation for the demolition of the parallel between Cæsar and the first Napoleon, we may point out one of the most distinguished members of the University of Oxford with a brief but masterly summary of the case; and few will hesitate to accept a pronouncement bearing the signature of Thomas Hegert. In a letter to a contemporary, he remarks some, and probably informs a far larger number, that Cæsar was a nobleman of Rome, Napoleon a foreign plebeian adventurer. Cæsar was, and Napoleon never was, a statesman. Cæsar was a social and economical reformer; Napoleon violated all rules of economical policy. "Cæsar was liberal, popular, forgiving, generous, easy, affable; Napoleon surrounded himself with a gorgeous ceremonial and with a despotic etiquette, and was neither forgiving, generous, nor affable, but revengeful and often brutal, we may add. "Cæsar never meditated hereditary royalty." His associates "were men of letters and refinement; Napoleon's were sole soldiers of fortune and sycophants." The Roman aristocracy, against whom Cæsar made war, and who murdered him, were depraved monsters, "under whom lay a world of wickedness and despair." The France against which Napoleon made war was nothing like this. Cæsar defeated the enemies of the state, and sought to fuse parties, reprople the country, and promote peace and prosperity. Napoleon "sought to lull him into unceasing onslaughts upon distant States, into destroying two generations of Frenchmen by his conscriptions, and into a revolutionary misplenary jam which furnished more than an excuse for the existentative vengeance of his enemies. Such, in less effective language than that of the eminent writer to whom we now owe credit, is a summary of the wild parallel sought to be set up. Let these who have read it examine their histories and fill up the outlines.

But, supposing that the parallel held—or at least that we could bring ourselves to believe that Julius Cæsar had been a prototype of the first Napoleon—we are not a whit more inclined to admire the policy of the Emperor of the French. Let us concede that Cæsar was as bad a man as Napoleon. We utterly deny that such, or anything like it, was the case; but grant it to be full. And we know what Imperialism was, as practised by Napoleon; and, if it had all the precedents in the world to justify it, we regard it as a base and brutal idea. It was the doctrine of irresponsible force, which employed murder upon the largest scale. This was Imperialism as it affected ourselves and the world outside France; what it meant inside France let French historians testify. The spy; the censor, the policeman—these were the First Napoleon's prime agents for governing one of the noblest and most refined nations of the world. England stood out nearly alone against this type of civilisation until Europe, shamed by incessant outrage on humanity, gathered round her, and Imperialism died out, scolding, on a rock in the Atlantic. We are in no danger of the Emperor. We might respectfully add that it is saddening to find a Sovereign of his abilities and experience, a Sovereign who has shown himself splendidly superior to the temptations which were fatal to the vulgar mind of his ancestor, bringing his powerful intellect and fascinating style to the championship of a false cause and the exaltation of a false god. We know this, however, that the Emperor Louis Napoleon is far better than the cruel and sullen Corsican whose himself is based, and we can bear with his theories while we see him devoting his practice to the promotion of economy, enlightenment, and peace.

THE COURT.

THE Queen, with the junior members of the Royal family, continues at Windsor Castle, in good health.

On Thursday week her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Helena, walked and drove in the castle grounds. Later in the day her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Louise, and attended by Lady Augusta Stanley, drove to the deanery, and proceeded thence to the Albert Memorial Chapel, for the purpose of opening the glass mosaic work which has been placed in the chapel by Dr. Salviati. The Queen was received by the Very Rev. the Dean of Windsor. Mr. Salviati, the architect, Baron Trequili, and Dr. Salviati, had the honour of being presented to her Majesty. The mosaic work in the east wall of the chapel has been filled with a full-length figure of Henry III., executed in the same manner as a picture by Raphael, Giotto and Bell. The object of her Majesty's visit was to examine the effect of the mosaic-work as to its being appropriate for the historical decoration of the chapel. As the Queen entered her carriage to leave the work to Dr. Salviati, who will now proceed to fill the remaining twenty-seven panels with figures of the Plantagenet and Tudor periods as imperishable mosaics. Her Majesty left the deanery after the inspection, at five o'clock, and returned to the castle.

Yesterday week the Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, walked in the grounds. Her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Louise, and attended by Lady Augusta Stanley, drove out. Princess Helena and Princess Louise rode out. Princess Beatrice walked in the castle grounds. Countess Blatchee arrived at the castle. Lord Alfred Paget and Mr. Abbiss arrived at the castle, and had the honour of dining with her Majesty.

On Sunday the Queen, Princess Helena, Princess Louise, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold attended Divine service in the private chapel of the castle. The Very Rev. the Dean of Westminster officiated. In the afternoon the Duchess of Cambridge and Princess Mary visited the castle.

On Monday the Queen, attended by the Duchess of Roxburghe, drove out. Princess Helena and Princess Louise rode in the Home Park. Princess Louise de Joinville and the Duke and Duchess de Nemours visited her Majesty, and remained to luncheon. Countess Blatchee left the castle.

On Tuesday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena, walked and drove in the grounds. Prince Leopold, attended by Mr. Bell, drove out. Princess Helena, attended by Lady Caroline Barrington, the Hon. Flora Macdonald, and Mr. Bell, rode in the Home Park, went to London and honoured the Haymarket Theatre with her presence, returning to the castle at Seven. Prince and Princess of Wales and Prince Albert Victor, attended by the Hon. Mrs. Brand, Lord Harris, and Lieutenant-Colonel Keppel, arrived at the castle on a visit to her Majesty.

On Wednesday the Queen, attended by the Duchess of Roxburghe drove out. Princess Helena rode in the Home Park. Princess Louise attended by the Hon. Flora Macdonald, took a drive. The Prince of Wales, attended by Prince Albert Victor left the castle.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

Love ist il Sognare Due Bustle? Where is the old calumniator of the "Feather"? I need his advice. I want to know if, for once in a while, I may talk a little scandal, relish a little malevolent detraction, affiliate myself to the honourable society of gossips, and let my tongue run with a certain degree of freedom. I don't, be certain, like the occasion. These "Echoes" are not political. I have no wish to say anything about Lord Chancellor Lo Lordship, or his son-in-law, or unlucky Mr. Edmunds or his pension. It is only about the Garrick Club.

No; on second thoughts, I will abjure the temptation. I will not take up the line of the many who, in the Garrick, are scandal-mongers. Let this, therefore, suffice —There has been a committee of gentlemen in Garrick-street, the new thoroughfare where the Garrickites have just been established, to consider the "Feather" question. The matter has been blackballing somebody. Two other eminent somebodies, his copper and red-hot predecessors, have been blackballed in their day, thinking better of it, went back, even as the King of France, with forty thousand men, marched up the hill and then down again. Once again. This is as much concerning the Garrick Club as need be told; and briefly, the committee reported that the "Feather" should be blackballed, nobody.

The Daily Mail Gazette (which, by-the-way, has become a "Morning Devoe" as well as an "Evening Newspaper") last recently, and prospers in the Dundee, a commercial paper of very sensible and careful article on the philosophy of blackballing. "Many persons," it said, "regard blackballing with the most lively horror as a root of capital punishment; and the latter principle have to do with it, but it is not punishment in their sense of what, to them, bears the aspect of social slaughter. By many, however, who has moved much in Club circles, the blackballing feeling in him, and who knows how the little black pills come to be administered, it is not looked on as a thing of such awful and supreme importance to the economy of blackballing." Now, here is the whole miserable affair in a nutshell. Blackballing is the one to such human, after all. I never was blackballed myself; but, to use the term being in the classical sense of rejection of one's self, "who can say as has?" and I have been assured by them that it did not hurt more than a needle; a needle with fewer out of one's gum by the new process. A man may be blackballed, but he does not die. Only the clear-sighted writer in the Daily Mail has taken note of the fact that the "Feather" is the only publication of the "little black pills." Excuse the paradox, but there are no such things as black balls; they are white balls that are black in the Garrick. Theoretically, they no as black as your hat; practically they are as white as snow. The "Feather" is the only one that does not swallow bait. It is simply as they are popped into the "Yes" or the "No" receptacles. Some of the members of the Garrick Committee are white or black balls. And in some small chick the ball is a bean.

Now, for the mystery of the committee-room in the above remarks? Can I be indicted in any court for scandal and malice? Yes! I should not the original MS. of these Echoes. It is one mass of erasures and confusion, and is full of words and sentences out of other folks' cards. Writing this column is like pulling rats out of a bag. If you have a dozen rats in a bag, they will not be able to get through and through. I have even been told that to imbue even the humblest paragraph with a proper degree of spirit, it is best to abrogate from the dignity of letters and to belong to the "new type of journalism." I have been recommended, even, to forget how that the late William Makepeace Thackeray once wrote literary and critical essays in a style of which, if I remember right, one of the conventions is the "Nocten" and the synposta of "Oliver Yock" is Argent Sol. "Excuse me an extended, and sometimes not very sensible, scale. And the "Feather" is the only "Feather" that does so. Again, there is no country where literature is more honoured, and less illiterate, than in the country of the Celt. There will be often in their lively feuilletons such men as Sainte Beuve, Jules Janin, Théophile Gautier, Paul de Kock, Alexandre Dumas, and Eugène Sue, in the Athens. Emile de Girardin was for a long period the gossip purveyor to La Presse, and Dr. Véron was the first to have recommended to make the fortune of L'Independence Belge. The fact is that my style is not exactly the style of the day. I am told that I am too much of a makeweight, you may make out that it is derogatory to write epic verse or Sir Walter Scott.

Mr. Hepworth Dixon's forthcoming volumes on the "Holy Land" are in every way eminently expected. A new work from a brilliant and graphic writer, on accomplished subject, is always welcome to the public we rejoice ever; and Mr. Dixon is the man of letters par excellence who performs every task he undertakes. He is a "Jack of all trades," and its followers, keeping—as they say down South—"a stiff upper lip" in his profession, has successfully mastered the most formidable difficulties of the genus irritabile. I understand that the "Holy Land" will be no mere "Guide-book" to the Sacred Land, but a thorough "Jeppa" kind of book; and no mere controversial treatise. Palestine has been almost exhausted in every science. Even Dr. Robinson Six's, in the other one entitled "Through the Furnace," both taking somewhat opposite views of the subject, have not exhausted the most eminent ambitionate of the day. He would be astonished were he to "find out" the statistic of the sale of religious publications in this country and in Scotland. Their number is enormous, and every now not by the thousand but by the million. The which leads me to a point half a mile off. Why is the publication of the "Life and Letters" of the most admirable of the serious serials—to recover damages for the infringement of the copyright of the "Life and Letters" of Lord Byron by the proprietor, and he promised to forward her MS. to the Lord Chief Justice, thereby giving him an opportunity to sum up upon the "gratuitous bailee" and fixed her damages at £50. She was awarded £100. Why is the "Life and Letters" of Lord Byron a dear article to its destination, had done all that was required of him, and was not to be blamed? When I read this article a cold shudder came over me, and I felt the pangs of a guilty conscience. Is it possible that such dusty pigeonholes of my study there still lie a number of batches of "copy" written by me of them, also in the worst of hands handwriting—containing, I infer, poetry, fiction, essays, and memoranda? Yes, there they are, and there they will be, I fear, until I am edited a magazine. If I had read a tithe of the contents of these packets, I should be thought a very wise man. But I have not. By this time, in imitate of the Blind Asylum or of St. Pancras Workhouse, I should be a very wise man. Nevertheless, I am not sorry that I am denied, even in face of the most passionate entreaties, from hobnoring me with the MS. of my early poetry. I am not sorry now to find it, and don't want, they threaten legal proceedings.

Why is it that the Government should at once safes at Walton-Hampton, moved by an innocent paragraph of mine about safes and fire-proof houses, but just sent me a big box full of locks. He is great enough to find that I am not a burglar, and that I am not a thief. I have done with them I am to pass them on to somebody else. Now, what can such a house do? Mr. Mayhew means to do all the shops, and all the factories, and all the "works" of the great metropolis; to glorify retail trade, and to show that when Napoleon called us a nation of shopkeepers he paid us a very high compliment. The Shops of London promise well.
